After singing the doxology, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Kirk, and the meeting adjourned until half-past seven in the evening.

Evening Session.—An immense audience assembled in the evening, and a few moments were occupied by a prayer-meeting conducted by the Rev. Dr. Wallace, of Manchester, N. H.

The regular exercises were opened at seven o'clock, by a brief address from the Rev. Dr. Kirk. The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was then introduced to the audience and delivered a most original and able address.

Thursday Morning.—At eight o'clock Thursday morning, a large audience assembled, and a prayer-meeting was held, continuing one hour, conducted by the Rev. R. B. Stratton, of Worcester.

At nine o'clock, the Association was called to order; Vice-President Rev. William T. Eustis, of Springfield, in the chair.

The report upon the Education of the Freedmen was presented by the Rev. S. R. Dennen, of Woburn, Mass., and is as follows:

"Your committee have examined with much pleasure and profit that part of the annual report submitted to their consideration. Their approval is, therefore, more than a formal courtesy. We most heartily indorse its plans and suggestions as sound and practical, and worthy of vigorous prosecution.

"The Common Schools.—The common school is the first topic to which our attention is called. Next to consecration and cultivation of the heart, is the culture and drill of the intellect. The common school, next to the church of the Christian religion, is the ground of our stability and perpetuity as a government. But the work of supplying the necessary teachers and instruments for a common school education to the Freedmen is plainly impossible. Were the legislation and sympathies of the South all we could desire, the work is too great, complex, and sporadic. We are glad to see, therefore, that the Association works through common schools already in operation, and stimulates and directs, as far as it may prudently do so, the creation of a public sentiment in favor of still others.

"Normal and Training Schools.—These schools are of prime importance. The warm and sensuous nature of the African race needs, to steady and poise it, and make it most effective, the drill of the school. The best agents in this work are the colored people themselves. It took a half-century for the American Board to learn that native preachers and pastors, educated and trained in the mission schools and seminaries, were their best coläborers.

"We are, therefore, gratified to know that the Association thus early adopted the practice of training the colored men and women of the South to teach their own people. This Association, through their fine normal and high-schools, is furnishing the needful drill and culture to large classes of young men and women, who go out to the hungry multitude and distribute the bread of intellectual life. They are the most effective teachers; they have the readiest access to their own race, and can do a work for them no teachers sent from the North can accomplish. We most heartily indorse this feature of the Association's educational work.

"Colleges.—The same commendation belongs to its colleges. The true method is to show the colored people the possibilities of their own race, and inspire in them, by visible and living examples, a noble ambition. This, sooner than any thing else, will remove unworthy prejudices against them, and raise them to respectability and influence. We most warmly commend this whole subject of the education of the blacks to our churches. Rather, it commends itself to every patriotic and Christian mind and heart. This great people are to be lifted up and made an element of power and strength in this land, or they will become a millstone hanged about the neck of the republic. The solution of this prime question is mainly in the hands of this Association. Let it be encouraged and cheered by our churches, the whole land over. It must be a grateful surprise to the public, as it was to ourselves, to learn the extent of the society's means and instrumentalities for the prosecution of this grand and vital work. Let them be still more increased and invigorated."

Rev. Mr. Dennen followed the reading of the report by appropriate remarks, after which General O. O. Howard was introduced to the audience and delivered an address upon the subject of the report. After some remarks by the Rev.

Mr. Brewer, of Stockbridge, the Rev. George Trask, of Fitchburg, made some inquiries, which were answered by General Howard. The report was unanimously adopted.

The report upon Religious Work among the Freedmen was read by Rev. G. D. Pike:

"Your committee recognize in the report of the religious work of the Association during the year, reasons for deep gratitude to God, and also for appreciation of the thoroughness and fidelity of its officers.

"We firmly believe that to elevate man, the power must operate within. Animal life will grow if fed by the outward; mind will not. The means of its elevation is religious truth. The first aim, then, of this Association is to carry to our brethren in the South, the knowledge of God in Christ, of which they have so long been cheated and robbed.

"Intellectual illumination without this is not true and permanent salvation. To strengthen the intellect without atoning grace, and truth for the spiritual nature, is but to furnish fuel for the flames of remorse and multiply capacities for sin. We believe that the spirit manifested, and the system of truth held by those who began (with small beginnings) this work, are essential to its successful prosecution. And we thankfully acknowledge that providential openings and indications have lately sprung up to show us that the favor of God attends and owns this view. There has been found a keen, ready instinct for, and susceptibility to, religious truth among this destitute race, which marks them as prepared of God, and also reveals a field "white unto the harvest."

"The planting of the faith of our New-England fathers, the dissemination all over the South of that system of truth which they believed and taught, and the maintenance of the ordinances of the Church of Christ, are the essential need of the hour. For this our churches ought to be roused, their benefactions doubled, and from the young in their ranks, raised and sent forth self-denying religious leaders to plant and nurse churches of their faith in the towns and cities of the South."

Pending the vote on the report, the Rev. J. W. Healy, of New-Orleans, made an address, describing the work of the Association among the Freedmen in that city and its vicinity.

Rev. John Scott, of Dudley, North-Carolina, gave an account of the formation of his church in Dudley and the state of the work in that region.

Rev. A. A. Ellsworth, of Weymouth Landing, Mass., urged to the practice of more earnestness and self-denial for the cause of the Freedmen.

The debate was closed by the Rev. R. B. Stratton, of Worcester, and the report was unanimously adopted.

On motion of Secretary Woodworth the following persons were chosen as a Memorial Committee: Rev. H. D. Walker, Rev. G. D. Pike, and Deacon E. Parker, of Reading, Mass.

The report was unanimously adopted.

Rev. S. S. N. Greely, of Oswego, N. Y., delivered an address upon Indian affairs, which was followed by earnest remarks from Secretary E. P. Smith, after which the meeting adjourned until two o'clock in the afternoon.

Afternoon Session.—At two o'clock, the audience again assembled, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by Professor E. A. Park, D.D., of Andover Seminary, assisted by the Rev. R. Campbell, of Newburyport.

After a brief recess, the meeting was called to order, Colonel Hammond of Chicago, in the chair.

The minutes of the meeting thus far were read and approved.

The Rev. H. A. Walker, of Bridgewater, presented the report of the Committee upon Jubilee Memorial Offerings for the South:

"The Pilgrims came here under the inspiration of Christian faith. They have done the great work of the two hundred and fifty years under the guidance and impulse of Christian education. The same influences must secure and bless the future of the race whose first landing upon these shores dates from the same memorable 1620.

"We therefore recommend, as a fitting expression of the grateful feelings this memorial year is fitted to awaken, that measures be taken permanently to endow professorships for the preparation of Christian ministers for the wide territory and numerous people so long destitute, and to be reached and blessed through the institutions under the patronage of the American Missionary Association.

"Can there be a better appropriation of consecrated means than the endowment with $25,000 of a Jubilee Professorship of Theology at Atlanta, that that place may be as memorable in the future religious history of the South as it has been in the military history of the past.

"And if large hearts shall do the same for Straight University, in New-Orleans, with its wide outlook over the South-west of our own land and beyond, how well will the action accord with that of the men who so 'laid the foundation of many generations'!

"We would also most earnestly recommend that, in this jubilee year, individuals and churches endow, as a perpetual memorial and benediction, theological scholarships of $300 each, bearing the name of the church or individual that will thus be ever sustaining and sending forth those who will extend and perpetuate the Pilgrim institutions and faith. This will be building the best monument for the noble men of the past by raising up the men of the future, so advancing the kingdom of Christ and thus securing the future of our whole country."

Rev. Mr. Walker added some fitting remarks. Senator Paterson, of N. H., in response to the invitation of the secretaries, delivered a brief but extremely able address on the subject of the report.

The report was then unanimously adopted.

Rev. Mr. Smith, of Cohasset, presented the report upon the foreign work of the Association, following the reading by an interesting address. The report was unanimously adopted, and is as follows:

"Your committee, to whom was referred the report on the Foreign Missions of the Association, would say that they recall with emotions of pleasure the fact that by the marked providence of God the first work to which the Association was directed, was to a mission in Africa, established by the return to their native land of about forty Africans, rescued from slavery by some of the founders of this Association. Your committee regard with entire approbation the intention of the Executive Committee to strengthen and enlarge their missions in that country, both as a means of present good, and a preparation for a greater work, when the providences of God, now so manifest, are matured; and young men and women, now in training in its schools, shall be prepared to go forth to the work in that land. The committee strongly recommend that one, or more, ordained missionaries be at the earliest day sent to that mission. The other Foreign Missions of the Association, though of less relative present importance, have been undertaken and prosecuted under such apparent providential leadings as require their continued support.

"With gratitude to our divine Leader for the success of the missions of the Association we recommend the adoption of this part of the report, and the pledge to the Executive Committee of the vigorous coöperation of the Association.

"Your committee would have impressed upon the churches that,

> 'The heathen perish—day by day, thousands on thousands pass away;
> O Christian! to their rescue fly—preach Jesus to them ere they die.'

"A brother of the American Board in Ceylon, now in his eightieth year, has lately sent this message to the young men in the seminary at Andover: 'At the call of Lincoln thousands rushed to their graves. Is Christ's last command less important?' We would have this stirring appeal go to all the churches, especially in behalf of the millions of Africa."

Rev. S. S. N. Greely presented the report upon the work of the Association among the Indians. The report was unanimously adopted, and is as follows:

"In adopting the remnants of the aboriginal tribes into its field of Christian labors, the American Missionary Association undertakes that which is indeed difficult, but peculiarly after the spirit and example of Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost.

"In pleading for the dumb, uplifting the down-trodden, bringing deliverance to the oppressed, pouring the light of scientific and Christian knowledge on minds that have had not only the want of the instrumentalities, but even the liberty of culture, it was but the beautiful rounding out of its loving work to enlarge its field, and now include the thousands of the aboriginal tribes, who once were the lords of the soil, but who have been hunted and driven, and wasted away under the perverted influences of civilization.

"From the days of the apostle Eliot and the renowned Stockbridge pastor, Jonathan Edwards, it has been found a difficult work to Christianize the nomadic tribes. They have a tenacious veneration for the teachings by tradition of their ancestors, who have gone to the blessed hunting grounds where game is exhaustless, and the beauty not of earth, but the celestial hills and plains and shadowy groves.

"Then, the fact that they lack the powerful influence of a steady home, the incitement of the recompense of intelligent industry, the light of true science, of God in nature and God in revelation, steadily flowing from the school and the church; all these things are against the hope of successful labor to save the Indian.

"But, in addition, they are hated and cursed unto death and perdition by thousands who are not misanthropists, but wrongly prejudiced.

"The Indian is of that 'one blood of which the Creator made all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth.' Christianity in all its inward power and elevating and saving influence is adapted to him even as to all other men; nay, it is his only salvation—for him Christ died, and for him is the plan of recovery the same plan that is proclaimed from heaven for the sinner, under the shadow of the temple of worship in the towns and cities of culture, wealth, and art, and all the appliances for human happiness, for the sinner in the cabin of the slave, or on distant pagan islands of the sea. If these remnants of the aboriginal tribes to-day in our country are men, then they are in need of gospel and Christian institutions, and the Gospel is as mighty to save them as to save other men.

"The rescuing of these tribes by earnest labor and sacrifice is a debt peculiarly owed to these needy people, for the treatment they have received in the long years past. Driven here and there from lands originally their own—driven by the violation of solemn treaties from lands deeded to them by the nation before whose mighty power they are fading away—corrupted by all the bad influences of border settlers and advancing civilization, taught its vices, not its virtues—cheated by those who appropriated what a liberal government had through many years appropriated to them—learning first to distrust the white man, then to hate him, till they have thousands of them reached the point where they suppose the Government and the people must be resisted, and that the red man must die if he can not kill the white man first—who of us need wonder that savage outbreaks should have often carried distress through border white communities, and that even multitudes of good men in the land think the Indian incapable of salvation, and that the extinction of the race is the best thing that we can desire or hope for.

"This government has long desired the Indian's welfare, but it has had its benevolent designs thwarted by those, vast many of them, who were the almoners of its bounty, and the agents in its behalf.

"It is matter of joy and fervent thanksgiving to God that the great soldier President, who fought for our national salvation—fought for the flag and universal liberty for the people—is carrying out a policy for the wild tribes of the border by which they shall be delivered from oppression and from wrong; and though the changes have been many in his cabinet, and many advisers counsel not the best things, he has not flinched, and God hold him steady so that he will not!

"It is another cheering aspect of the present that in the Commissioner of the Indian Department, General Parker, we have an officer who is alive to the social and religious welfare of these tribes; in all his appointments seeking the advice of Christian men, and aiming to plant this great civil work committed to him on a Christian basis.

"Every thing is now hopeful for the entering in of this great and man-loving, God-honoring Missionary Association to go on with its work of establishing Christian institutions among the Indians, and your committee commend this department to all hearts that love a loving Christ, and feel for and pray for dying men."

Secretary Whipple read a letter from a gentleman, inclosing a check for $5000, and mentioned the case of another gentleman who had left for the Association the sum of $20,000 in his will, but had decided to become his own executor and to furnish the amount at once; $6000 of the money has already been received.

After some additional remarks by Secretary Woodworth, the exercises were closed by singing the doxology, and the meeting adjourned until half-past seven in the evening.

Special Meeting.—At half-past six o'clock in the evening, a prayer-meeting designed for those teachers who now were or formerly had been in the employ of the Association was held in the vestry. The meeting was very interesting, and lasted an hour. Twenty-six teachers were present.

Evening Session.—At half-past seven o'clock, the audience assembled in the church, and was called to order; Colonel Hammond in the chair. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr. Bacon.

Colonel Hammond read the report of the Financial Committee, and followed it by earnest remarks upon the duty of giving. The report was unanimously adopted and is subjoined:

"The Committee on the Treasurer's Report would state that they find, so far as they have had time to examine it, that it is perfectly made up and duly vouched by the auditors, and they recommend that it be adopted and referred to the Executive Committe for publication.

"Your committee would also state that the fact that there appears from the statement of the Executive Committee a debt of about $77,000 resting upon the Association is not, in their opinion, a cause of alarm or the foundation of a fear that the Executive Committee are not acting wisely and prudently in the administration of the affairs of the Association. The exigencies of the service and the demand to enter open doors in advance of the contributions of the churches most emphatically required this outlay, as it seems to us, and the Executive Committee would have been wanting in faith in God and in the churches if they had hesitated. We say this with a full appreciation of the burden of a debt, and the almost universal deprecation of debt incurred by the officers of our benevolent societies; the almost united sentiment being that as these societies are the almoners of the churches, their officers are bound to keep their expenditures for all purposes within the amount the churches place in their hands. By the amount represented by these figures, the Association has obtained the control of real estate, buildings, etc., needed to carry on its work, a fair rental of which would equal $35,000, if not exceed that sum. But, notwithstanding the full and ample justification for its creation, and which the churches should fully appreciate, the debt is not a blessing per se, and immediate efforts should be made to remove it. Your committee are glad to see that the Association is possessed of means, through their western lands and otherwise, which, supplemented by discriminating appropriations, will speedily liquidate the amount. Your committee would, nevertheless express the hope that a sound business discretion will prevent a sacrifice of lands that may be fast appreciating in value. We commend to the committee strong and vigorous efforts to surmount the obstacles that intervene, and wipe out this debt at the earliest practicable moment.

"In view of this imperative duty, and the cessation of labor by the Freedmen's Bureau, the donations to our treasury should be greatly enlarged. The suggestion made on the platform to-day, that churches should double their contributions this year, is in the right direction.

"We urgently recommend that the churches throughout the country, who have not done so, hasten to place this Association on their list of charities, and take up in good season their collections therefor, and supplement or anticipate this action by collectors, and not trust to church contributions alone. We also suggest that Sunday-schools be interested in this work to a greater extent, all experience proving that children can be easily interested in the work of educating their fellows.

"But to the well-to-do and the rich we would say with emphasis, that the call to give of the abundance which God has intrusted to them is loud and imperative. If such will give until it is felt to be a sacrifice, and nothing less is demanded, it will be a means of grace to them of great value and the cause will move forward triumphantly. All of which is respectfully submitted."

The following report upon the work of the association among the Chinese in this country was then read by the Rev. Washington Gladden:

"Your committee have considered that part of the annual report relating to the Chinese in America. Their deliberate judgment, in the light of existing facts, approves the wisdom which prompted the resolution, a year ago, to inaugurate a vigorous missionary work among these people. It was begun none too early. The mass to be leavened in California alone is a population of 30,000. They have been met by a persistent hostility for these twenty years. It is fully time to prove to them that such is not the spirit that actuates a Christian people.

"Other religious bodies have recently entered zealously into the work. The Methodists are erecting a seminary in San Francisco at a cost, for the building alone, of $30,000. The Presbyterians, at their late synod meeting in the same city, appropriated $50,000 for this department of missionary effort. The Baptists have a native Chinese preacher on the Pacific coast, and are no less engaged.

"Providence has clearly called this Association to this field, by training it these many years to labor for the poor and despised, and to battle against caste prejudice; by building it up to great strength in the sympathies of the people; and consequently giving it a strong hold upon means and instrumentalities while at the same time bringing the Chinese in increasingly large numbers to this country.

"The committee desire to express their cordial approval of the methods of coöperation with the churches in starting Sunday-schools as well as in planting night-schools in places where nothing had been undertaken.

"All that is needed seems to be a prosecution and enlargement of the work on the present plan, with a watchful regard to the indications of Providence as to new opportunities. We bespeak increased liberality from the churches and individual friends, to meet the demand for this new department of missionary labor, which promises at no distant day to attain vast proportions."

General C. H. Howard followed the reading of the report by an address upon the condition and prospects of the Chinese in California.

After singing a hymn, the audience was addressed by the Rev. Washington Gladden, who spoke of the Chinese emigrants in North-Adams, Mass.

After brief remarks from Rev. Mr. Greely, General Howard, and Rev. W. Gladden, the report upon the Chinese was unanimously adopted.

On motion, it was Voted, that the reports of the Executive Committee, which in their several parts have been under consideration, and approved, be now adopted as a whole, and referred back to the Executive Committee, for publication with the proceedings of this annual meeting.

On motion of Secretary Woodworth, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the Association gratefully recognizes the kindness of the Boston and Maine, the Fitchburg, the Eastern, the Northern, the Boston and Providence, the Boston and Albany, and the Old Colony railroads for reduced fares to this meeting; that to this church and society, for the use of its meeting-house and chapel, to the good people of Lawrence for their abounding hospitality, and to the choir for pleasant aid in the service of song and praise, it tenders cordial thanks.

Rev. C. E. Fisher, of Lawrence, made a brief address, responding to the resolution and thanking those who came from out of town for their attendance.

After singing the doxology, the meeting adjourned.

JAMES O. BENNETT, Auditors.
ANTHONY LANE,

SUPPLEMENT TO THE TREASURER'S REPORT.

The Executive Committee are pained at the necessity of reporting the continuance of so large a debt. They have been able to reduce it but $7291 during the year, leaving a little over $77,000 still remaining. This it will be seen by the Treasurer's report, has required the payment of $6182.19 interest.

This must be regarded as much to be deplored, and has been a source of continued anxiety to the committee, as it will be to all the friends of our work. Two inquiries will naturally arise in every mind: 1. Was the incurring of such a debt good policy on the part of the Executive Committee? and 2. How shall our work be freed from its embarrassment?

In reply to the first inquiry, it may be stated that the creation of this debt has placed under the immediate control of the committee an amount of property available, and in great part necessary, for its educational and church work, which, if it had to be rented by us, as would be justified if we had it not, would require an annual expenditure of not less than five times the amount paid for interest. At ten per cent per annum on the worth of this property, the amount of rental required would be over, rather than under, $35,000 per annum. All this property, valued at not less than $350,000, is now made available to the higher educational and religious work for the Freedmen, and the landed portion of it is increasing in value.

In providing for the payment of this debt, the committee can report that there is now becoming due to the Association some ten thousand dollars for land disposed of; that it has lands in the North, now beginning to be called for, valued at not less than forty thousand dollars, (eight thousand of it belonging to a permanent fund,) and at least twenty thousand dollars in legacies to be paid this year. The committee have also made their appropriation for the mission work of this year on such a basis that, if we receive from the churches and friends at the North this year a sum equal to that of last year, the debt will be, by the excess of receipts and the sources above named, nearly, it is believed, entirely provided for. We hope the friends of our cause, seeing the increased need, will do more than this.

REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

THE American Missionary Association gathers for its twenty-fourth anniversary with the mercies of another year resting upon it.

We owe thanks to God for success and enlargement in our work, and for the remarkable sparing of life to officers, missionaries, and teachers; but one out of the whole number—Miss Harriet R. Baldwin—having been removed by death. Her death is a loss to us and her friends; it is none to her. Leaving her pleasant home in New-England, and devoting herself to the work among the Freedmen without reward except the pleasure of doing good, she toiled so earnestly that death came to her amidst her labors. She died favored with unusual manifestations of sustaining grace, and surrounded by weeping multitudes whom her coming had blessed.

Twenty-seven life-members are reported as having died during the year.

Aside from these bereavements, the sole trial of the year has been the continuance of the large debt upon the Association. This is a source of constant anxiety and embarrassment. Yet its creation was wise and its continuance a necessity. It was created to secure property essential to the work at the South, and which had to be secured then or never; it has continued, because this property could be used only by expending our income in the field, rather than in paying the debt. Details in regard to the debt, and suggestions in reference to its liquidation, will be made in another connection.

GENERAL SURVEY.

A wide view of the work of the Association for the year shows that among the FREEDMEN it has employed a larger number of missionaries and teachers than in any former year; that it has maintained its work in the FOREIGN FIELD with some increase of force; that it has begun labors for the CHINESE IN AMERICA, and that it has entered heartily into plans proposed by the Government for the elevation of the INDIANS.

THE FREEDMEN.

This year, as for several years past, the energies of the Association have been expended mainly in the South. Five hundred and thirty-three missionaries and teachers have been sent thither, and their labors, more than ever concentrated, have been more than ever effective for good.

The condition and prospects of the colored people in the South are not well understood at the North. It is easy to see why we know so much less of the South than of the West. The Western people emigrated from the East; a constant intercourse is maintained by travel and correspondence; and the issues of a teeming newspaper press in both sections are read in each alike. As between the South and North, these essentials of a common knowledge can hardly be said to exist.

But the North must know the condition of the South, especially that of the colored people. Are they meeting, in any safe measure, the tremendous responsibility thrown upon them, or are they becoming the tools of a people who are still impatient under enforced union with us, or yet again, are they sinking into a mass of corruption under their own vices?

We need to know these things as patriots for our country's sake, and as Christians for the people's sake, for whom we are responsible to God.

The points of inquiry that lie on the surface and attract most attention relate to the industrial and political condition of the Freedmen; and yet these are by no means so important as the facts that lie beneath them—the educational and religious progress of these people; for if they are intelligent and virtuous, they will become industrious and economical, and will make a wise use of their political power.

These profounder topics of inquiry are important as indicating where Christian labor is most essential, and they coincide precisely with the chief endeavors of this Association in the educational and religious training of the Freedmen. A survey of our work on this part of the field will be our best answer to these questions, and will show what yet needs to be done.

EDUCATION.

COMMON SCHOOLS.

Modern civilization renders popular education a necessity. The Prussian common schools are at length making their influence to be felt; for to them must the recent surprising superiority of that people be ascribed. No nation can now hold its equal place with these conquerors that does not imitate or excel them in common schools. Far less can an illiterate mass among an educated people, separated by color and prejudice, like the Freedmen of America, rise above a crushing inferiority, except by general intelligence.

This was felt by those who, under Union auspices, framed anew the constitutions of some of the Southern States after the rebellion. The legislatures which immediately followed, being of like political affinities, enacted liberal laws for the establishment of common schools, so that the legal basis for popular education in a few of these States is as enlarged as in the most favored States of the North. In the earliest labors of this Association among the Freedmen the commonschool work seemed to lie before it as the inevitable necessity of the hour, alike demanded by the desires and needs of the people. The numerous Freedmen's Aid Societies were all impelled to the same efforts, and the princely donation of Mr. Peabody was consecrated in part to this object. The colored people themselves understood the necessity, not by any process of reasoning, but instinctively, or rather providentially, for God seemed to inspire them with an unconquerable desire for the knowledge of letters.

But notwithstanding these laws and labors, donations and aspirations, the hostility of the whites, vailed sometimes under the plea of poverty, has thus far defeated all attempts at a general system of common-school instruction. A brief résumé of the facts is given by General Eaton, United States Commissioner of Education. We quote:

"He finds Delaware without State school supervision, leaving all educational questions to the counties, and having no provision for the blacks; Maryland, though recently revising her laws, educating colored children only in Baltimore; Virginia but just putting a free-school law on her statute-book; West-Virginia upon the point of striking from her system its right arm, county supervision; Kentucky just enacting a new school law, but giving no opportunity for colored youth; Tennessee, after establishing free schools, and assembling in them nearly two hundred thousand children, reversing her course, and providing only for the most inefficient county action outside her largest cities; North-Carolina with a school law upon her statute-books, but at the close of the last year not a school in the country districts directly under the auspices of the State law; South-Carolina but slightly in advance; Georgia with her legislation where it was before the war; Alabama, though with a free school system and one hundred and sixty thousand pupils enrolled, yet with the whole so connected with the old order of private schools as to rob it of much of its freedom of action, and prevent its highest usefulness; Florida with a system partly organized, the Legislature adjourning after its late winter session, without making any provision for the levy of the school tax; Mississippi just writing its school law; Arkansas with an efficient system, but the schools only partially organized; Louisiana with a system adapted to efficiency, but not more than seventy-five schools reported outside of New-Orleans at the date of the last report; Texas without legislation, the Senate refusing to confirm the superintendent nominated by the governor—all over this southern section not only lack of educational sentiment, but positive hostility to instruction and instructors."

Thus we see that this indispensable aid in the elevation of the Freedmen has been largely denied them. We ask attention to what this Association is endeavoring to do to meet this great want.

We confess we are compelled, by want of funds, to withdraw largely from direct labors in common schools; but we believe we can, with our limited resources, reach that object, and others also, in a better way. If we had a sufficiency of means, we should aid the people in supporting such schools. In many localities they are ready, with great self-denial, to procure the school-houses and board the teachers, and, if encouraged, their contributions for this object (amounting this year to over $61,000) would annually increase, and the moral effect of this upon themselves would be immeasurably great, not only in the direct benefits of the education, but in the indirect stimulus to industry, economy, and sobriety. But unless Providence shall raise up some friends who shall put means into our hands for this special purpose, we shall use our educational funds mainly in that better way of which we have just spoken, namely, our

NORMAL SCHOOLS.

Normal schools are fountains, fertilizing the spots where they are located, and sending their streams, which are continually gathering force and volume, to water the wastes beyond. They are the most economical and effective educational instrumentality that can be employed, and their benefits are by no means confined to education. They create and foster common schools, and much else besides.

1. Their economy.

This may be illustrated by reference to the school founded in the fall of 1867, at Talladega, Ala. Thirty-six of the pupils trained in this institution have already become teachers in the public schools of the State. The expense of a teacher from the North for traveling and board for a school-year is at least $200 more than the expense of one of these colored teachers. The annual saving, therefore, in the expenses of these thirty-six teachers over that of the same number of teachers from the North is $7200, which is much more than the annual cost to the Association of the school at Talladega. It is safe to say that by establishing and maintaining Normal Institutions in the South the Association is annually doing more in the interest of free public schools than it would if it were to expend the same amount of money in their direct support. Then, too, these permanent institutions are a constantly-accumulating capital from which the dividends to the public schools are larger every year.

2. Their encouraging influence.

The colored people can arise only as they are stimulated to self-help. The presence among them of these educated teachers of their own race will not only give them hope by seeing what their sons and daughters may become, but will directly encourage others to seek an education. In fact, every pupil that goes out as a teacher brings others back with him, and this is an influence that is constantly widening.

3. Their refining and elevating power.

This power, first exerted upon the pupil in the school, is extended abroad when he goes forth as a teacher. The schools are, almost without exception, located with our churches. Here the influence is direct and powerful, in the example of a community where piety means morality, and where warmth of feeling is not mere excitement. Then, too, manners and morals are acquired in the boarding-hall, and in the parlor where family worship is conducted. Tears of gratitude have sometimes been drawn from the eyes of Northern visitors, as they have witnessed the decorum and the quiet religious influence in these scenes of family worship; and when these pupils thus trained go forth to dwell with their people, and to become their teachers, who can estimate the influence they will exert, not only as teachers, but in promoting the happiness of the home, and the virtues of private and social life?

When, moreover, we consider the number of these well-located, well-furnished, and well-conducted institutions, and their perennial and ever-widening influence, we are constrained to believe that with the same amount of means, we can, in no other way, do more good to the Freedmen, in educational and religious culture, than by these normal schools.

COLLEGES.

Our young colleges supply another important want. It is impossible that a whole people should all advance equally. In common as well as military life, there must be leaders, and the mass will advance the more rapidly because these march ahead. These leaders must be trained. For the colored people they should be largely of that race. Nature provides them; education and grace must prepare them. Christian colleges are a needful means, and this Association has been successful in starting these. Their adequate endowment is a problem that presses upon us for solution. A wise Christian liberality on the part of those who realize the wants and claims of the South will yet be guided to our assistance. God grant that the help may soon appear.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

The foundation on which the colored people must be built up is intelligent piety. The materials for this are an educated ministry and a pure church. This Association has aimed to supply this material by institutions that blend the educational and religious, but the crowning institutions for that purpose are Theological Seminaries.

We do not propose to establish these seminaries separate from the higher institutions of learning, but to make them a part and an outgrowth. They neither can nor do they need to rise at once to the learning of seminaries at the North. The old colored ministers are to be taught as much as their time will permit, amid manual toil and ministerial duties. The pious young men are to be trained, some of them fully, others only as much as may be, with due regard to their time and talents, and the wants of the people. It is far better that some should be helped to preach as well as they can by the aid of a little education rather than not preach at all, or preach as they are, or wait for a nine years' course of study. The theological departments of our institutions are designed to meet the present want, and to grow as the demand enlarges.

CHURCHES.

The number of our churches is not greatly increased, and we need to be patient under the tardy enlargement. There is a slow but sure preparation that ultimately brings the most rapid and enduring growth.

Our missionaries are discovering more and more the ignorance, selfishness, and obstinacy of some of the old colored ministers; the sectarian, narrow, and impure characters of many of the members of the colored churches; and the unthrift, indolence, and conceit of many of the people. But there remain still the rich elements of faith, hope, and love, so instinctive in their characters, and so susceptible of improvement; there is that same eagerness for learning, and there is such abundant evidence that the culture already bestowed is producing blessed results, that we are cheered in our labors, and confirmed in the wisdom of the measures we have hitherto taken.

It would be easy to proselyte—to win over entire churches to a given polity—nay, even to multiply seeming converts by exciting measures and appeals; but as we must answer to God and our own consciences, we can neither, on the one hand, use such means, nor, on the other, surrender our hope of the regeneration of this people. We are convinced that our plans are right—the planting of the Christian school, and the pure and intelligent church, though small; and we are confident that these will succeed, and that nothing else will.

THE FUTURE.

Our work hereafter among the Freedmen will lack the efficient aid of the Freedmen's Bureau; our diminished list of teachers will strike the popular eye with less force; our need of increased salaries for teachers and professors, nay, our imperative need of endowments for colleges and seminaries, will render our wants greater; but we believe the American people owe, and recognize that they owe, a vast debt yet unpaid to these ex-slaves; whose elevation is a preliminary to the elevation of the poor whites, and both are essential to the safety of the nation; that this Association is doing just the work needed at the South, and that this is realized by so many who have prayed for the slave, who love their country and their God, that our work will not be forgotten.

We believe that the West was saved to the country by liberal aid rendered in educational and Christian nurture, and that the West, in turn, saved the country by its patriotism and heroism in the late civil war; and we believe that the South needs, far more, the same kind of assistance, and will in the end as abundantly repay the enlightened liberality. We believe that no work at home or abroad has greater claims upon patriots and Christians in America, and especially do we regard this responsibility as resting upon the representatives of the Pilgrim Fathers.

MEMORIAL YEAR.

The Pilgrim and the Slave both came to America in 1620. How different their character, yet how blended their history! The one was the bearer of a civilization founded on liberty and intelligence; the other the victim of a barbarism based on bondage and ignorance; and yet the Pilgrim, as the representative of the North, became, in a measure, responsible for the guilt of slavery, and the sweat of the Slave and the blood of the Pilgrim alike have moistened the soil of the South.

The Pilgrim's guilt was that of consent. Slavery asked for guarantees in the Constitution; the Pilgrim yielded, and thus fastened the fetters on the slave in the new republic. Slavery demanded legislation and slave-hunting through the North, that not a single slave might escape; the Pilgrim consented, "conquering his prejudices," for the sake of union, peace, and profit, and fearfully did he atone for his complicity with slavery, for he gave as many sons to destroy it as the old masters to save it.

On the other hand, the honor of emancipation rests with the Pilgrim. As the representative man, he took the responsibility directly, wholly. Before the war, the great moral conflict was mainly a struggle with the Pilgrim himself. That once-conquered conscience now arose in its might and triumphed in discussion, in the church, and in the political arena.

That triumph maddened the South, and it sounded the tocsin of war. Nobly did the Pilgrim accept the issue, and bravely did his sons encounter the toil and the death. As a military necessity the Slave was made free; as a political necessity he was made a voter; as a national necessity the walls of the Union were again cemented with blood.

It becomes the Pilgrim to consider carefully the grave responsibilities involved in all this. It is well to have a sentiment for liberty; it is brave to sacrifice blood and treasure, and it is patriotic to save the Union. But it is only a sentiment if it deprives the Slave of the cabin, and such food and care in sickness and old age as even slavery provided, and leaves him to perish from want; it is reckless to arm him with the tremendous power of the ballot and then leave him in an ignorance fatal to him and the nation; it is madness to cement the Union together, and then trust to chance whether the elements shall be brought into harmony or left to produce a more terrible convulsion!

Higher still, God's purpose in emancipation was to strike the shackles from the bodies that the souls might be free in America, and the Gospel be borne to Africa. The colored man stretches out his hands for the intelligent piety that will fit him for all this. Here too the responsibility rests with the Pilgrim, for he opened this wide door, and these hands are outstretched to him.

In no fifty years of the Pilgrim's history has he achieved greater results or assumed graver responsibilities. He has done well thus far in meeting these responsibilities, but much yet remains to be done, and that remaining work involves the destiny of both races and of two continents. In this Memorial Year, there is for the Pilgrim no duty more pressing and no harvest more promising.

In attestation of the correctness of these views, we place upon record the acknowledgment of the duty, as embodied in one of the resolutions of the Chicago Memorial Convention:

Resolved, That the triumph of the ideas and principles of the fathers in the late civil contest, emancipating and enfranchising four millions of blacks, and giving nearly equally important disinthrallment to eight millions of whites, imposes a vast responsibility, and offers a grand opportunity for the dissemination of the religion of the Pilgrims; and in this memorial year of their landing on these shores, we pledge ourselves to renewed effort to preach the Gospel and plant its institutions in the South.

THE CHINESE IN AMERICA.

The migration of masses of people is more potent than war to change the aspects of society. The irruption of the northern hordes nearly buried the effete populations of Europe under barbarian ashes and scoriæ, but afterward on the mingled soil there arose the vigorous growth of a grand civilization. The pouring of the vast populations of Europe into America created a new world, freer than the old, yet resembling it in many essential characteristics.

But a new inundation threatens America. The pent-up masses of Asia, differing from us in literature, politics, and religion, are flowing in upon us. If they come in great numbers, there must be conflict and conquest—not of arms, but of opinions. The assimilation is not easy as with the immigrations of Europe, for the antagonism of habit and thought runs along the whole parallels of life.

Many Americans are tempted to debar the Asiatic, as the readiest solution of the difficulty. But this is not in accordance with our history or religion. We have broad lands yet unpeopled, great resources yet undeveloped, free institutions that have only been strengthened by the strains upon them, and a religion that is commissioned to conquer the world. We should therefore welcome the nations, if we can prepare them for freedom and win them to Christ.

The Chinese, who are the precursors, are industrious, peaceful, and desirous to learn our language. In these traits lies the hope that these people may be useful citizens; and here too may be found the key to the purpose of Providence in sending them. Our language carries the knowledge of our political and religious institutions, and these Asiatics may be sent here to acquire and enjoy both, and to bear them back to the land of their fathers. The simplicity and grandeur of such a plan mark it as God's, and his children do well to prepare for its achievement. The advantages of an early beginning in such a work are obvious.

Impelled by these and other considerations, this Association, at its last annual meeting, resolved to enter into this important field of labor. The work is already begun, and the details will be found at the close of the report of the Western Department.

NEW INDIAN POLICY AND WORK.

President Grant has the honor of being the first chief magistrate of this nation to propose citizenship for the Indians. He has had also the sagacity to see that the Indians could never hope to attain to the degree of civilization essential to such citizenship under their present régime. The tutorage by agents and speculators in the schools of fraud, whisky, and tobacco would require a long process from barbarism to American refinement. Accordingly, the President has asked the benevolent and Christian people of the country to give him missionaries and teachers as substitutes for the old agents and speculators. This is a bold and, in the short view of a mere politician, a hazardous advance in our political affairs. As was expected, all parties damaged by the reform, whose name is legion, have rallied in opposition. Senators and representatives, honorable men, who would scorn the imputation of connivance with fraud, have not hesitated to remonstrate against this new policy in the name of injured constituents who are losing their opportunity for spoliation. So vitiated have party morals become, that the demand is open and persistent for the continuation of these Indian frauds, as a part of the spoils which are essential for carrying on party machinery.

But the President declares his steadfast purpose to adhere to the experiment of giving the work of protecting and civilizing the Indians into the control of the religious societies of the country.

This Association was the first to accept and adopt the new work offered; and four agencies in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota were assigned to our care. Subsequently, through the intrigues of politicians, the Michigan agency was taken away. Our agents, who have been commissioned by the Government, are as follows: for the Superior agency, embracing the Chippewas in North-Eastern Minnesota and Eastern Wisconsin, Mr. S. N. Clark; for the Green Bay agency, embracing other tribes in Wisconsin, Rev. W. T. Richardson; for the Chippewas of the Mississippi, including the tribes in Northern Minnesota, Rev. J. P. Bardwell.

We hope, at an early day, through the assistants, who will make a part of the Government force, in these tribes, and the teachers, whose support will be provided by the Government, to set on foot a system of education and reform under more hopeful auspices than have ever before been offered to these long-abused men.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

For the first few years after the organization of the Association, its Foreign Missions were greatly in the ascendant. Soon, however, divine Providence, by directing the attention of the country, and especially the Christians of the country, to the subject of oppression, compelled the Association, not unwilling nor reluctant, to devote its main energies to a work at home, and where the power of its principles, cooperating with Gospel instrumentalities, might be made available to the overthrow of a system in as deadly hostility to the interest of both the country and the church as to that of its immediate victims.

During this great struggle, our foreign work was not relinquished, much less abandoned, but not extended. The providential demand on anti-slavery Christians was for a home work of such magnitude as to render it impossible for the Association to obtain laborers through whom to increase or even retain undiminished its Foreign Missions. The same Providence now seems to call upon it for their renewal and increase, and especially in its labors for the millions of Africa.

The field is the world, and the Association does not willingly turn its back upon any part of it; but, through the divine favor, peculiar instrumentalities, and facilities almost unparalleled, are offered to the Association, or possessed by it, for a particular work directly in the line of its original preferences and operations, and for which its whole history has been a special training.

The possibilities of this work are known only to the mind of the infinite One. Its promise seems limited only by our own faith and faithfulness.

The experience derived from our work in Africa, our hold on that continent, the confidence we have of all the true friends of her children, and the warm and loving affection of thousands whom, through divine favor, we have been able to bless with gospel privileges and Christian as well as secular education, are available capital, the value of which can not be estimated. Then too the opportunity furnished by our normal and high-schools, under Christian culture, our colleges and seminaries for the direct training of Christian young men and women of African descent for the missionary work in the land of their ancestors, gives emphasis to the providential call to this peculiar field of a most binding character. It can not be ignored, without unfaithfulness to Him who, in answer to prayer, has freed the slave, and placed him in our hands as material and agency to be fitted for labor for the upbuilding of his kingdom and the conversion of the world.

EASTERN DEPARTMENT.

NORMAL SCHOOLS.

Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, Hampton, Va.

GENERAL S. C. ARMSTRONG, Superintendent; Miss R. T. Bacon, Assistant-Superintendent; Miss Jane Stuart Woolsey, Superintendent Girls' Industrial Department; Mr. F. Richardson, Farmer.

TEACHERS.—Misses M. E. Kingsley, Caroline S. Thomas, Gertrude Hyde, Caroline M. Pease, Sophia W. Shephard, Kate A. Means, Abbie Guild.

PUPILS.—In normal class, 72; in model schools, Butler, 100; Lincoln, 115. Total, 287.

A clear idea of the working plan of the institute is given by the circular for 1870, as follows:

"CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION.—Sound health, good character, age not less than fourteen or over twenty-five, ability to read well and write intelligibly; knowledge of arithmetic through long division; intention to remain through the whole course of three years, and to become a teacher. Those desiring admission should apply in their own handwriting, stating previous occupation, how long and where they have attended school, and how far they can comply with the above terms of admission, and giving references as to character.

"TERMS.—Tuition, per month, $1; rent of furnished room, per month, 75 cents; board, including washing and lights, per week, $1.75; fuel, per month, 75 cents. Clothing furnished at low prices to such as desire it. Bills payable monthly.

"Able-bodied young men can earn by labor on the farm, in term-time, six to eight dollars per month; young women can earn in the industrial department, and by house-work, by working one day each week, and on Saturdays, from six to seven dollars per month. Those whose labor is satisfactory will be furnished with work in vacation, in order to clear up debts incurred in term-time. Pupils are expected generally to spend the vacation at home."

The corps of instructors in the school and in the industrial departments consists of six ladies. The course of study embraces the following, namely, object-teaching, reading, music, geography, grammar, English composition, mathematics, natural philosophy, history, and civil government. A course of lectures on the applications of science to agriculture is given each winter by Mr. Richardson, farm-manager.

The students are abundantly supplied from the farm with fresh vegetables in the season.

The cost of labor in the kitchen and laundry, amounting to the work of twelve persons constantly employed, (besides that of a hired servant,) is borne by the institution. This labor is divided among the young women according to their needs, who are allowed for it at the rate of six dollars per month and board.

Total present attendance is seventy-five, and is graded into three classes—the junior, middle, and senior. The senior and pioneer class of twenty students is expected to graduate at the close of the next school year, June, 1871.

Fourteen undergraduates have engaged in teaching nearly six hundred pupils in Hampton and the neighboring counties, at salaries of ten dollars per month and board.

An act incorporating the following-named gentlemen as trustees of this institute has passed the General Assembly of the State of Virginia and become a law:

Major-General O. O. Howard, Rev. George Whipple, Rev. M. E. Strieby, and Rev. E. P. Smith, of New-York; Hon. John F. Lewis, United States Senator from Virginia; Colonel Robert W. Hughes, of Richmond; General J. F. B. Marshall, of Boston; General James A. Garfield, Member of Congress from Ohio; Samuel Holmes and Edgar Ketchum, Esqs., of New-York; Secretary B. G. Northrup, of Connecticut; Mr. Alexander Hyde, of Massachusetts; Mr. H. C. Percy, of Norfolk, and S. C. Armstrong, of Hampton.

These trustees have organized under this act by choice of Rev. George Whipple, President; S. C. Armstrong, Secretary, and J. F. B. Marshall, Treasurer. Rev. E. M. Cravath, of New-York, Rev. Thomas K. Fessenden, of Connecticut, and —— Kimber, of Philadelphia, were elected members of the board. Rev. Mr. Fessenden has been chosen Financial Secretary, with a view to raise an endowment of $50,000 for the institute.

A large three-story hall has been erected at a cost of $40,000, and paid for, which will afford dormitory room for forty additional students, and provide assembly and recitation-rooms for two hundred. It is in the form of a Greek cross, 110 × 85 feet, buttressed at the angles, trimmed on corners and around the windows with black brick; the walls are thick, timbers heavy, and all material of the best quality.

General Armstrong laid before the trustees at their organization an able paper upon the methods, and purposes, and success of the institute, from which we copy the following:

"We have before us this question, What should be the character of an educational institution devoted to the poorer classes in the South?

"It is useless at present to expect the ignorant whites to accept instruction side by side with the colored race. To a broad impartiality the negro only responds. Let us therefore consider what answer to our problem is indicated by the character and needs of the freed-people. Plainly, a system is required which shall be at once constructive of mental and moral worth, and destructive of the vices characteristic of the slave. What are those vices? They are, improvidence, low ideas of honor and morality, and a general lack of directive energy, vigor, judgment, and foresight. Thus disabled, the ex-slave enters upon the merciless competition incident to universal freedom. Political power being placed in his hands, he becomes the prey of the demagogue, or attempts that low part himself. In either case, he is the victim of his greatest weakness, vanity. Mere tuition is not enough to rescue him from being forever a tool, politically and otherwise. The white graduate usually over-estimates himself, because his intellect has grown faster than his experience of life; but the danger to the negro is greater proportionally, as his desire is to shine rather than to do. His deficiencies of character are, I believe, worse for him and for the world than his ignorance. But with these deficiencies are docility and enthusiasm for improvement, and a perseverance in the pursuit of it, which form a basis of great hope, and justify any outlay and the ablest service in his behalf.

"We are here trying to solve the problem of an education best suited to the needs of the poorer classes of the South. The poverty of these pupils has required the introduction of manual labor.

"The plan of combining mental and physical labor is full of objections. It is admitted that it involves friction, constant embarrassment, apparent disadvantage to educational advancement as well as to the profits of the various industries. But to the question, 'Do your students have sufficient time to study faithfully all their lessons,' I should answer, not enough, judging by the usual use of time; but under pressure they better use the hours they have. There is an additional energy put forth, an increased rate of study, which make up for the time spent in work, while the physical vigor gained affords abundant strength for severe mental effort.

"Nothing is of more benefit to our students than this compulsory waking up of the faculties. After thirty years of drudgery, the plantation hand brightens under this system and learns surprisingly well. On the farm, the plan of working the whole force of young men for a few hours each day has been given up for the better one of dividing them into five squads, each of which works one school-day of the week, and all on Saturdays. All are paid by the hour for their services at the rate of from four to ten cents, according to the kind of work done. Under these arrangements, our industries thrive and were never so hopeful as now.

"The very difficult problem of creating a profitable female industry has been achieved in the most fortunate manner by supplying the boys with clothing and by underselling the shops in the neighboring town. Our students, both young men and young women, go to their appointed duties with cheerfulness, and the school is full of the spirit of self-help.

"However the future may decide the question, our two years' experience of the manual labor system has been satisfactory. Progress in study has been rapid and thorough—I venture to say not excelled in any school of the same grade; there have been a steadiness and solidity of character and a spirit of self-denial developed, an appreciation of the value of opportunities manifested, which would not be possible under other conditions.

"Unfortunately, there is a limit to the number that can be profitably employed. This institution should, I think, be polytechnic, growing step by step, adding new industries as the old ones shall become established and remunerative, thus enlarging the limits of paying labor and increasing the attendance, hoping finally to crown its ruder products with the results of finer effort in the region of art.

"As to the disciplinary features of the institution, no necessity has so far arisen for the adoption of a system of marks, prizes, or other such incentives. Expulsion has sometimes, though rarely, been resorted to. Our most perplexing cases have been those of honest, well-meaning students, either of limited ability and fine character, or those of low propensities and childishness, or coarseness of character.

"The celebrated head-master of Rugby said, 'Till a man learns that the first, second, and third duty of a school-master is to get rid of unpromising subjects, a great public school will never be what it might be and what it ought to be.' School is not the only training place. I expect young men will be discharged without dishonor from this institute who will become eminent, partly because sent off to travel a more difficult and heroic way.

"Of all our work that upon the heart is the most important; there can be no question as to the paramount necessity of teaching the vital precepts of the Christian faith, and of striving to awaken a genuine enthusiasm for the higher life that shall be sustained, and shall be the strong support of the young workers who may go out to be examples to their race.

"In the history of our institution so far, we have cause for encouragement. Three years ago this month, our buildings began with but $2000 in hand; for although the American Missionary Association selected and purchased this most fortunate spot with the buildings then upon it, and have paid running expenses, it could not offer the means of further construction. But now we have a property in lands and permanent improvements worth upward of $90,000, for which we owe many thanks to the Freedman's Bureau and Northern benefactors. I think we may reasonably hope to build up here, on historic ground, an institution that will aid freedmen to escape from the difficulties that surround them by affording the best possible agency for their improvement in mind and heart, by sending out not pedagogues but those whose culture shall be upon the whole circle of living, and who with clear insight and strong purpose will do a quiet work that shall make the land purer and better."

Avery Institute, Charleston, S. C.

Report by M. A. Warren, Principal.

"We have had during the past year our full share of trials, discouragements, and disappointments, as well as our pleasures and successes; but we now remember only the latter. We have worked hard, and our labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

"OUR STATISTICS are briefly these: In the institute, 325 pupils—of whom 7 are preparing for college; 60 are in the normal class, 50 are in the high-school department, 20 are studying algebra and 17 geometry.

"THE RESULTS of our work since I became acquainted with the school, eighteen months ago, are astonishing. Within that time two classes have completed Davies' Practical Arithmetic. Of the two classes in algebra, one has finished Davies' Elementary, and the other has carried the study to quadratics. Two classes have made satisfactory progress in Latin; one class has commenced geometry, (Legendre,) two classes have completed geography (Guyot's Intermediate) with map drawing, and two classes have mastered Hooker's First Physiology. Lessons in mineralogy and the science and art of teaching have been given.

"PROSPECTS.

"It is difficult to exaggerate the prospects of usefulness before this school. It is situated in the commercial centre, in a State in which the negro element is largely in the majority. Schools are organizing in the country round about us. Clamorous calls for teachers and schools come from every part of the State. Already I am asked to furnish fifty teachers, and another year still greater demand will be made.

"Some of my scholars are already preparing to go into the country, hoping eventually to return and to complete their course of study. What a prospect this opens! I grow enthusiastic when I think of its possibilities. Think of all the years of darkness, and then think of the full light that is coming!

"ENTHUSIASM OF THE SCHOLARS.

"I wish to say a word about the enthusiasm with which the scholars prosecute their studies. My experience does not agree with the statement of those who seem to think it is dying out. I should say of my pupils that the more they know, the greater their eagerness to know. A scholar was asked, a day or two since,

"'How do you like studying, Paul?'

"'I like it best of any thing I ever did, ma'am!'

"'Shall you return to school, next term?'

"'I'm afraid not. I must go out to teach.'

"'But would you prefer to teach or to study?'

"'Oh! I should greatly prefer to study!'

"'Can not your father aid you so as to allow you to do so?'

"'I think not,' (decidedly.)

"His younger brother was killed by a railroad accident, and his father was so severely injured as to be just getting able to work again, while his mother has been crippled for years.

"'But suppose you should go out and teach awhile, could you not save money so as to pursue your studies for a time?'

"'But if I was to earn any money, I should want to give it to mother!'

"'Well, suppose you could continue here at school until you had got all our school could give you, what would you do for a living?'

"'Oh! then I should like to go North, and learn more!'

"The conversation was continued in this way, developing a famishing eagerness in the boy for study and a piety toward his mother that won our hearts. Paul's enthusiasm may differ from that of his associates in kind, possibly in degree; but there are many who emulate him. Many a scholar who, in face of extremest poverty—poverty of clothes, of food, of friends, and of home—is holding on manfully to his school and his hopes of an education. Ought they not to be helped?

"ADVANCED CLASS.

"I desire to call your especial attention to my advanced class. None of them are well circumstanced, while most are so poor as to make me wonder where their daily bread comes from. And yet they covet a collegiate education, and have started for it! They have such characters and minds as, in my judgment, to warrant them in attempting it. It seems to me that you must give us some money next year for this especial purpose. How can I see them giving up study after having gone thus far, and when they promise so much usefulness, if allowed to continue? Is it right?

"There is another enthusiasm which is kindling. The idea of becoming a teacher is beginning to take a hold. The dignity of the profession begins to be felt. It does not yet amount to an esprit de corps, but we will see what one or two years of cultivation will make of it.

"RELIGIOUS IMPRESSIONS.

"Regularly holden prayer-meetings among the pupils have not been unattended with fruits. The number of hopeful conversions I am not able to report. Of the church and Sabbath-school, I suppose Mr. Ford will inform you. I must step out of my sphere to say, however, that I have never before seen either in so prosperous a state as since Mr. Ford assumed charge of them. His motto seems to be, Work hard, and make as little noise about it as possible. I sincerely hope he will be successful in raising the amount needed to build the chapel for Plymouth Church, in Charleston."

Florida Normal Institute, Jacksonville, Fla.

Miss E. Williams, Principal, writes respecting this institute:

"The building stands on an eminence in the rear of the city, which commands a fine view of the St. John's River and the surrounding country. It is two stories high, and contains six large school-rooms, a library and apparatus-room, and a large assembly-room on the second floor, capable of seating three hundred persons. A fine bell-tower surmounts the building. The entire cost was nearly sixteen thousand dollars. The building was dedicated April 10th, 1869. The schools were then brought together and graded.

"This institute is now under the fostering care of the American Missionary Association, and has during the winter numbered nearly four hundred students."

Six teachers are associated with the principal in her work, four of these receiving their appointment and support from the County Board of Education.

This is the first normal school building ever erected in the State, and the importance of sustaining this institution, and making it a point from which shall go forth evangelical teachers and a pure Christianity, is easily seen; for this city is central, and Romanism with her emissaries is here gathering in unwary souls.

A mission Sabbath-school was organized during the winter, and from the highways and byways over three hundred scholars gathered in.

GRADED AND HIGH-SCHOOLS.

Norfolk, Va.

The educational work of the year for the colored children of Norfolk was undertaken in November by a force of five teachers, in three school buildings, under the promise of the city authorities that the schools should receive their proportionate share of the public school fund. By one subterfuge and another this pledge was evaded by the city government until February, when the fund was refused, and the teachers withdrawn.

Report of Rev. Henry B. Blake, Superintendent:

"With a corps of nine teachers we have maintained the schools—a day-school in two grades, one afternoon school for women, a night-school for adults and such children as can not attend the day-school, and an industrial school for girls. In these we have had 805 pupils—620 in the day, and 185 in the night-schools. More than 600 have been taught in the branches of a good common-school education, and have made good progress. We have scholars now in all the schoolreaders. Many have a good knowledge of geography; a large number are considerably advanced in arithmetic; and two classes are in grammar. We have not yet reached algebra, philosophy, or Latin.

"I have never sat for an hour in our schools, listening to the exercises of the pupils, without feeling that our teachers are doing a great work. We are not simply teaching reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, geography, and grammar to six hundred boys and girls. We are trying to lift them from their degradation, and make men and women of them—true citizens of the republic. We are trying to create the home among the ten thousand people in the city. The home does not exist now, except in germ, and in comparatively few instances. Through our influence on the young we expect to see the houses of the people becoming true homes.

"We are trying to renovate the religious worship of the people—so much of which is degrading and demoralizing. We are trying to stimulate the moral sense of the whole people through the children. We are trying to save them from the perils of their condition—idleness, drunkenness, and profligacy. And we are, beyond doubt, making progress steadily in all these things, though you must wait a generation to see our complete work.

"We are preparing teachers for the whole State. This State, larger in territory than New-York, has in it at best only a few hundred schools, and most of these are hardly worth the name. Three fourths of the colored children of the State are waiting, in their ignorance, for teachers. We have furnished a few. Every year we can increase the number, and send them out with better qualifications. Thus we expect, in a few years, to spread the work we are doing here all over the State.

"There is no qualified ministry for the colored people, and there can not be until the young men are educated. We are no doubt doing something to meet this great necessity.

"There are but very few colored men fit to hold civil office. We are raising them up; though we do not foster political ambition, as we see it is likely to prove the ruin of a multitude of young men who are seeking office without any fitness for it."

UNGRADED SCHOOLS AND MISSION STATIONS IN COUNTRY DISTRICTS.

The field of Christian labor covered by the above description is a most important and interesting one, and yet the most difficult and trying for our missionaries and teachers. They generally go singly, and, so far as social life is concerned, live alone. They are in country districts where every man knows all about his neighbors, and every thing that is transpiring. The attention of a hostile community is thus easily called to the work of the teacher. Without friends, often without a home, except such as some colored family can offer, she becomes the subject of remark, contempt, and abuse, and sometimes of outrageous slander, with no one to defend her. Teachers have been known to live two years in a place without speaking to a single white person. Some of the fields which have been occupied this year have been especially lonely, and yet the work has been very successful.

Church Hill, Va.

Miss Susan H. Clark has closed her seventh year of labor in this little "Slabtown." Her work has doubtless often seemed difficult and discouraging, but it is worth the seven years' toil to be able to write the following from her own field:

"We had a good school; but aside from this, I was a help and comfort to many. We had a night-school prayer-meeting each week, and a mothers' meeting on Friday afternoon; and in answer to prayer, the Spirit of God was poured out, and at least fifty conversions were the result; twenty or more were in the Sabbath-school and day-school; some of them are quite young, but give satisfactory evidence of an entire change. I had some precious seasons, never to be forgotten, with these little earnest ones, who seemed more anxious than I can tell you; and when one after another came to tell me of their feelings and intentions, my cup of happiness was full. I felt that they needed instruction now as much as before; so our little meetings continued. I found less interference from the parents and older people than ever before. The superstition is passing away.

"I had the privilege of being among the number when the children were examined for admittance to the church. Some of their answers thrilled my very soul. Oh! I could see then, better than ever before, what Bible instruction had done for them. This examination was so different from one which Miss P—— had attended four years before. Such erroneous questions were asked and answers given, that it was heart-sickening. Our work of seven years at Church Hill has not been labor in vain. It would be wrong for me to feel otherwise.

"As ever, your friend,

"SUSAN H. CLARK."

Eastville, Va.

At Eastville, on the Eastern Shore of Virginia, the Misses Patten and Doxy have labored with singular devotion and good success. Their little, rude house, with its two rooms, has been the recognized headquarters of what little moral force was to be found in that county. These two missionaries, isolated and ostracized by the whites, have at last compelled the respect and respectful treatment of those who despised them, and have had great influence in raising the colored people from the superstition and barbarism of their manner of religious worship, and from the destruction of the intemperance prevailing among all classes.

Mrs. Jessie Rupert, at

in the midst of her former friends and neighbors, became the subject of most violent opposition and of complete ostracism, as soon as it was discovered that she bore our commission and was trying to teach a few colored children in night-school. Since that time Mrs. Rupert has been employed by the Association in full service as a teacher and missionary.

Miss L. F. Hayes and Miss M. A. Brewer have continued their mission educationally and religiously at and report a pleasant year, full of good results.

Miss Susan Clapp was the principal of the public school in Washington, N. C.

Mrs. Gerrish and Miss Ward taught among the outcast people on Hilton Head Island, in a field that has been cultivated longer than almost any other in educational work for the Freedmen.

The peculiar circumstances of the people on these islands, their almost entire separation from the white people, the character of the population, being the drift of Georgia and South-Carolina that followed Sherman's army, and the unwise course of the government for the last eight years in treating them as children and paupers, has made the Sea Islands about as hopeless a mission field as can be found in all the South.

Miss Clary and Miss Johnson have continued their mission now for the fourth year on Ladies Island.

In spite of all the discouragements already named, these faithful and devoted missionaries cling to this, their chosen field, and their long work tells for good upon the poor people around them.

Miss E. P. Hayes reports a very pleasant year in Raleigh, N. C.

The results of her three years' labor in this school are very manifest, in the advancement of her pupils, and in the zeal with which they have been inspired toward things right and pure. If Miss Hayes's Northern friends could visit her school-room, they would recognize many adornments and comforts which have come in answer to her appeals for help, and there would be but one sentiment as to the wisdom of the investment.

In Southern and South-western Georgia, the following missionaries have labored at the points named:

Miss Clark and Miss Cooke, at Thomasville; Miss Wilkins and Miss Harrold, at Bainbridge; Miss Colburn and Miss Burnett, at Newton; Miss Addlington, at Berne; Miss Dickson, at Fort Gaines; Miss Stansbury and Miss Kinsley, at Cuthbert; Miss Owen and Miss Smith, at Darien; and Miss Janes, at Brunswick.

On account of our straitened treasury, we have been obliged to discontinue some of these country schools. In view of this necessity, Mr. Clark writes from Thomasville as follows:

"THE CONTRAST.

"We have been here three years, and have worked against wind and tide, in the face of the opposition of whites, and largely without the coöperation of the blacks, who were too ignorant to comprehend the value of instruction. One difficulty after another has been surmounted. Now we would push ahead. There are stragglers yet; but the freedmen generally are coming into line, and eager to march. One, two, three years' more work in these counties will be worth far more than what has already been done.

"VALUE OF THE TEACHERS.

"Take away the railroads, and the telegraph, and cotton-gins, and sugar-mills, and improved plows, and guano—take away the court-house from each county site, and every one of the lawyers and all the doctors, but leave the teacher. Society, white and black, will go backward and downward without her.

"TEACHERS BESOUGHT TO RETURN.

"The freedmen have done much the past year. At this point they have raised about $275 toward current expenses. They feel that they must have the 'Yankee ladies' return this fall. They can not think that they have just crossed the threshold of the temple of learning only to take a backward step and have the door closed upon them, they know not for how long. The parents say,

"'You uns may go home an' rest, but we shall look for you early this fall. If you stays away, every thing will go down. We can't hold each other up, 'cause we'se not strong enuf. We like de Yankees, an' can trust' um; an' we knows dey works for de love of doing good. Is you uns coming back? We will send a petition Norf for you; we must have you, an' we'll do de best we can to raise more money for you nex year.'

"It would be such a shame to leave the whites, too, who in spite of themselves are learning that Yankees are not so bad as they have been painted by the daubing newspaper men of the South. They peer at the teachers through closed blinds, stare and occasionally laugh at them in church; but they do not despise them. Said a Georgia-born dame the other day, 'A Yankee girl has more sense than ten Southern women.' A gentleman also said, 'The men respect the teachers; the women are the most bitter.'

"Thank God that during these dark days, since the close of the war, the benevolent societies of the North have been able to keep such a force in the conquered States. Their weakness has been their strength, and a single woman has accomplished more than could a regiment of soldiers. And shall these effectual workers be withdrawn? I wish the New-England ministers, and the ministers of the Middle and Western States, would answer. In churches that are not poor, I wish the pastor would take a Sunday vote upon the subject—Shall the A. M. A. recall half its workers? shall this church maintain a teacher in the South?"

With the exception of the teachers in the Normal School in Jacksonville, our teachers in Florida have been accepted by the school authorities as public-school teachers, and thus have derived part of their support from the public fund.

Under this arrangement, Miss Gardiner and Miss Evelith have continued at Gainesville, Miss Auld and Miss Bowker at St. Augustine, and Miss Blood at Monticello. Miss Paige and Miss Cargill have labored at Tallahassee, and Miss Stowe, Miss Kidder, Miss Crowell, and Miss Amsden in Marion County.

To the above enumerated mission-stations and teachers in the different States there should be added twenty-seven other stations in which schools have been taught by forty teachers—mostly colored teachers who have been taught in our normal schools.

CHURCH WORK.

Washington, D. C.

Rev. George N. Marden resigned his work in connection with the Lincoln Mission in February, and was succeeded by Rev. George G. Collins. The most apparent fruits in this mission are gathered from the large Sabbath-school, under the superintendence of Mr. J. A. Cole, and the peculiarly interesting and successful night-school of pupils under the charge of Mr. Brown. This is believed to be the largest evening school for colored students ever organized. The Sabbath-school numbers over eight hundred. It enlists its teachers from the different churches in the city—more largely from the Congregational church than any other. The thirty-five teachers in the night-school are students from Howard University.

No church organization has yet been effected, but it is proposed within a short time to gather the few converts into a church as the nucleus of future Christian work in the right direction.

Hampton, Va.

A church was organized in connection with the Normal School, with fifteen members, in November, 1869.

Beaufort, N. C.

The church here was organized in November, 1870, with eight members.

The pastor, Rev. Edward Bull, writes respecting the religious work in Beaufort last winter:

"There is now in progress here the most powerful revival which has been felt since the war. The feeling is exceedingly deep and earnest, and the excitement is of the highest and wildest character.

"Meetings are held in the colored Methodist church every night in the week, and continued till twelve o'clock, or even later. The exercises are of the most emotional and demonstrative kind. Women go into a perfect frenzy of excitement and roll on the floor for two or three hours together, screaming and crying, 'Lord, take me,' 'Jesus, save me,' till, utterly exhausted, they fall asleep, or experience something which they call 'coming through,' when they jump up in an ecstasy of joy, and shouting 'Glory, glory, hallelujah,' at the top of their voices till they are hoarse, run all over the house, hugging indiscriminately every man, woman, and child, white or black, that they may come to, and telling them with the most extravagant gesticulations that 'Jesus died for me,' 'Jesus is a precious Saviour!' Men walk all round the house on their knees, praying and shouting with the full compass of their voices, clapping their hands violently, while the responses—the 'Amens,' 'Do, Lord,' 'Yes, yes,' 'Just now, Lord,' 'Glory, glory,' etc.—in endless amount and variety, come up 'like the sound of many waters,' from every part of the house. And then they sing—as only they can sing—all joining at the top of their voices, swaying their bodies to the time of the music, and clapping their hands in the most frantic manner.

"The religious interest commenced among the boys in our prayer-meeting, and has extended among the colored people. We hold our regular services—on Sunday, Sabbath-school at one o'clock, preaching at two o'clock; on Wednesday evening, portion of the Scriptures; on Saturday evening, prayer-meeting. Since the unusual interest commenced, we have added a third service on Sunday at seven o'clock. In all our meetings there has been a deep, earnest feeling, but—with a single exception—we have not had a shout or noisy demonstration.

"Yesterday morning, when we opened the school—after a week's vacation—the religious feeling was too deep to permit the scholars to pursue their studies. All seemed desirous to seek and secure the salvation of their souls. And when one of the scholars came in who had just begun to rejoice in a new-found Saviour, and by some motion or expression showed her joy and happiness, their feelings were deeply stirred, and they broke out into weeping, and sobbing, and praying. The regular exercises of the school were set aside, and the teachers passed around among them, speaking such words of counsel and comfort as they were able. The neighbors and parents came in, to the number of fifteen or twenty, and looked on in wonder and amazement. Indeed, nothing prevented the breaking-up into a noisy, demonstrative 'meeting,' but the strict discipline of the school. At length they were dismissed in regular order, the scholars passing out one by one. To-day it is more quiet, but the religious feeling is too deep to allow of much study. About a dozen of our scholars are indulging a Christian hope."

Dudley, N. C.

Rev. John Scott, Pastor.

The work of the Association at this point has been unique. In some of the counties adjacent, the colored people had suffered more than usual hardship and violence from vindictive whites in the Ku-Klux Klan.

A tract of seven hundred acres of land was purchased at Dudley and divided into ten and twenty-acre lots, and then plundered and fleeing families were invited to come and put up their cabins, and pay the first cost of their patches as they could raise the money.

In this colony, and for the other colored people around, a school was opened, and, through the assistance of the Bureau, a commodious and, for that country, a fine school-house has been erected, which furnishes a convenient chapel for the Sabbath services.

Early in the winter, a deep religious interest was manifest in connection with the Sabbath-school and the prayer-meeting of the day-school. The better part of the colored people, representing three or four different denominations, were found desirous of a church organization. For some miles around, there was no church of any kind for this large colored population. Out of this material, from the remnants of several churches broken up by the war, twelve members, carefully selected, and three young converts, were united in a church of Christ, with a creed and covenant which held to all the essentials for a true Christian brotherhood and shut out no disciple.

God's blessing was on the organization. A deep, earnest, intelligent spirit of inquiry after the way of life was manifest in the prayer-meetings and Sabbath service. At the organization, the church had asked for the ordination of their teacher, Mr. John Scott, to the ministry of the Gospel among them. Few pastors have been so received and obeyed in the Gospel as Mr. Scott by his flock. The church has more than doubled its original membership, and while it will not, in that wretched country, hold any marked place in the church work of North-Carolina, it will be a light and comfort and salvation to many of the poor and struggling families around, and a model to those who are beyond.

The present membership of the church is 35. The Sabbath-school numbers 100.

Wilmington, N. C.

Report by Rev. Henry B. Blake:

"We have maintained a Sabbath-school and a preaching service in our mission-chapel on the Sabbath, and our congregations have often been as large as two hundred. We have also maintained a prayer-meeting on Thursday evenings. On the 3d day of May, we organized a Congregational church of eleven members. We are hoping that the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon our schools will soon give great enlargement to the church.

"At the Brewer Orphan Asylum we have maintained the school for the children and a night-school for the young people in the neighborhood. This school had as many as fifty scholars, and was continued through the autumn, winter, and spring.

"We began a Sabbath morning service in the school-room at the asylum in the autumn, and continued it through the winter and spring. We have prayer-meetings on Sabbath evenings and Wednesday evenings. Miss Mary Kildare, who took charge of the asylum in October, did a large amount of missionary work among the people in the neighborhood of the asylum, and the results were apparent. Our meeting soon grew full and solemn, and a number were hopefully converted. Our new church held a communion service at the asylum on Sunday morning, May 1st, and received three new members."

Plymouth Church, Charleston, S. C.

Rev. J. T. Ford, Pastor.

The past has been a year of the most substantial prosperity this church has ever known. Under God's blessing upon the labors of Rev. Mr. Ford, it has been established more firmly in the principles of the Gospel, and has grown in Christian graces and in numbers.

During the year, an eligible lot, worth three thousand dollars, has been secured and paid for by the contributions of the church. Friends at the North have contributed over two thousand dollars for the erection of a frame chapel thirty-five by sixty-five feet. It is hoped that the remaining sum, about fifteen hundred dollars, may be raised within the next six months, and Plymouth Church be provided with a neat and comfortable house of worship, in which we may reasonably expect it to grow until there is need of the church building, for which ample ground is provided, and the church is strong enough to build it. The present membership is one hundred and ninety-five. The Sabbath-school numbers one hundred.

Savannah, Ga.

The church was organized in 1868 with sixteen members. Rev. Robert Carter, an ex-slave of Howell Cobb, has labored for two years as pastor of the church.

The year past has been a prosperous one. There have been fifteen additions to the church, making the present number sixty-five.

Through Mr. Carter's efforts, the city of Savannah has been induced to give the church a well-located lot for their chapel and church, and we hope the church will be encouraged and helped by its friends to erect a chapel this year.

Norwich Chapel, Macon, Ga.

Report by Rev. E. E. Rogers, Pastor.

"The members, with but few exceptions, have given marked evidence of growth in grace. In the matter of purity of life, I think that but few Northern churches can show a better record. We have had two serious cases of discipline, and one member has been excommunicated.

"There has been a growing harmony of feeling among members, and now a truly loving spirit pervades the church. We have had a season of gentle refreshing, and God has given us valuable additions to our church. Sixteen have been added by profession since the first of February, seven of whom are men, and are able to do something for the support of the church. Two of them are men of marked natural ability, and have already commenced studying for the ministry.

"We now number fifty members. The influence of this little Congregational church is already a leaven of power, and many other churches will learn from us, if they do not take our polity."

MISSION WORK.

"Neighborhood prayer-meetings have been held during the year with good results. We have an interesting mission-field in the south-western portion of the city. It was a greatly neglected field, and when we took possession last winter, wickedness ran riot through the whole neighborhood. A room was secured, and a Sabbath-school started, under the charge of Miss E. W. Abbott. A religious work immediately followed. Frequent preaching services and prayer-meetings have been held, and several conversions have resulted. The change in the character of the neighborhood is a matter of notoriety."

"THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL

has been, from its beginning, under the charge of Miss E. M. Barnes. It numbers three hundred and fifty scholars, and is the largest in the city. The teachers are nearly all members of our church, and have had the advantages of good instruction in Lewis High-School. We have just had made for us a large and beautiful library-case, and are aided to pay for it by a gift of twenty dollars, from the Chapel-street Sabbath-school of New-Haven. We begin the summer with a library of about three hundred volumes, a part of them being second-hand books, just received from Milford, Connecticut. The Sabbath-school pays for its own papers.

"A Sabbath-school prayer-meeting, held immediately after the session of the school, is a very interesting service, and has been kept up with interest nearly a year.

"There has been no general religious interest in Lewis High-School. Prayer meetings have been held in some of the rooms, and some of the scholars have been converted.

"In conclusion, allow me to say I am more and more impressed with the wisdom of the Association, in directing so much attention to the planting of pure churches. A higher standard of piety is much needed in this Southern land. Our work is slow and we must be patient; but it will succeed at last, because God is with it.'

Andersonville, Ga.

The Congregational church in this gloomy and desolate region has held a steady course through the year, increasing in numbers and influence upon the community. Rev. Mr. Rogers has come down from Macon on appointed Sabbaths for communion seasons; but the work in the church, as well as the teaching in the day, and night, and Sabbath-schools, has been wrought by our faithful teachers, Miss Laura A. Parmele and Miss Maria L. Root, assisted during part of the year by Mr. Julius Wood.

MIDDLE-WEST DEPARTMENT.

AND

WESTERN FREEDMAN'S AID COMMISSION.

OFFICE, 176 ELM STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Secretary and Treasurer.

Rev. E. M. CRAVATH.

General Agent.

LEVI COFFIN.

Advisory Board.

Hon. WILLIAM PENN NIXON, Rev. HENRY D. MOORE,
Rev. GEORGE M. MAXWELL, EDWARD HARWOOD, Esq.,
JAMES W. SIBLEY, Esq.

Two important changes have been made in this department during the year.

On the 4th of March, by a unanimous vote of the Board of Directors of the Western Freedman's Aid Commission, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"Having carefully considered the subject of the transfer of the work and property of the Western Freedman's Aid Commission, and being satisfied that a distinct and separate existence is no longer demanded by the best interests of the great work extended to the Commission, we therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we, the Board of Directors of the Western Freedman's Aid Commission, by the power given us in Article V. of the Act of Incorporation, and also by the resolution adopted March 16th, 1870, at the annual meeting of the Commission, do hereby transfer the work and property of the Commission to the American Missionary Association of New-York City, to be used by said Association in the interests of impartial Christian education in the South; and we hereby authorize and instruct the President of the Commission, William Penn Nixon, and the Treasurer, James F. Larkin, to sign, with the Board of Directors, the deeds necessary to effect the transfer of the real estate of the Commission to said American Missionary Association. Said American Missionary Association shall assume all the liabilities of the Commission. In testimony whereof we hereunto affix our names in writing, as prescribed by the constitution.

"Levi Coffin,	William Penn Nixon,
E. Harwood,	George M. Maxwell,
A. Ritchie,	William C. Gray,
J. P. Walker,	R. S. Rust,
J. Webb, Jr.,	J. B. Stewart,
E. M. Cravath,	Henry D. Moore."

In accordance with this vote, the transfer of the real estate of the Western Freedman's Aid Commission was then legally made to the American Missionary Association.

The following extract from the final address of the directors to their friends and supporters shows the generous and fraternal spirit in which this was done:

"The members of the Commission having set their great movement in motion in the West, and having impressed their plans and ideas of educating and developing the Freedmen, in the work throughout the South-west, have felt for the last year that the mission of their organization was about completed, and have been looking about them for an association to which they could turn over the work with an assurance that it would be carried on in a manner satisfactory to themselves and their friends and supporters. They have decided in favor of the American Missionary Association, for the reasons that it is less open to the charge of sectarianism, and its managers more thoroughly familiar and imbued with the plans, spirit, and workings of the Commission than any other. For more than three years we have been working through their officers and agents, and they through ours, without a jar or a word of discord. We feel, therefore, that we can leave our work to them with an assurance that it will be completed after the plans and in the spirit in which we began it. The change will cause no pause in any department. Not a school will stop, nor a teacher cease his labors."

The second change was made by the executive officers of the Association, by which the office at Cincinnati was closed with the fiscal year, except the general agency of the venerable Levi Coffin, and the Middle consolidated with the Eastern Department. The following is, therefore, the last separate report for this field of work:

I. CHURCHES.

1. The Church of Christ, Berea, Ky.

Rev. John G. Fee, Pastor. Rev. J. A. R. Rogers, Associate.

This church was organized in 1863 with 9 members. Its present membership is 151, of whom 17 were received during the year past. The number of pupils in the Sabbath-school is 232. The church helps to maintain in the region of Berea six mission Sabbath-schools, containing in all 580 scholars. There are also preaching stations, supplied regularly by members of this church.

2. The Church of Christ, South-Fork, Ky.

Rev. George Candee, Pastor.

This church, twenty miles from Berea, was organized before the war, by Rev. J. G. Fee, with 6 members. Its present membership is 9, three having been received during the year. Since its organization many have moved away, and four have died. Brother Candee has also four other regular Sabbath appointments and three irregular ones, besides many other extra appointments.

3. The Church of Christ, Camp Nelson, Ky.

Rev. Gabriel Burdett, Pastor.

This church was organized September 25th, 1864, with 15 members. The present membership is 191, 12 having been added during the year on profession of faith. The Sabbath-school numbers about 200.

The pastor writes:

"The church is increasing in firmness, and is growing, although we have had no protracted meeting. We have been receiving one and two at different times during the year. There is a better state of things existing now than ever before since I have been the pastor of this church. The members are becoming settled in the faith of Jesus Christ in place of their former 'isms.'"

4. The Union Church, Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. Henry S. Bennett, Pastor.

This church was organized March 22d, 1868, with 24 members. The present membership is 53, of whom 14 united the past year on profession of faith. The Sabbath-school numbers 300. There are six neighborhood prayer-meetings held weekly by the teachers and students. The average attendance is about eighteen.

One of the teachers, after giving their plan of meeting, says:

"These meetings are in almost every instance inquiry meetings. When they close, every one present is spoken with personally. The students enter into this work heart and soul. Nearly all of them who are Christians are eager to become workers for Jesus; but we are careful to train them gradually to this peculiar work, and allow only those to engage in it whom we know we can depend upon. No student is expected to attend more than one outside meeting a week, and is then always accompanied by a teacher.

"Each week twenty-five of us are engaged two or three hours in mission work, visiting the sick, inducing children to come to Sabbath-school and their parents to attend church, distributing tracts, reading the Bible, singing, praying, and conversing on personal religion with those we meet. Our Sabbath-school has increased from 90 to 300. One young girl brought in at one time 17 new scholars. Most of this work is done on Saturday, when the students are at liberty.

"A novel and interesting feature of our work is our open-air meetings. They are held in the street, at some prominent place, immediately after the Sabbath-school. There are enough students present to sustain the singing. A crowd numbering sometimes more than 300 soon collects. Passers-by stop to listen, carriages and street-cars drive slowly past. More earnest, loving entreaties to come to Jesus I never heard, and they fall upon the ears of many who know no other religious service save our open-air meeting. At the close, all Christians are expected to go to work, speaking a word here, handing a tract there, planting the good seed in the ground that has just been softening under the Spirit's influence.

"Praying people somewhere have taken this school upon their hearts, and we are also bearing it up before God. He has already helped us wonderfully, granting more than we had dared to ask or expect."

5. The Second Congregational Union Church, Memphis, Tenn.

Rev. W. W. Mallory, Pastor.

This church was organized February 2d, 1868, with 21 members. Its present membership is 62, of whom 5 were received during the past year. The Sabbath-school numbers 50. One preaching station is maintained.

6. The Union Congregational Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Rev. E. O. Tade, Pastor.

Was organized June 9th, 1867, with 14 members. Present membership 37, of whom none has been received during the past year. Pupils in Sabbath-school, 150. An effort is being made to build a chapel, which is very much needed.

7. The First Congregational Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. C. W. Francis, Pastor.

This church was organized May 26th, 1867, with 10 members. Its present number is 80, of whom 20 were received during the past year. The Sabbath-school numbers 250. There are two preaching stations; also two mission Sabbath-schools in which are 70 pupils. The church has raised during the year $484.65; of this $197.65 were raised for benevolent purposes, $52.65 for the A. B. C. F. M., $25 for the American Congregational Union, and $120 for the American Missionary Association. The pastor writes:

"The church is now raising $40 each month for the purchase of a church-lot, each member pledging a definite sum, thus showing their disposition to help themselves to the full extent of their ability before asking for aid. There have been additions to the membership at each monthly communion season, save four, since January, 1868."

8. The Union Church, Talladega, Ala.

Rev. H. E. Brown, Pastor.

It was organized May 17th, 1868, with 18 members. The present number is 50, of whom 13 were received during the past year, 7 on profession and 6 by letter. The Sabbath-school numbers 175. One preaching station and 13 mission Sabbath-schools are connected with this church.

At the close of the year, Rev. H. E. Brown returned North to spend a year in study, and has been succeeded by the Rev. J. J. Strong, a graduate of Union Seminary, New-York City.

9. Plymouth Church, Montgomery, Ala.

Rev. J. A. Bedient, Pastor.

This church was organized in December last with 13 members. The Sabbath-school numbers about 100. Having no building, it has been laboring under great disadvantages; but has been doing a great missionary work in the city. Public services on the Sabbath have been held in the room occupied by the United States Circuit Court, and there has been a steady increase in the congregations. The great want is now a suitable building for public worship, and comparatively little can be done till this is secured.

10. Union Church, Marion, Ala.

This church was organized with 12 members, and has been supplied a portion of the year with preaching by Rev. J. Silsby, of Selma. Rev. G. W. Andrews, of East-Hampton, Ct., has now been secured as pastor of the church and superintendent of the school. The Sabbath-school numbers about 100 members.

Last year, a dormitory for boys, costing $17,000, was erected. Now the ground has been broken for a young ladies' hall, which will cost $40,000. Half of it is already subscribed, and a large part of the material is already on the ground.

Many of the students brought money to pay the bills for the whole term in advance, and several deposited sums ranging from two hundred to four hundred dollars. Others brought certificates of sums deposited in banks. This they have earned by hard labor at low wages, and they appreciate its value. One student has bought some land, and paid for the erection of a house upon it, the rent from which will nearly support him while getting his education.

During the year about twenty students engaged in teaching, and most of them bring back encouraging reports from their schools.

From the annual catalogue we extract the following:

"INSTRUCTORS.—E. A. Ware, A.M.; Thomas N. Chase, A.M.; Mrs. Thomas N. Chase, Mrs. Lucy E. Case, Miss Fannie Gleason, Miss Carrie Gordon, Miss Lucia A. Kingman.

"Students in Normal Department, 89; boarders, 56; day-scholars, 33.

"The PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT (Junior and Middle Classes) and the NORMAL DEPARTMENT are now in operation. The College and Professional Departments will be organized as soon as there is a demand for them.

"In the Agricultural Department a beginning has been made. The cultivation of about five acres of land during the year has furnished the pupils practical instruction in gardening, as well as pleasant and healthful exercise. A much larger tract will be cultivated the next season. The laying out and beautifying of the grounds, under the direction of an eminent landscape gardener, will furnish practical instruction in that branch. Lectures on agriculture and horticulture will be given. It is intended that this department shall become a prominent one in the institution. All the pupils are reckoned as belonging to it.

"THEOLOGICAL CLASS.—A class in theology will be organized in October. It will be open to all, regardless of denomination, who wish to fit themselves for the Christian ministry.

"MODEL SCHOOL.—A primary school of local pupils, under the management of a graduate of a Massachusetts normal school, affords the advanced pupils of the normal department an opportunity to obtain practice in teaching.

"For six years past, various Northern aid societies have been engaged in an educational work in Georgia. The American Missionary Association has done by far the largest part of this work. It has supported schools in all the principal cities and towns in the State, and has expended from its own treasury on school work alone about $200,000. It has been the design, from the first, to establish one central institution for higher education, beginning with normal and preparatory departments, and growing into a college, and finally into a university.

"The Freedman's Bureau, under the wise administration of Colonel J. R. Lewis, Superintendent of Education for Georgia, who entered heartily into these plans, has largely furnished means for their execution.

"Atlanta, because of its central position and healthful climate, was selected as the best place for such an institution. A charter was obtained in October, 1867, and a Board of Trustees formed. The trustees now hold about sixty acres of land on one of the highest elevations in the city, and commanding a fine view in all directions. The first building was completed in September, 1869. It is a substantial, four-storied brick building, neatly finished, and contains parlors, dining-rooms, kitchen, bath-rooms, and dormitories for forty lady pupils. It has been very much crowded during the year. Another building of about the same style and dimensions will be completed in August. In this building are to be temporary school-rooms for the whole school, and dormitories for sixty gentlemen.

"The plan of the institution for the immediate future contemplates also a central building for chapel, school-rooms, lecture-rooms, cabinet, library, etc. Will not some one furnish the necessary funds?"

4. Talladega College, Talladega, Ala.

A charter for Talladega College was received February 17th, 1869.

Value of property, $50,000. Number of pupils, 155.

Foster Hall has been completed and furnished during the year, so that the facilities for accommodating the students from abroad have been more than doubled. By the hearty coöperation of the Board of Normal School Commissioners, the public money appropriated for the support of a Normal School at Talladega has been expended for the support of this institution.

The Association has continued to aid three churches in Kansas during the year. Rev. J. H. Payne, at Lawrence, has enjoyed some seasons of religious interest. Having labored faithfully for his little flock nearly five years, he reluctantly came to the conclusion to retire from the missionary field at the close of October, 1870. He writes October 16th as follows: "The church feel quite anxious for a minister, and have inquired what steps they are to take to secure one. They are unwilling to go back to the old system of unqualified teachers."

Extract of resolution of the church passed at the dismission of their pastor, Rev. Mr. Payne:

"And we hereby also express our obligations and heartfelt gratitude to the American Missionary Association for sending him to us and sustaining him here during our weakness and inability to support a preacher of the Gospel, and we pray God to send speedily to us a minister who may take the place of our beloved brother in the Lord Jesus Christ."

Rev. J. E. Weir writes hopefully of the new church at Leavenworth, organized about a year since. Ten members have been received during the year. His Sabbath-school numbers forty-five.

Rev. W. W. Weir, (colored,) a brother of Rev. J. E. Weir, succeeded Rev. J. H. Platt at Topeka, and labored during three quarters of the year. He has recently withdrawn, and the church is now without a pastor. The Association has aided each of the Kansas churches during the past year only to the extent of one half the support of the pastor.

As the American Home Missionary Society has a large work in Kansas, and that of this Association is confined to these three churches, arrangements are in contemplation for their transfer to the former Society.

Under operation of the fifteenth amendment, public sentiment in Missouri toward public schools for the colored people has improved. There are, to be sure, many parts of the State where they have not yet had schools. Our missionaries have started several which were afterward sustained mainly by public funds. When their salaries are in this way assumed by the School Board, they continue to conduct Sabbath-schools and perform the part of true missionaries as before.

A NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Miss Emma G. Spencer writes from Spring Valley, April 2d:

"We organized a Sunday-school on the 20th of March with twenty scholars and two teachers. Last Sabbath we had thirty scholars and four teachers. Many more will soon come. A library is needed very much, but the people are not able to bear the expense."

We continued to receive hearty coöperation from Hon. G. A. Parker, State Superintendent, and Colonel F. A. Seely, Bureau Superintendent. Mr. J. M. Turner, (colored,) holding an appointment as assistant both to the State Superintendent and Colonel Seely, rendered efficient service in locating our teachers under State patronage. Mr. Beekman ministered to our little church at Westport, assisted by his family in the very successful Sunday-school, until October 1st, 1870. The school-house in which they worship is very small and of little value. The church is able to contribute very little toward the support of a pastor.

At Lebanon, Mr. Mobley (colored) has organized a church. His support, as a teacher, has been derived mainly from the public school fund. The people have coöperated with the Bureau and American Missionary Association in erecting a new school-house, where the church now worships.

We are negotiating for the sale of our property at Warrensburg, where our former missionaries, Rev. M. H. Smith and wife, are permanently located. Mr. Smith is at present county superintendent of public schools.

At Fulton, Ironton, and Palmyra, we kept up a connection with the people through teachers under our commission, but having local support.

At Jefferson City, Lincoln Institute bids fair to become a flourishing institution, under the management of Mr. R. B. Foster, Principal. The State voted a conditional appropriation of $5000 annually, and the conditions have been met, so that a building is being erected at a cost of some $15,000.

As this institution began under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, we have special reason to glory somewhat in its present promise of usefulness.

CASTE IN THE CHURCH.

At a recent date Mr. Foster writes:

"There is no church here that practically protests against the sin of the age, caste. They are white churches and colored churches. If I remain permanently in the school, I must have a church (though it have but three members) in which my pupils and I can unite and be equally at home."

At Booneville and some other places, the Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends coöperated with the American Missionary Association in supplying teachers.

In Southern Illinois, the Free-will Baptists have fully sustained, during the past year, their school and mission work among the Freedmen. The latter, escaped during the war from the neighboring slave States, and, having determined not to return, have had a hard struggle with poverty. The prejudice against them was hardly less than in the Southern States. The great yield of the berry crop last season enabled many to save something. The new house at Cairo is commodious, and well filled with pupils. Our Free-Will Baptist brethren have expressed a desire that the American Missionary Association continue its coöperation with them.

* Supported by Free-Will Baptists.

The free school system of Arkansas is working well. Our buildings at Port Smith and Pine Bluff have been occupied by the teachers first commissioned by the American Missionary Association, but afterward supported by public funds. We have coöperated with the State and county superintendents in supplying Christian teachers at many other places. Students from Chicago Theological Seminary were thus put into this field, and have done a valuable missionary work, in addition to school-teaching. The following extract from a letter of Mr. J. D. Eaton, at Yellow Bayou, relates to a Freedman who has acquired some property, and in a part of whose house the school was held till the school-house was completed. There had never been a school in that region before:

"It was the father's custom at night, when his work in the cotton-field was done, to have his daughters bring their books and read the day's lesson to him, he pointing out the words to them, although he did not understand a letter himself. They read together and operated as a mutual spur and check to one another. At the close of the term, he assured me that he should not allow them to forget, during the summer, any thing they had learned; and said that if they could not secure another teacher by the first of next January, (when the cotton-picking season is over,) he should send his two daughters to Memphis, to be educated there."

At Fayetteville, one of our experienced teachers, Miss Dora Ford, labored amid many privations, owing to the want of a comfortable house. But the County Superintendent, Colonel E. E. Henderson, having donated a site to the American Missionary Association, a good house has lately been erected, with Bureau aid. At Lake Village, Chicot County, the Association has also come into the possession of valuable school property. Our house at Pine Bluff has been purchased by the School Board. That at Fort Smith will be repaired from the public funds, in return for its use.

At Little Rock, a donation of ten acres to the American Missionary Association was voted by the City Council, with the understanding that a normal school should be founded there. The Freedmen's Bureau made an appropriation toward a building; but as yet there is delay in the execution of the deed by the executive officer of the city. A good normal school, open to the Freedmen, is much needed in this State, and we confidently expect, under Providence, that one will be in operation at the capital some time during the coming year. Captain W. M. Colby, Bureau Superintendent, has not only coöperated heartily, but has often voluntarily acted as the agent of the Association. He is entitled to the gratitude of all friends of the cause of impartial education.

The work in Louisiana the past year has been under the immediate supervision of Rev. J. W. Healy, and has made commendable progress. As remarked in our last report, the most eligible sites for chapels and school-houses had been selected, and the foundation for our work in this State had been laid. Land was cheerfully donated, the colored people pledged the erection, and the Bureau furnished materials. As a result, we have school buildings in Amite, Port Hickey, Moodyville, Baton Rouge, Lockport, Greenville, Gretna, Algiers, New-Iberia, Point Coupee, Gentilly, Tangipahoa, Covington, Lovingville, and New-Orleans. In all of these we have day and Sunday-schools, and in most of them preaching has been enjoyed. These buildings are designed for the double purpose of school and church, and as the work of elementary instruction will be assumed by the State and a church element is developed, they can be made into neat and tasteful chapels. The cessation of the Bureau work, and our late occupancy of the field, alone prevented multiplying these educational and religious centres.

Such was the necessity for religious teachers among the Freedmen, and such the demand for our coöperation, that planters proffered temporary rooms and churches, their chapels free of rent, and by the rental aid from the Government we have commissioned during the year, for this field, sixty-four teachers, and have planted and sustained some fifty schools. The Superintendent of Education concedes that outside of New-Orleans the American Missionary Association has done more for the education of the Freedmen than all other agencies combined.

Up to this year, our organization had done comparatively little in Louisiana. While it early sent teachers here as elsewhere, and planted the first Freedmen's school in the State, yet, upon General Banks occupying the field, it transferred its teachers to military jurisdiction. Considering the newness of our recent work in the State, and the unprepared soil, we have great reason for gratitude to God for so abundant a harvest.

In addition to our elementary schools, we have planted two schools for higher learning, both incorporated institutions—the Collegiate Institute at Baton Rouge, and Straight University at New-Orleans. Both will serve an important purpose in the educational work of the State. The latter deserves especial mention.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

The following extract from the catalogue recently issued affords a sketch of its history and pfospective plans:

"New-Orleans, the commercial metropolis of the South-west, seemed especially to demand a school of higher learning; for one half of its population are of African descent, thousands of whom, free born, are persons of wealth and culture.

A site was selected on one of the most beautiful streets in the city. The American Missionary Association purchased the grounds, and the Freedmen's Bureau assured the erection of buildings to the value of $20,000. An act of incorporation was secured June 25th, 1869, with power to confer all such degrees and honors as are conferred by universities in the United States of America, and representative men in sympathy with the work were chosen a Board of Trustees.

"While the buildings were being erected, a normal department, numbering about sixty students, was opened in one of the churches. February, 1870, the building was completed, and at once occupied. The providence of God seemed to favor the enterprise from the beginning; and within these brief months more than eight hundred students have been instructed. Its beautiful and well-arranged apartments, ample modern facilities for instruction, scholarly and consecrated teachers, and the high moral tone of its culture render it preëminent as a school for youth.

"The Theological Department was organized with reference to fitting the ministers of the churches of Freedmen for their sacred and responsible work. Aid was furnished by that generous friend of the American Missionary Association, Deacon Josiah Reed, of South-Weymouth, Mass. Instruction has been given during the year in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity and in pastoral theology; and colored ministers of different denominations have availed themselves of its advantages. The instruction has necessarily been preparatory. Already good results are seen in the higher aspirations of the ministers, and in the order and purity of their churches. No class needs a Christian education more than the ministers and missionaries of Freedmen. As is the minister so will be the church. To meet the necessity of this department, it is proposed, on this memorial year of the Pilgrims, whose descendants have ever encouraged an educated ministry, to build in New-Orleans a memorial seminary, whose doors shall be open to all who desire to consecrate their lives to Christian and missionary work. To secure this result, the President of the University is authorized to make a special appeal to the friends of this enterprise at home and abroad.

"Lectures will commence the first Monday in October, and continue six months. Any person of Christian character intending to enter the ministry, and qualified to pursue with advantage the prescribed course of instruction, can enter this department free of charge.

"The Law Department was established because colored students are excluded from the law schools of the South. The enfranchisement of the Freedman should open to him, in a free republic, every avenue of usefulness, and proffer him every position of honor and trust. While primarily designed for this class, there will be no discrimination of race. Gentlemen of distinguished legal learning, and in cordial sympathy with the work, have pledged their influence and instruction.

"The Medical Department has been organized, and a faculty of eminent resident physicians and surgeons has been elected. Lectures will commence as soon as buildings and cabinets have been secured.

"The legislative act which established this department gave its professors the use of the Charity Hospital as a school of practical instruction. In this hospital there are generally about one thousand patients. Members of classes will have gratuitous admission to all the wards.

"For the Collegiate Department the requirements for admission and the course of study will be the same as adopted by the best American colleges.

"The Normal Department, arranged with reference to the education of teachers, comprises a thorough and systematic course of instruction, and pupils will be made familiar with those branches required to be taught in public schools. The course is interspersed with lectures, discussions, and model classes.

"The Academic Department is designed to prepare students for College; but it is also adapted to meet the wants of those who desire a thorough English education.

"The Elementary Department was temporarily organized to furnish instruction to that large class who have but little knowledge of the rudiments of an English education. Many of these are adults, and some have a fair education in their native language. This class is instructed in day and night-schools, and is an interesting feature of the University."

WHAT IS NEEDED.

The university must be endowed, to be permanently useful. Funds for scholarships and professorships are therefore needed. Christian beneficence can not find a more remunerative investment than for these purposes. Hundreds of young men and women of rare talent and promise are waiting for the means of education. Every Christian scholar is like "a city set upon a hill." The South needs this illumination. A great and providential work is intrusted to this institution, and the stewards of Christian beneficence everywhere are invited to remember it in their prayers and aid it by their gifts.

Mr. Healy writes as follows of CHURCH RECONSTRUCTION.

"A marked feature of our work in the South is that of church reconstruction, especially among the Freedmen. Churches in sufficient numbers may be found, but not after the New Testament model in principle or in practice. The Freedman is proverbially religious; but his religion is generally blind credulity, his worship fetich, and his practices immoral. As a rule, he has no intelligent conception of Christian doctrines, nor correct expression of Christian life. But a fraction of the ministry can either read or write, and but few of its members are even moral. This is the logical sequence of slavery. A Pilgrim Christianity presupposes both an intelligent and Christian morality. The church and the school-house are twin sisters in this work of human elevation, and essential in the culture of the mind and heart. To secure this end, the chapel is used as the sanctuary of learning and religion, and our young ministers, so far as competent, are both teachers and preachers. Churches have been organized in the most eligible centres, and have gathered into their fold the best minds in the communities where they are planted. Their pastors have been instructed so far as their time and our instrumentalities would warrant, in the theological school of the University, and the churches have been elevated by the elevation of their ministers. Already marked results are manifested. Moral purity and the marriage relation have been made fundamental; and though our churches have been small in membership, they have commended themselves for uprightness and order. To them, churches of other denominations look for examples, and thus these little lights are centres of illumination. Thirteen such churches have been planted in this State, and all are gaining in numbers and in influence. Scores of churches might be planted had we the ministers; and the men might be secured, if we had the means to educate them. The ministers of Freedmen can best be educated in the South, and hence the necessity of the schools where they may be trained. To the philanthropist and Christian no wider or greater field of beneficence can be found than in fitting ministers and missionaries to plant Pilgrim churches in this dark domain. Two hundred and fifty years we have been waiting to enter this field of Christian work, and shall it remain a waste when so white for the harvest?"

The need of a pure and intelligent colored ministry is becoming every day more apparent. The following graphic account of scenes in one of the "revival meetings," and which is a fair specimen of all such meetings, will show better than argument the need of an educated ministry:

"They jump, and stamp, and shout, and howl, and clap their hands. Now one woman is taken with the 'power.' She springs from her seat, throws back her head, tosses out her arms, and commences jumping up and down, rising each time more than a foot from the floor. Another woman takes hold of her and steadies her from behind, not seeking to stop or restrain her; but simply to prevent her from hurting herself, or falling upon any one else. Her eyes are shut, her arms flapping wildly, her joints loose; now she throws herself forward, and is hardly kept from falling over the benches; now she jerks back her head, much to the inconvenience of her supporter; suddenly she drops, and is picked up in an utter state of exhaustion. Meanwhile, every thing else has been going on without the least interruption. One man was taken with the 'spirit.' He jumped, and kicked, and threw himself wildly about; three men were required to help him; he fell among the women, threw himself against the posts, turned over benches, and almost knocked down those who were supporting him—acting like a maniac. In other parts of the room, others were more or less affected; some merely jumped up and down; some threw themselves on the floor, and some acted more like howling dervishes than worshipers in a church; but all without effect on the band of 'mourners.' Then the 'preachers' redouble their efforts; they stretch their whole bodies over the railing; great streams of sweat roll down their faces; and above the groaning, above the singing, can be frequently heard a warning to sinners or an entreaty to mourners. In a minute, up jumps a woman from among the mourners with a shout, 'I've shook off de debil. Go 'way, Satan!' 'O Jesus!' and her friends drag her to a seat, and rejoice over her. Instantly another follows, and then another, until in a few moments six or eight are gathered, as having 'j'ined de church.'"

Too much can hardly be said to represent the importance of our church work. It is indeed the fruitage from all our five years' planting. The wisdom of appointing Mr. Healy to superintend this, as well as to coöperate with the Freedmen's Bureau in establishing common schools, and with the trustees in building up Straight University, has been fully vindicated. To the unremitting zeal and energy of Colonel E. W. Mason, Bureau Superintendent, the Association also owes much of its success in Louisiana.

Columbus Union Academy,

under Mr. Bishop, as principal, with some six other teachers, has been no less successful the past year than before. It so commanded the respect of the citizens that they determined to put the old academy for whites, also, under the care of Mr. Bishop. The attendance has been large, and progress such that many of the scholars were prepared to teach during the vacation. From the local school fund derived from the United States lands, some aid was given toward the support of our school, and in consequence, it was wholly free for three months. During the remainder of the term most of the pupils were prompt in the payment of a moderate tuition.

Tougaloo.

The enterprise at this place (ten miles from Jackson) is progressing, much to our satisfaction. A dormitory for male students has been completed, and one for females is nearly done. Some sales of land have been made to thrifty Freedmen, and portions have been rented; while one hundred acres are retained for cultivation by the students, under the superintendency of Mr. Beals. It is hoped that, as in this way many will be enabled to pay part of their expenses by work, the privileges of the institution may be extended to a much greater number than would otherwise be possible.

One main feature of the institution will be the normal department to train colored teachers. Governor Alcorn recommends to the Legislature the purchase of our property, in order to found here a State normal school. If the State in this manner chooses to adopt what has been already well begun, the Association may still perhaps furnish the teachers, and at the same time use the proceeds advantageously elsewhere.

The Sabbath-school at Tougaloo has been particularly interesting. Some white converts as well as colored, with Mr. Beals's family, have been organized into a church. They are calling for a minister of the Gospel.

REVIVAL OF RELIGION AND OF TEMPERANCE.

Miss H. C. Bullard writes from Raymond, Miss.:

"My heart is singing for joy all the time lately. The spirit of God has been and is among us here. Ten or eleven of our pupils have consecrated themselves to God—others seem to be thinking very seriously.

"One very capable young man, a day-scholar last year, and this year, a night-pupil of mine, was ruining himself with whisky. Now, he says, by the help of God, he will never touch another drop. I talked and prayed with and for him last year, but could not obtain that promise; now he makes it freely. It is such a comfort to hear him pray in the young people's meetings. 'Clothed, and in his right mind,' he is a strong contrast to the dirty, ragged, half-drunken man who used to stagger about last year."

At Port Gibson, our school building has been well occupied. A few repairs by the Bureau have greatly improved the property. Our late principal, J. W. Stryker, is now County Superintendent, and the school will doubtless receive important assistance from the public funds the coming term.

By means of the cordial coöperation of Captain H. R. Pease, Bureau Superintendent, and recently State Superintendent of Education, we are enabled to put into the field many more teachers than had been anticipated. Experienced teachers of the A. M. A. were located at Aberdeen, Brookhaven, Grenada, Meridian, Raymond, Rodney, and Vicksburg, as well as other places, in the country districts.

HINDERANCES AT HOME.

Miss Anna M. Somers writes from Brookhaven, Miss:

"One great obstacle to the rapid improvement of these children is their want of language. Words in the text-books which we think exceedingly simple, and to a child with ordinary advantages at home would need no explanation, we find convey no idea to their minds; and when a lazy one comes to recite, there is such a juxtaposition of prepositions and conjunctions, of adjectives and adverbs, and ingenuity in the coinage of words, that one might well wonder how much time was spent in rearranging the sentence so as to have no two words come together that make sense. Words of similar sound but of diverse meaning are used in the wrong place by the parents, and the children learn of them, and it requires great care to eradicate the evils of home training. To assist in this we have asked the more advanced scholars to give each day one mistake in pronunciation or in grammar that they have heard during the last twenty-four hours, and to-day one of them informed me 'that the preachers made a heap of mistakes yesterday.' . . . There is considerable desire among the older pupils to make the most of the opportunities they are now having; but how to improve every moment is one of the many things they have yet to learn. Slavery never taught them that. When we closed for a week's vacation, one boy was just in long division, and when telling the others that they could study some by themselves, I said to him that I supposed he could go no further without help; but, to my surprise, on the Monday morning that we reopened school, he brought two slates covered with examples, and all but one or two correctly performed."

An excellent free-school system has been enacted by the Legislature, which will probably go into operation January 1st, 1871. This will make the demand for teachers still greater, both from the North and from our high and normal schools.

All our schools in Texas have been prosperous. The people seem better able to pay tuition there than in the other States. The Legislature failed to make provision for public schools, and time most valuable to the children of Freedmen is thereby lost. Hundreds of communities have never yet had schools. Entire counties are thus famishing for education. Our school building at Galveston is well constructed and commodious. Here will probably be our only Normal school for Texas, though another is needed in the interior of the State. After the resignation of Rev. J. Welch as Bureau Superintendent, the duties of that office were performed with no less efficiency and sympathy with our Association by Major Louis W. Stevenson. The houses at Houston and Galveston were completed under his supervision. Had it not been for the difficulty in securing sites, many more school-houses might have been erected.

At Brownsville, the Rev. Jeremiah Porter is still enjoying the Lord's blessing on his work. He preaches to the Freedmen once each Sabbath. A school-house has been built for them by the Bureau, and Mrs. Porter will provide a teacher in connection with her own mission seminary. This is an important out-post looking toward farther missionary labors in Mexico, and we have thought it wise to assist in holding it, though the colored population is not large.

LAND MONOPOLY.

W. A. Jones, one of our teachers at Brazoria, Texas, writes as follows:

"Every planter in this county owns from two to thirty thousand acres of land; but the most of them say that they are unable to sell, but want to buy. Mr. ———, who is the most extensive planter here, and who employs the largest number of hands, is not willing to give or sell any land for school purposes. He was one of the most cruel slaveholders in this country."

At Corpus Christi, there is promise of a successful church. A house of worship is greatly needed. Rev. A. Rowe writes from there April 1st, 1870:

"There is a much better state of feeling among the Freedmen here than when I wrote you before. The Spirit of God has touched their hearts. They have become united in their feelings. There are three intelligent and fine-looking persons quite anxious about their salvation—two men and the wife of one of the men. The woman reads and spells very well. She was a member of the Sabbath-school when I was here before in 1866. One of the men is as white as the majority of the rancheros in this country, yet he was a slave before the war. He is a member of the night-school, and learns very fast."

CHINESE MISSIONS.

Total number of pupils in night and Sunday-schools, 329.

Early in the year, Rev. John Kimball was appointed an agent, without salary, to obtain information and consult with the brethren on the Pacific coast about the part the Association should take in the evangelization of the Chinese. The Bay Association (Congregational) passed a resolution inviting us to the work and pledging coöperation, and appointing an advisory committee from their number. Early in the summer, it was determined that the district secretary of the Western Department should visit California and arrange a practical beginning. After visiting and addressing churches in different parts of the State, and fully consulting with the ministers, and carefully inspecting the condition and habits of the Chinese, as well as ascertaining in what places the greater proportion of them were located, and what was being attempted for them by other missionary agencies, it was decided to appoint Mr. Kimball superintendent, and to start night and Sabbath-schools in the towns, where little or nothing was done for them.

There is a hostile public sentiment prevailing in California against these people which in a measure affects the members of some of our churches, and has prevented them from undertaking any missionary work in their behalf. In consequence of this, it was thought advisable that Mr. Kimball visit the churches to induce, if possible, all which had no Chinese Sunday-schools to form them, to awaken an increased interest in those existing, and to tender the coöperation of a missionary in conducting a night-school, also, in the more populous places.

Missionaries were to be sent also where there were no Congregational churches, and where other denominations were doing nothing for these people. Upon this plan, night-schools have been opened at San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento, and Grass Valley, and others will be opened, as soon as teachers can be procured, at Marysville, Oroville, Chico, and various other places. Sunday-schools are multiplying fast, and the interest in them has been greatly quickened within a few months.

From that at Oakland three have united with the First Congregational church. They had been members of Mr. Kimball's class.

The following, from a letter of Miss Jordan, our teacher at Oakland, illustrates the ingenuousness of some of the pupils and the hopefulness of the work:

"At six in the evening, one young man, aged nineteen years, and the Chinese overseer at the cotton-mill at San Antoine, comes regularly to my room for a private lesson in the Bible. He is now searching very anxiously after a better knowledge of the 'good Jesus.' He says, 'I want to know more about him, and so as by and by I like him too; he seem so good.' After three quarters of an hour of study and explanation, we sing 'Happy Land,' and have a short prayer. At one time he asked, 'Is that Jesus you pray, all same as the Jesus John the Baptist says is so good?' He says, 'By and by I will pray too, when I understand better.'"

The Chinese population of San Francisco, according to the late census return, is:

Male adults,	8900
Boys,	877
Female adults,	1769
Girls,	271
Total,	11,817

Estimated number in California, 30,000.

It is probable, therefore, that the number in the United States and territories will fall below eighty thousand. The immigration is now about equal to the average for the last ten years. The demand for their labor continues. They have lately been put upon one division of the Union Pacific, and there is a call for large numbers on railroads in the Southern States.

It will be wise, therefore, to count upon an increase rather than a diminution in this department of our missions.

RECAPITULATION OF WESTERN DEPARTMENT.

Total number taught in the Freedmen's schools, 8800; to read, 7381; to write, 4238; in Sunday-schools, 6937.

We have to report in the Western Department ten graded schools having some claim to be called high-schools, where there was but one a year ago.

Our purpose is still to give one good Normal school to each State as our permanent legacy to the Freedmen, and there is good prospect that this will be accomplished before the end of another year. One of the most encouraging features of the work is the eagerness of the scholars to fit themselves for teachers.

Number of churches formed or reorganized and materially aided by the American Missionary Association in the five States, 21; six more than reported last year. One Sunday-school in Mississippi took up a collection for missions to Africa. There has been a good degree of religious interest, showing that our teachers have not forgotten that they were also Gospel missionaries.

BRAINERD.

Rev. Mr. Thompson, reporting the death of five members of the Brainerd church, says:

"Three of them were natives of Africa, who, in their youth, were captured in their own land, sold into bondage, and were brought here in the last slave-ship that crossed the Atlantic, under the auspices of the English government. Here they heard the Gospel, made a profession in early life, were faithful to the end, and fell asleep in Jesus."

Concerning the general work, he says:

"Our congregations are usually good, and the word of life appears to be listened to with marked attention. Although we can only report two persons as having been received from the world, yet we have a number who lead us to hope that they enjoy a change of heart. We have not been without much anxious care in the church during the year, but we have enjoyed many tokens of divine favor. The work appears to be promising and hopeful, and we are sure that good is being done, and our hearts are made glad."

CHESTERFIELD.

Rev. Mr. Venning reports that during the earlier part of the year some disorders existed that led to the separation of ten members from the church, but all have since been restored, and eight others added on profession of their faith. Concerning the cases of discipline reported, Mr. Venning remarks:

"These frequent excommunications and restorations of members of our churches must seem strange to those acquainted only with churches more intelligent and stable. But, in your work among the Freedmen of the South, you may possibly come to understand better the unavoidableness of such a state of things. Churches formed of material brought by slave-ships from Guinea, and their descendants kept for many generations in a most degrading bondage, must necessarily be very different from those composed of such as the Mayflower landed on Plymouth Rock. I have been struck, in reading some of your communications from the South, to see the great similarity to the condition of our people here. The same forms of superstition and fanaticism, the same ignorance and false views of worship, the same laxness of discipline, all fostered by ignorant and, in some cases, worse than ignorant native preachers, obtain in your country and ours.

"In other respects, there is not much in common in the religious condition of our people and yours. The Freedmen of the South are far in advance of the Jamaica people in their zeal for knowledge, in their consequent rapid improvement, and in their liberality in supporting the institutions of the Gospel, etc. There has been a great falling off in these things in this island; for the people of these West-Indies were, for a few years immediately after emancipation, distinguished for zeal in religion and education; and for giving liberally also to maintain these good things. But it is not so now. The contributions of our churches to the support of the Gospel, etc., are very small. But it is true, also, that their means are small. The general complaint is, that they can get no market for their produce, or, as they express it, 'there is no selling.' Add to this, they are far from the market town, having to carry all their yams, coffee, etc., over twenty miles to Kingston, on their heads or on beasts with hampers. Another fact should be stated. I do not see much of extravagant expenditure of money on useless, hurtful things. Little is spent on tobacco—the only habitual smokers being among the older people—and not much on intoxicating liquors. Their wardrobe,—and here, if in any thing, they would be extravagant if they could—is scanty. Their dress, as they appear in public on Sabbaths, is, as a general thing, decent and becoming their circumstances. Some, however, can scarcely attain to providing decent clothing for themselves and families, and are kept from the house of God in consequence. Their houses too indicate any thing but wealth.

"In speaking thus of the straitened circumstances of our people, I can not, in truthfulness, attribute it to causes altogether independent of themselves. For while they are not given to vicious habits, which tend to impoverish them, yet they lack qualities of mind and heart which are essential to success. They are not indolent, yet they are not industrious after the manner of our countrymen. They are not extravagant, but neither are they wisely economical. They lack forethought, reflection, and practical wisdom in the management of their affairs. They possess little of the spirit of enterprise, and are especially lacking in that indomitable pluck which grapples with difficulties, and scorns to succumb to adverse circumstances."

BRANDON HILL AND PROVIDENCE.

These stations are both under the pastoral charge of Rev. S. B. Wilson. Seven additions are reported to the church at Providence, but none at Brandon Hill; there are there, however, "several young people attending an inquiry class, and several older ones asking admission to the church," from whom he hopes soon to report an increase. The congregations are about as last year. The Sabbath-school at Providence is large. In his review of the condition of his churches, Mr. Wilson says:

"Nevertheless, I and the little handful of Christians I have with me, have a very hard time in opposing the works of darkness and the wickedness around us. We are few and feeble; the wicked are many and strong, and we have to oppose them at every point, their ignorance, their superstition, their evil ways, and even their pleasures, and although we try to do this in a friendly and Christian way, yet we can not avoid giving offense. I know that some of the members of my church are intensely hated for no other reason than that they are firm in adhering to what is right, and will not descend to the low and wicked customs of those about them.

"One good Christian man, a deacon in our church, of whom every good man speaks well, one of the most inoffensive of men, and very kind to the people in sickness and trouble, has been especially an object of persecution. They have said every evil thing against him they could. They forced him into law unjustly, and, failing here, have destroyed his property."

A comparison of the immediate results of missionary and educational labors among the emancipated people of Jamaica and among the Freedmen of the South, must result largely in favor of the latter. The early desire of the freedmen of Jamaica for religious instruction and education, though strongly marked, was neither as intense, as intelligent, nor as abiding as among those of the South. Among the causes contributing to this result are the differences in the government of the two countries; the greater admixture of native Africans among the people of Jamaica, bringing with them their heathen superstitions; the comparative magnitude of the efforts here, the encouragement given to our Freedmen to become the owners of the soil; their contact, even while yet in bondage, with a comparatively intelligent white population, and their early possession of the elective franchise. In Jamaica, the masters were generally non-resident, and the control of the estates was left to managers, agents, and overseers—many of them in cultivation little, if any, superior to the slaves themselves. The slaves of the South were many of them brought into immediate contact with the families of their masters, catching insensibly something of their culture, listening stealthily to the most glowing sentiments in favor of the white man's liberty and the freest political discussions, and imbibing a longing desire for the education denied by law. Slavery is a bad educator; but it can not be doubted that this intercourse, though in many respects immensely deleterious, has been in a measure so overruled as to lead the emancipated slave to higher aspirations for freedom. Yet, though the fruits of labor may be less rich in Jamaica than here, they there call for the highest expressions of thankfulness to God for the many converted through their instrumentality, a large company of whom are now, we believe, in the mansions of rest.

WEST-AFRICA.—MENDI MISSION.

STATIONS.

Good Hope, (Sherbro Island,) Avery, Lawana.

MISSIONARIES.

Rev. G. P. Claflin, Mrs. Claflin, Mr. D. W. Burton, Mrs. Burton, Mr. C. S. Matteson, Mrs. Matteson, Mrs. M. M. Mair, Miss Emily Beeken, Miss Emily S. Porter.

NATIVE ASSISTANTS: Rev. G. B. Jewett, Mrs. Jewett, Samuel Goodman, Mrs. Goodman.

Beside these, there are several young men, educated at the mission-schools, who are giving the mission much aid as mechanics and laborers. In times past, honorable mention has been made of the name of Daddy Wilberforce, in connection with the mission work. He and his wife still remain veteran soldiers of the cross, to be depended on for any and every good work.

At our last annual meeting, five missionaries were reported absent on account of impaired health. Mrs. Mair returned to the mission early in the year, and Mr. and Mrs. Claflin, accompanied by Miss L. T. Dowling and Miss Emily Beeken, both from Ohio, sailed for Africa from Boston in January. We are pained to state that Mrs. Claflin was soon again compelled to return to America, from a chronic disease of the bowels. Mr. and Mrs. Burton are making preparations for an immediate return to the mission. They will be accompanied by Miss Emily S. Porter, from Illinois. These unavoidable changes are to be deplored as very disadvantageous to the interest of the mission, besides seriously increasing its expense. Recent letters express the belief that the new missionaries will be able to endure the climate and do valuable service there.

Sherbro Island.

At GOOD HOPE the mission premises occupy two and a half acres of land, well planted with the tropical fruits. On it is a substantial brick chapel, 25 × 50 feet. The mission-house, built on pillars, high enough for a store-room below, is 28 × 40 feet in the front, and 26 × 50 feet in the rear—sufficiently large to accommodate another mission family. There are other small buildings on the premises, occupied by natives. The church at Good Hope has not increased during the year; the number of native members in good standing is about 30; many of whom, by their godly walk, give the mission much comfort, and assist in the work among the outside people. In the mission prayer-meeting often from eight to ten voluntarily take part. Rev. Mr. Jewett, at present in charge of the church, is well acquainted with the Mendi language, services in which are not needed at Good Hope. It is therefore greatly to be desired that his place at Good Hope may be supplied by an ordained missionary from this country, that he may give himself wholly to labors in the Mendi language. The Executive Committee would gladly respond to the cry of the mission for this much-needed help.

Bargroo River.

At AVERY STATION, the mission holds 160 acres of ground, (half a mile square.) The mission-house is built of stone, 25 × 40 feet, one story and attic. Here Mr. Burton, the business agent of the mission, impressed with the importance of mechanical industries for the people, erected a saw-mill, with funds contributed for that particular purpose, and had it in operation some time before he left the mission. At the time he left Africa, the first cost of the mill, the expense of running it, and the money paid for logs amounted to $6113.07, and the proceeds of the lumber made was $6413.44, leaving a balance in favor of the mill of $300.37. The effect upon the minds of the people, and especially on the character of the young men who have there been furnished employment, is said to be highly salutary. Mr. Burton will, before he returns, solicit additional funds for this department of industry, and take back more machinery with him.

Mr. Matteson was married to Miss Dowling in July last. They are assigned to this station. Mrs. Matteson writes full of hope concerning the mission work.

LAWANA, where Mr. Claflin is stationed, is a large native town about four miles from Mo-Tappan. He left the latter place, and had a mission-house built just outside of Lăwănă, to be in more immediate contact with the people than he could be at Mo-Tappan. He is giving a good deal of attention to the native language, preparing books, etc., and derives valuable aid from two young men educated at the mission schools.

The Mendi Mission presents a much more encouraging aspect than one year ago. True the climate is hostile, and the work has been much retarded by the frequent sickness of the missionaries; but in this there is favorable change, as the missionaries are coming to a better understanding of it. Gradually more of those educated at the mission are exhibiting a Christian example, and aiding in the work. An abundance of work is offered to their hands, and all are encouraged.

The opening thus presented, the call of the people for missionary labor and laborers must be met with hope, the advantages already gained must be held, as the strongholds through which the young men and women now being trained in our schools for missionary labor in Africa may enter and spread over the country, claiming it in the name of Jesus as a part of his glorious inheritance—a redeemed, purified, and saved world.

Looking at Africa, we see her needy, perishing for the bread of life, and crying for the return of her children; and there are providential indications that they must be the heralds of the cross, the messengers of salvation, for a large part of that continent.

In our own land we see a great multitude of her descendants, long enslaved, now free, under Christian training in our schools, and a few of them already longing for the glorious work of publishing the Gospel to the destitute of their own race. A portion, though relatively a small portion, of the funds needed is secured to the Association for this particular object. Is not this God's call upon the American Missionary Association and its friends, to this special field of labor for Christ and the world's redemption?

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Makawão.

OUT-STATIONS: Huelo in Hamakua, and Keokea in Kula; also Kekapolepo.

MISSIONARIES: Rev. J. S. Green, Mrs. A. C. S. Green.

NATIVE HELPERS: Kaili and Kekahuma.

DEACONS: Kelawe and Kekua.

The church at Makawao is Congregational. Mr. Green, in his report of the labors of the year, gives no statistics of the church. His last statistical report showed that since his organization of this church, twenty-seven years ago, he has received into it 350 members, about 200 having passed away from it by death or removal, and 70 by church discipline, leaving 75 in good standing. The year has been one of more than usual trial to the church and people from sickness and death. Mr. Green has been laid aside from his usual service ten Sabbaths. Many of the people had died, both at Makawao and Huelo, and the last quarterly return of births and deaths show four or five of the latter to one of the former. At the latest dates, the sickness in his field appeared to be abated. Of the general decrease in the population of the islands, Mr. Green says, "My entire field from Huelo to Keokea has been sparsely peopled ever since I became connected with it in 1843; but the decrease has been constant from that time to this, and is more rapid this year than I have ever known it."

It seems impossible to arrest this decrease, every indication pointing to a passing away of the native Hawaiian, and a peopling of the islands mainly by an English-speaking population.

[redacted] MISSION.

Bangkok, Siam.

MISSIONARIES: Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D.; Mrs. Bradley; Mr. George G. Graham, assistant.

This mission has another year been made self-sustaining, mainly through the use of the printing-office, the excess of its receipts over expenditures being more than sufficient to sustain the mission. The results of spiritual labor do not, however, equal its material prosperity. The strongholds of Buddhism show little impression from the assaults of gospel truth, and comparatively few native Siamese have yet been numbered as converts to the faith of Christ. How much this is due to the hold which that ancient superstition has over the native mind, and how much to the fact—probably the natural outgrowth of the superstition—that little, if any, deference is paid to truth between man and his fellow, can not be determined. The fact remains, the results of missionary labor in Siam have not been conspicuous. After the labors of about twenty years, Dr. Bradley can speak with confidence of very few won to the love of Christ.

On the other hand, the tenacity with which all the missionaries of different boards laboring there hold on to the belief that the abundant seed-sowing of past years, through the press and by the mouths of Christ's disciples, will, and as they hope speedily, bring forth a rich harvest to the glory of God in the salvation of men, is truly remarkable. As yet, however, the friends of missions in that country walk by faith and not by sight. The time of rejoicing has not yet come. Dr. Bradley is looking forward with hope to the early return of a member of his own family as an ordained minister and fellow-laborer in the mission.

ADDRESS

BY

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

REPORTED BY JACOB DE WITTER, (COLORED.)

I PASSED over the ground yesterday where Mills was born, and where his father preached. I looked with profound interest upon the site of that old church where he learned his lessons of self-denying Christianity. It is wonderful to think what a rapid growth has been effected in missionary labors since then. There have been such ramifications, and the whole work of the church has become so complicated, that the duties have been rendered as various as they are multiform.

We can scarcely any longer think of it as a missionary work, it has so intertwined itself with our every day affairs. All work which the Lord Jesus Christ performed on earth was purely missionary work, because he was sent among men to seek and to save the lost. That which you do for yourselves is home work; that which you do for other people in other lands, is missionary work.

When our fathers first commenced the evangelizing work at home, this land was, comparatively speaking, separated from the world and almost excluded from brotherhood with other nations; but since we began to send our missionaries into other lands, all this has changed; steam and lightning have made us neighbors to the whole world. Our missionaries, too, have brought us into immediate contact with other nations, and have caused innumerable spiritual blessings to be showered down upon those under their spiritual care

The question with which we are to deal is not whether we can break into the Indian territories, or into the Chinese empire, but it is a question of home labor for the intellectual, moral, and religious improvement of our own people. In the early history of our country, there was no demand for home missions, because our people were homogeneous and confined to narrow limits; but now, with the eastern and western gates of the nation opened for the inflowing people, the question assumes a vastly different aspect. In addition to all the motives for the foreign work, is the new motive of patriotism for the home work. The main work of this Association, the American Missionary Association, is centered in our land, and the questions to be settled in connection with it are questions of patriotism as well as questions of religion. These are questions highly important for discussion. Our country is now enduring trials of a nature most painful. Our institutions, also, are put to the strain; and it is yet to be seen whether they can endure the test. We are to labor to see whether our institutions, by the great and sublime truths of the Christian religion, can maintain the freedom of the republic and save the souls of the people.

It is my purpose to discuss some of these living questions of the day, to which I feel it a great pleasure to call your attention. The problem of America's redemption is rendered all the more difficult by the presence of a large foreign element among us. It is that element which increases our work and retards our success. But we are not on this account to lose heart, nor to slacken our efforts. If we wish our rivers to make rich-bottom lands, we must not find fault that the river in its flow leaves mud at the bottom.

Our streets are swarming with foreigners, who vex and torment our people, fill their churches and introduce among us a faith foreign to our polity and our habits of Christian living. Our duty, our prime duty, brethren, is to engage in Christian effort so earnestly as to annihilate this heterodoxy from abroad. I did not see the result of the voting in New-York, but I have no doubt that they voted there pretty thoroughly.

I confess I am rather fond of the foreign stock. I don't know what we could do without their services in our kitchens, and I certainly do not know what we shall do with them. But it is my firm belief that the Irish children grow up as good as the average citizens, after they have passed through the discipline of our different public schools. In time, I think, the stock will be worth all that it costs.

Our foreign population have open eyes and ears, and they are continually learning. For the first five years, they vote wild, many of them mistaking liberty for license. But if they survive the poor whisky for that time, and get them a little home, and are surrounded by families for whom they aspire to a better future, they exercise more care. It was to be presumed that their ignorance would expose them to the snares and arts of unscrupulous demagogues at the start; but they are learning. After they have had time to look about and study their interests, and to form a purpose, they begin to have an object, and then they begin to vote straight. When the Irishman first casts his vote, he flings it like his shillalah, and lets fly at a venture. But after a few years, he handles his vote with as much care as a hunter does his rifle: he takes sight and aims at an object, and is sure to hit something. We ought to be patient, for it takes time for a foreigner to learn how to wear our free institutions. What if they do not instantaneously vote the Republican ticket, as every mother's son of them ought to; they are serving apprenticeship, and will do work yet of which we will not need to be ashamed. In the long run, I believe this dangerous and explosive element will prove a most valuable one; and for the good to come, we must be willing to have a little present inconvenience. The Danes, the Swedes, the Germans, and other nationalities have for years been inflowing on the East; but lo! at the West, just now, the soft knock of the timid Oriental is heard. Immediately all Ireland and the East loudly protest against the system of foreign immigration at the West. Political friends of the Irish take up the refrain, and protest against introducing the poor, unwilling, oppressed Chinamen to this country. For my own part, I think if we can stand the Irish, we certainly can the Chinese. We can stand the Irish, and thank them, too, for coming; and possibly we can stand the Chinamen and thank them also. Have we not Christianity and civilization sufficient to provide for all who come? If we have not, then we may as well stop talking about going abroad and converting the world to God; for if our civilization and Christianity can not master these comers from other lands, in what are we better or stronger than the heathen?

I firmly and most solemnly believe that Christ's kingdom will cover the whole earth. I would say to every one, everywhere, come to our shores. I thank God that foreigners are able to come. Their foreignness, with God's blessing, will be of short duration. They will see that our institutions are no less beneficent to them than they are to others. The constitution and the institutions of the country were made for the great commonalty of men, and there is no danger of their being overthrown by the inflowing tide of immigration. The river Amazon has been running for thousands of years into the wide Atlantic Ocean, and yet, I suppose, the ocean is just as salt to-day as it was in the days of Noah. When an elephant craunches the branch of an oak, does the elephant change into oak or the oak into elephant? Let foreigners come, in any number; we will eat them and not suffer them to devour us, and we can do this with the greatest facility if we are true to ourselves and true to our institutions. America has boundless digestion, and we can absorb all these immigrants.

But there is a second danger arising from the vast mass of ignorance in the land. In New-England, the danger from this source is small; in fact, if there is any danger there, it must be from the opposite—too much intellectual pride. And yet, for the nation at large, ignorance is a threatening danger. Ignorance is dangerous everywhere, but in this country it is treason and death.

After the first Napoleon had crushed Germany like an egg-shell, she did not commence fortifying by building castles and forts on her frontier; no, but a thorough and most extensive system of education for the people was soon inaugurated, which has been rigidly prosecuted until the present day. I hope the fatuity of the French leaders was a divine Providence. The fact that Prussia taught her sons military science, and that every one of them was required for a time to serve in the army, does not interfere with the other science which she teaches; indeed, the union of both rendered the system complete. The people were intelligent, and in this, and in its unity, does the strength of Germany consist. Had it not been for this, they would have been dashed helplessly upon the rocks when the tide of war rushed upon them.

The fatuity of the French, then, I must believe, was the will of divine Providence, and it may be that He has determined that they shall be ground to powder; that every thing old and effete may be eliminated, and the new formation be of better material. In the new order of things, free schools may rise and needed reforms be introduced, and the crushing blow prove the greatest blessing that ever befell the nation, and our old friend and ally, the country of La Fayette, will have been driven by necessity to put herself on the same plane of intelligence with Germany. If there is any missionary work, it is the common schools which are to be found among the poor and ignorant people of the land.

Foreign immigrants stand in need of this benign influence of education. Ignorance can not be allowed to exist in this climate, and the education which this Association offers to the ignorant, touches one of the points of extreme danger. If we turn our attention for a few moments to other parts of the world, we shall observe that Italy and other nations are beginning to take care of the education of their people. Ought we not to continue doing the same? Is this a time for us to begin to hold back? There is nothing more vitally connected with religion than this work of education. This age demands such a work, and, though the distribution of tracts to the community at large is a very laudable work, yet I consider the necessity of the nation to be the education we must have, with its moral and saving uses. The burden imposed upon us would be insupportable if we did not attach the highest importance to the education of the people. The foreign elements cast upon our shores would exhale miasmas, and breed national chills and fevers without it.

But the third, and much the greater danger to which we are exposed, is the growing and insatiable desire on the part of our people to accumulate wealth. The number of those engaged in this pursuit is immeasurable, and without a precedent in the annals of the world.

The church has more to fear from the money power of the country than from any thing else, or every thing else. All tendencies show that there is to be a race for wealth such as the world never saw. The avenues to wealth are so various, the methods of accumulation are so multiform, that the impulse for it is absorbing every thing else. There is such vast wealth lying buried, waiting only the master hand to uncover it and grasp it, and so wide a field for skill and adventure, that men of every profession are abandoning their legitimate callings for the rewards of this. Even ministers think they must go "where they can amass wealth for the cause of Christ;" but, singularly enough, when they obtain it, many of them forget to devote it to religious uses. I have noticed that these well-intentioned persons never act up to their professions. The young student goes where he thinks he can amass most money, (in the cause of Christ, of course,) and the clergy is being prostituted and destroyed by wealth! It is withdrawing young men from higher and nobler pursuits, demoralizing the people at large, and spreading corruption everywhere. Preaching falls upon such men as rain falls upon the slates on the roof of our houses.

The ranks of the clergy are thinning out, and suitable men for the sacred office are becoming scarce. It has been said in the British Parliament that when the profits of the slave-trade reached four hundred per cent, the whole British navy could not suppress it. A combination of money has made our institutions in New-York a farce. Indeed, it has embarrassed, if it has not endangered, the government itself. It has not hesitated to utter threats as to what it would do.

American tendencies are all centrifugal, and all American families explode as soon as the children are old enough to get married. In England, it is just the opposite. The tendency is centripetal, and serves to build up large families. There can be no learned aristocracy here, and intellectual circles, when formed, are small. We know no such thing as family aristocracy in this country. Two or three families, perhaps, have come down from the days of the Puritans with unimpaired fortunes; but the tendency, I repeat, is to explode and divide, while in the mother country all unite to enrich the eldest son. I say we can not have an aristocracy of talent, as the knowing men are not generally rich, and the rich are not generally knowing, which, after all, is perhaps a fair distribution. But there is practically an aristocracy of wealth, the only acknowledged aristocracy in the land, which, if suffered to grow, will ultimately result in immeasurable mischief.

If this state of things is not changed, there is no choice but to suffer. This is the thing which we need continually to watch. In my opinion, the danger from this is far greater than from any number of foreigners. We have little to fear from abroad—certainly from the western coast. The country is not too large, though it would be if it were not very flexible. But every State is a hinge, and they rise and fall with the state of public opinion. I believe in the brotherhood of men; but I am glad to know that all the nations of Europe combined could not send force enough to harm us now. We are not so large, as a nation, as to be in danger from ourselves. There is the greatest variety of local interests. If it were a one-man power, this country could be plunged into bloody wars with other nations; but as it is, though a war might suit one section, another might protest. The influence of the East offsets that of the West. That of the North balances that of the South. There is little danger from internal differences, therefore. The people boil up occasionally; but they can stand boiling—any thing but stagnation. Volcanic soil is remarkable for its fertility. There is a power in religion that can look all these evils squarely in the face. Any thing is better than the dead calm of conservatism and inaction.

I believe the time has come when it is absolutely necessary to effect a restatement of Christianity, as well as a fundamental reëxamination of creeds, preserving in them all substantial facts and doctrines, without losing shape or strength, and in a far more usable form than they now are. When spears were first made, they were huge and clumsy; but in after years, as art progressed, they were shaved down, made more graceful and wieldy. But it was the same material, and the strength of the spear was not impaired. There are changes proposed which aim at the very foundations of society—changes which could only be deplored, if successful, especially at the present time. There is debating whether there be a Christ, or even whether He be an elder Brother. It is extremely dangerous to attempt a change of base in the presence of the enemy. It is more so now, with all these foes in the field fronting us and ready for the onset. I believe that the forces of Jesus Christ can override all opposition, whether of science or otherwise. The great truths of religion can not be refuted by the absurd demonstrations of science.

I believe God will call young men and women to the work now when they are so much needed. Looking forward to presiding at a good man's home and table is an ambition not to be thought lightly of. But in days of old there was a prophetess in every tenth family, and now there should be a like proportion for this holy cause. The church is still alive. Jesus Christ is in the midst of her. All of her children are not going after Mammon.

Some souls glow with a spirit not of this world. The time is not far distant when the heathenism of the Chinese in this land shall be blown away by the spirit of an awakened and earnest church. It does not require popular preachers to save the church. If she is to be saved at all, it will be by men full of faith and of the Holy Ghost —meek, lowly, in whose bones the word of God is as fire.

We want men and women of intense faith, intense self-denial, and intense power of practical work. Heroism is not yet dead, as the time is approaching when the uprising conscience of the nations will be prolific to an astounding extent. He that is to transfuse the nations must himself be transfused with the Spirit of the Master. Trials and blood are the price which must be paid into God's exchequer for whatever of great good is accomplished here on earth. Let us be content to be as our Master. Through the vail we get glimpses of the coming rest and glory. Let us work on faithfully till we are summoned to the higher work and the unspeakable joys of the heavenly home!

In the absence of the President and Vice-Presidents, Rev. M. E. Strieby, Secretary, called the meeting to order, when Rev. H. Bushnell, D.D., was chosen Temporary Chairman, and Rev. George A. Oviatt, Secretary.

Prayer was offered by Dr. Bushnell, and Secretary Strieby read the thirty-fifth chapter of Isaiah.

Revs. Messrs. Willard, Pike, Keith, Belden, and Elliott were appointed to nominate Committees.

Secretary George Whipple read the Treasurer's report.

Receipts.....$366,824.82.
Expenditures.....350,694.86.

These sums include $35,000 received for a permanent fund, but do not include $71,407.08 given specifically to institutions under the care of the Association.

The report said,

"In submitting the financial statement for the year, the Executive Committee take occasion to refer to the balance against the Association, and to some facts that should be considered in connection with it.

"The reduction of this amount during the year has been $16,129.96, leaving the present balance $61,861.84. This is not a debt in the sense that the current expenses of the Association for the past six years have exceeded its income by that amount, but only in the sense that this sum has been advanced in securing, while the help of the Government was available, the more than half-million dollars' worth of lands, buildings, and appliances, which now give the Association its preëminent advantages for the great Christian educational work in behalf of the African race, for which, in the providence of God, it was called into existence.

"The Committee have not been able to realize the hope indulged last year, of the speedy extinction of this balance by the sale of lands in the North, and the application of some large legacies then due, the receipt of which was confidently expected. There has been some delay in the settlement of the estates, and the Committee have been advised by those best acquainted with these lands, that they were appreciating in value so as to much more than balance the interest on what they would now realize.

"The Executive Committee deem it proper to state that in addition to the cash receipts reported by the Treasurer, money and productive property valued at from $40,000 to $45,000 have been secured to institutions under the care of the Association. Of this, $5000, from the State of Louisiana, was for the current expenses of the Hathaway Home, in New-Orleans. The remainder is deeded to trustees, the income to be used for specific purposes. Succession in these boards of trust is by nomination from our Executive Committee, and the ultimate possession and direction of the whole falls to the Association, when no longer needed for these specific purposes. This is exclusive of the sum of $15,788.97 raised by the trustees of Hampton, and $15,718.17 raised by the trustees of Berea College, Ky. If these several sums were added to the receipts, the total would be $438,331.90.

"Considering the fact that the help heretofore extended by the Government, to the educational work of the South has been withdrawn, thus throwing an additional responsibility upon the Association, the Committee feel called upon to express to the churches and friends their gratitude for their liberality in providing the means by which they have been able to carry forward their work with so great a measure of success, and yet reduce the balance against the Association during the year by so large a sum."

Secretaries Strieby and Whipple read the report of the Executive Committee.

A brief time was spent in devotional exercises.

The report was accepted and adopted.

Voted that the various parts of the report of the Executive Committee be referred to their appropriate committees.

Secretary Whipple read a letter from Rev. E. N. Kirk, D.D., President of the Association, which was ordered to be entered in the minutes.

Dr. Bushnell was unanimously chosen Permanent Chairman of the meeting.

Voted to take a recess till half-past seven o'clock this evening.

The Association met in the evening at half-past seven o'clock. The Committee of Arrangements reported in part. A prayer-meeting was appointed for to-morrow (Wednesday) morning at eight o'clock, in the lecture-room of the church.

The devotional exercises of the evening were conducted by Rev. J. Edwards, from Mass.

A discourse was preached by Rev. H. M. Scudder, D.D., from John 8 : 32, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

An address was delivered by Hon. Henry Wilson, and it was voted to take a recess till nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

October 25th.—The prayer-meeting at eight o'clock A.M. was conducted by Rev. Almon Underwood. At nine o'clock, the meeting came to order for business, and was opened by singing, and prayer by Rev. F. Bascom, D.D., of Illinois.

A committee on the roll of members of the Association, and delegates from the churches present, was appointed, consisting of Rev. O. H. White, D.D., Rev. A. S. Cheesebro, Rev. E. H. Pratt, J. N. Stickney, Esq., and Rev. Walter Barton.

Rev. S. R. Dennen, from the Committee on Educational Institutions at the South, reported as follows:

It gives your committee great pleasure to read, more at leisure, that part of the annual report submitted to them.

Education, in the highest and Christian sense, lies at the foundation of vigorous and successful churches. If the church, in the Puritan idea, overtopped the school-house, it still remains that the intelligence and manhood which reared it and supported it came from the school-house which reposed in its shadow.

The order then in which the Executive Committee discuss these topics is the natural and logical order. We were not a little pained, therefore, even at the suggestion of doing less for common schools at the South. Your committee express the earnest hope that less will not be done until the general or State governments are ready to assume them and carry them forward in the spirit of this Association; for they will relinquish the children in the most plastic and formative period of their educational career, and part with the best feeders of their higher institutions of learning. It is in these schools of a lower grade that the desire and impulse are awakened to press forward to those of a higher order.

We agree with the Report in the estimate they put upon Permanent Institutions. The practical wisdom and utility of such an estimate can not well be doubted. They are ears of seed-corn with which all that Southern land is to be planted. To educate the children of the South by means of teachers sent from the North, is plainly impossible. To rear a strong body of men and women from their own class, who shall go here and there until the whole land is occupied, is both possible and practicable. These higher institutions we most warmly indorse and commend.

We congratulate the Association on the uniform success of their schools. This success has been so marked as to compel the encomiums of those who once opposed them. We cheer on the noble band of teachers in their hard and perilous work. We sympathize with the colored people of the South, and cheer them forward, to secure all that is possible from mission schools, to fit them for usefulness here and for glory and honor beyond. All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. R. DENNEN, Chairman.

The report was followed by addresses by Rev. S. R. Dennen and General O. O. Howard.

Rev. E. S. Atwood reported from the Committee on Church Work as follows:

The preaching of the Gospel and the founding of churches are especially important at the South at the present time. The existing church organizations there are inadequate to meet the exigencies of the case; there is a lack of careful discrimination as to who are proper candidates for church membership, and a want of strict discipline, while hurtful extravagances, in the name of worship, are suffered without rebuke; this is not due to deficiencies in the systems themselves, but in their administration.

The prospect of so revolutionizing existing systems as to free them from these objectionable results is not a promising one. The attempt would be considered unwarrantable and impertinent. These defects are the growth of years; their extirpation will be a matter of time, and even at that, the circumstances are not favorable. The intense denominationalism of the Southern churches makes the rallying cry of a sect avail when the Gospel is unheeded. A foreign body then will find additional difficulties in its path.

The existing church organizations at the South are all more or less chargeable with complicity with slavery; the accursed institution has yet its defenders in them.

The freedmen and the poor whites are alike longing for something better. The lack of education is not the only barrier to successful religious effort; instinct and common sense more than make good the lack of culture, and therefore there is no need to withhold the Gospel in waiting for education.

The committee urge an immediate increase in the effort to gather the scattered sheep into safe folds. They do not say "teach less," but "preach more;" not fewer schools and higher institutions of learning, but more churches. The great want of the hour is the saving word, enforced by and embodied in simple yet stable ecclesiastical organizations. They would suggest that there be a sufficient number of prudent men in the Southern States who should prospect with reference to the best points for establishing churches, securing the best sites for school-houses, and who should be putting their hands on the most promising young men, with reference to the work of the ministry, giving them suitable instruction in theology, and overseeing them generally in their work. Such a course would develop great interest in the work.

In closing, the committee refer with gratification to the increasing public sentiment among Northern churches in favor of work in this direction. They are asking that their subscriptions should tend more directly to the advantage of the Pilgrims' polity—because they believe that in this way the highest spiritual welfare of the South will be secured. They therefore urge enlargement both of scope and action. As the almost sole representative in the South of the Congregational Churches, this Association is held to undertake all forms of missionary work. The whites as well as the blacks are its wards, and this Association is expected to know neither race nor color. Religion and culture should go together, and to this end the Association labors.

Signed by the committee.

On the subject of this report, addresses were made by Mr. Atwood, Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D., of Straight University, and Professor J. B. Reeve, D.D., of Howard University.

On motion by Rev. W. Patton, D.D., these two reports were accepted.

Rev. H. M. Storrs, D.D., presented the report of the Committee on the Treasurer's Report, as follows:

The committee have examined the treasurer's report and accompanying papers, and find them properly authenticated by the vouchers of the auditors.

The committee are happy to add that they are convinced that the affairs of the Association have been conducted with wise economy and discretion. While they would be glad to see the balance against the Association entirely removed by large or specific contributions, they fully approve the action of the Executive Committee in making the advances that created it, and the prudent measures taken for its removal.

Gratified by the evidences of continued prosperity and the hearty cooperation of the friends of Christ, they recommend still more liberal contributions and vigorous support. They recommend that the Treasurer's report be approved, and published with the proceedings of the meeting.

On this subject a very able and eloquent address was delivered by Dr. Storrs, after which the report was accepted.

The Committee of Arrangements reported that Professor Reeve and Rev. Dr. Bascom would officiate at the Lord's Supper this P.M.

A recess till half-past two o'clock was then voted. At half-past two P.M., the Lord's Supper was celebrated, when the meeting took a recess of ten minutes, and came to order at a quarter to four o'clock.

The report of the Committee on Church Work was referred to the same committee for reconsideration.

Professor R. B. Foster, of Missouri, presented a series of resolutions relative to asking Congressional aid for colleges, etc., in the former slave States. They were referred to a committee, consisting of J. Hooker, Esq., J. N. Stickney, Esq., and Professor Foster.

The Committee on Nominations reported a list of officers. The report was accepted and adopted as follows:

Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D.D., presented the following report from the Committee on the Chinese in America:

Your committtee, to whom was referred that portion of the report of the Executive Committee which refers to the Chinese, beg leave to say,

That while they agree to all the action which the Executive Committee propose, they would not make that action dependent upon any conditions of continued or increased immigration. The work is already before the Association. The responsibility is now laid upon us; we propose this resolution:

Resolved, That the relations of the Chinese, in this land, to our country and to China, not less than their own wants, demand earnest and speedy efforts for their evangelization.

After addresses by Dr. Perkins, Rev. W. Gladden, and Gen. C. H. Howard, who has charge of the work among the Chinese in California, the report was accepted and the resolution adopted.

Rev. F. Bascom, D.D., presented the report of the Committee on Foreign Missions, which was accepted:

The committee to whom was referred the report on Foreign Missions have given the subject such consideration as the time would allow, and recommend its approval. The inquiry has occurred to the Committee, as doubtless to many others, why not transfer the foreign missions of the Association to some other organization, that the Association may be at liberty to devote its exclusive energies to the great work providentially laid upon it in this country? They are satisfied, however, that peculiar circumstances connected with each of these missions render such a step, at least for the present, inexpedient. They therefore recommend the vigorous support of the Foreign Missions of the Association, urging special attention to the mission in Africa, not only for its own sake and the good it is at present accomplishing, but also as a field for future missionary labor for many of the young men and women now being educated at its schools in the South.

Voted to take a recess till half-past seven o'clock this evening.

The evening meeting came to order at half-past seven o'clock. The choir led in singing, and Rev. S. S. Jocelyn offered prayer.

Addresses on the Memorial Year were made by Secretary Strieby, Rev. W. B. Brown, General O. O. Howard, and Governor Jewell.

On motion, it was resolved that the thanks of the Association be presented to the Rev. H. M. Scudder, D.D., for his able and interesting discourse preached before the Association last evening.

Voted to take a recess till to-morrow morning.

October 26th.—Prayer-meeting at eight in the lecture-room, conducted by Charles N. Brown, Esq., of Sag Harbor.

Meeting came to order in the church at nine. Prayer was offered by Rev. M. Tillotson.

The Committee on Church Work, to whom their report was recommitted, reported by Rev. E. S. Atwood, which report was accepted and adopted.

It was voted that the minutes, when completed, be referred to the members of the Executive Committee, here present, for examination and publication.

General Hawley, for the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the following, which he supported by an address:

The Committee to whom was referred the report on the Indians, would express their gratification that the Executive Committee responded so readily to the invitation of the Government to cooperate with it in the effort to establish "A POLICY OF TRUTH, JUSTICE, HUMANITY, AND PEACE" in behalf of the Indians, such as President Grant prefigured in his inaugural address. They recommend to the Association, and the friends of humanity everywhere, its hearty support.

The following letter from Rev. H. B. Whipple, Episcopal Bishop of Minnesota, was read:

"October 21, 1871.

"I believe your annual missionary meeting will be held in Hartford, next week. You know how warm a place the poor and helpless Indians have in my heart, and how earnestly I have plead for them. It may fall in with your views to make an earnest appeal that the Association shall heartily sustain your agents, Rev. E. P. Smith and Mr. Clark.

"Their position is one of great responsibility, and one of as great trials. In no portion of our Indian Territory has there been more wickedness of every kind. The man who stands out in the fear of God, to deal justly and defend the helpless, will be followed by the hatred and opposition of all bad men. I have watched with a good deal of anxiety your agents, and I believe you have reason for thankfulness that they have proved themselves so eminently fitted for their place.

"It would be a great loss if they should leave. They can not live at the salary of $1500, nor can they obtain proper assistants as teachers, farmers, and laborers, for the salaries offered by the Government.

"I did not intend to write to you a long letter. I do believe that a great door is opened to give a poor suffering heathen race the blessings of a Christian civilization, and that there is work for all that love the Saviour.

With affectionate regard, yours ever, H. B. WHIPPLE.

"P. S.—The Government makes very inadequate provisions for schools, farmers, physicians, etc., and the religious bodies who assume the care of Indians must give their agents all the support they require."

Secretary Delano then addressed the meeting on Indian affairs.

Rev. Dr. Vermilye offered prayer.

The report by General Hawley was then adopted.

General C. H. Howard offered the following, which was adopted:

Whereas, the new policy of the Government, whereby the Indian agents are removed from the arena of politics, and nominated by the different missionary bodies of the country, is based upon the principle of honest management, and forbids any incidental emolument; and whereas, the present salary of $1500 is not adequate to command the requisite intelligence, education, and business capacity;

Resolved, That this Association hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to increase the salary of the agents to such extent as Congress may deem necessary.

General O. O. Howard offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of this convention are due and are hereby tendered to the citizens of Hartford for their warm greetings, their patient attention upon its exercises, and for their abundant, cheerful, Christian hospitality, and that we invoke upon them God's special favor and benediction.

The resolution of General Howard was amended by adding an expression of thanks to the pastor and trustees of the Pearl Street Congregational Church, and then adopted.

On motion it was

Resolved, That the thanks of the Association be presented to Secretary Delano and General Hawley for their addresses on this occasion.

Secretary Whipple said that the hour of adjournment was so near that it would be impossible to carry out the programme and hear from more than one of the missionaries present, who had been requested to speak.

He called upon the Rev. Mr. Ford, of Charleston, S. C., who made a few remarks about the work in that city, and concluded by earnestly requesting the prayers of all for the missionaries of the Association.

The committee to whom was referred the resolutions offered by Mr. Foster, reported, recommending the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be instructed to memorialize Congress for an appropriation of two and a half millions of dollars, for the purposes of education in those portions of the late slave territory of the country where such aid is needed, and that the Committee be authorized to correspond with other educational bodies interested in the same object, who may be disposed to join in the memorial.

On motion, the resolution was referred to the Executive Committee for their consideration and action.

The following resolution was passed:

While we rejoice at the steady advance made in public sentiment in favor of the oppressed in different parts of our land, we still plainly see that much remains to be done; prejudice against the black man shows itself in every place, in public conveyances and public places of resort, in all the business and social relations of life; also as deeply rooted hatred is aimed at the Indian, so that he instinctively repels it, with interest; and the Chinese also incite feelings of hostility, so that our Christianity is judged by large numbers of them as the sheerest hypocrisy.

In view of these plain facts at the North, and of the active outrages that grow out of these unchristian sentiments at the South, the West, and North-west, wherever these classes of people are to be found, Therefore, be it resolved, that we call upon all Christian people in this land to pray earnestly to God to help us conquer completely all this prejudice, and suppress all this hostility, so contrary to the spirit of Christ, which still exists against the Negro, the Indian, and the Chinese.

On motion, it was resolved, that the reports of the Treasurer and the Executive Committee be approved, and ordered to be printed with the proceedings of the meeting.

A motion was made and carried, that after prayer and benediction the Association stand adjourned, to meet next year, at such time and place as the Executive Committee shall designate.

Rev. Mr. Gage, pastor of Pearl street church, spoke a few parting words, congratulatory and tender, and by the request of the moderator, led in prayer, and pronounced the benediction, when the meeting adjourned.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

"HITHERTO hath the Lord helped us" are fitting words on our lips; for the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION completes and commemorates a quarter-century of its existence, and a decade of its work among the Freedmen. The success which God has granted us thus far, calls upon us to look back on the past with gratitude and to the future with hope.

THE PAST.

The Quarter-Century.

Twenty-five years ago, slavery ruled in this land in the plenitude of its power. Texas had just been annexed, the Mexican war was in the first flush of an unbroken series of victories, the insolence of the slaveholder was at its height, and the truckling of his minions at the North was scarcely less abject than the cowering of his slaves under the lash in the South.

The pulpit and the press generally were silent as to the guilt of slavery, or busy in making nice distinctions in its favor, or openly defending it. The great religious bodies were blunt in their refusal to condemn it, or were ingenious in "capping their volcanoes." Missionary Boards were shielding slaveholders in mission churches, and religious publishing houses were expunging passages from their books that would be offensive to the South.

Mob violence was no longer threatened, but the full weight of popular odium and ostracism was brought to bear against the friends of the slave. It was the era when the suspicion of abolitionism threw a man "outside of all healthy organizations," whether political, social, or religious.

But under this mighty tide, there was an under-current rising that was gaining volume and force every day. There were pulpits and presses that did speak out, and members of religious bodies and of benevolent societies that were zealous for the slave. The cause of the poor was reaching the heart and conscience of the nation. But another evil arose. The tardiness of the church as a whole to regard the poor, embittered the minds of many whose indiscriminate denunciations harmed the cause they meant to help; for it gave plausibility to the taunt that the abolitionist was an infidel.

It was under these circumstances that a handful of men gathered at Albany, N. Y., September 3d, 1846, to form the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION. The number present did not greatly exceed two hundred. The meeting was held in the small Baptist church, south of the Capitol. No larger house was proffered or needed. The gathering excited no local or public attention, either of opposition or approval. The discussions were harmonious and spirited. The inducement to ignore an evangelical basis was kindly, not factiously, made, and the young organization gained its first victory in the hour of its birth by rejecting the proffer. We now can hardly realize the relative numbers and wealth which it thus rejected, nor how sorely it then needed these elements of strength; but it marked out its future life by adopting a liberal but unequivocally evangelical creed. It was true to Christ as well as to the slave, and Christ has not deserted it.

Thus quietly was planted this grain of mustard-seed, but its germination was rapid and its growth vigorous. The celebrated Amistad captives, and the missionaries that went back with them to Africa, were fittingly transferred to the care of the new organization. Congenial fields were opened in the West-Indies among the newly emancipated slaves; in Canada, among the refugees from slavery; in our Western wilds, among the wronged and cheated Indians; and the deep interest it felt for the slaves in the South, impelled it to enter that dark land with the Gospel, preached alike to bond and free. Its missionaries there had a stirring experience—apostolic in the two elements of zeal and persecution. After enduring stripes, imprisonment, and threatened death, they were at length cast out by the tumultuous heavings which preceded the volcano of war.

The Home Missionary Department of the Association was one of its marked features, giving aid at one time to about one hundred churches, whose sympathy for the slave threw them upon the Association for the support they could not get, or would not ask, elsewhere.

The Decade.

Ten years ago, we were in the opening months of the war of the rebellion. It was a dark hour. No great victories had given promise of a restored national unity, and no progress had been made in freeing the slave. The Government refused to interfere with slavery, and the generals in the army returned the escaping fugitives to their masters.

THE FREEDMEN.

But a new era dawned. The fugitives were at length protected at Fortress Monroe, and the Government sanctioned the act. Our armies widened the area over which the old flag once more waved, and crowds of slaves came under its folds for shelter. But they came in rags, shivering with cold, without food and without employment, sick and helpless. They were congregated with the armies in vast camps, on the coast, and along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. The cry for help arose, and the work to be done was that of the Good Samaritan. This Association was the first to hear and heed this call. It hurried to Fortress Monroe with help, and sent its laborers with clothing, medicines, and sympathy, along the whole line of the "camps." God alone knows the sorrow which it alleviated, in that gloomiest day for the colored man, when he received the parting curse of slavery, and the scarcely less bitter welcome of freedom.

But in the birth-time of these physical wants of the Freedmen, there was born in them at the same hour the higher wants of the soul, and the call for food and clothing was almost drowned by the twin cry for the primer and the Bible. With joy did this Association enter upon the gladsome duty of meeting this demand. By a marked and yet unpremeditated coincidence, the first missionary it sent (and he was the first ever sent) to the Freedmen, reached them September 3d—the anniversary-day of the formation of the Association. He heard their prayers, told them the object of his mission, and received their joyous welcome. A school was opened, and this was followed by classes in the "camps," and schools in the villages and cities—the Freedmen everywhere seeming to forget their hunger and privations in their eagerness for knowledge.

The call of the Association for teachers and missionaries met an enthusiastic response. As the young men of the North had so promptly volunteered at the summons to the battle-field, so their sisters answered to this call. Leaving their pleasant Northern homes, or their remunerative rewards as teachers, they came to us by hundreds ready to go South; and there with meagre salaries, often at first with miserable shelter and food, and inadequate school facilities, amid neglect, scorn, insult, and danger, have these martyr workers toiled, and some of them sickened and died. No more heroic self-denial has been witnessed in this wondrous decade, and no greater success has crowned any other toil for the good of the nation and of Christianity.

The educational work, beginning necessarily with the primer, and confined for a time to the range of the common school, gradually rose with the progress of the pupils, to the rank of the normal school and the college. From the beginning, the work was religious, and in the day-school, as well as in the night and Sunday-school, the foundations were laid for churches of a pure and enlightened character, and these have been formed as rapidly as the preparation has warranted.

Any statement in figures will be inadequate to represent the work of the ten years among the Freedmen, but it may thus be epitomized: The amount expended in money and clothing is nearly two and a quarter millions of dollars; schools have been established in 343 places in the South, including most of the chief cities and centres of population. The whole number of commissions issued to missionaries and teachers in the ten years is 3470, and the pupils enrolled, 321,099. Thirty-five churches have been formed, or remodeled on a better basis, and some of them aided in building houses of worship.

The evangelical character of the Association led to the formation of the Freedmen's Aid Societies; indeed, its officers were foremost in the establishment of the branch in New-York, for they felt that a wider basis might invite a more general coöperation in meeting the demand for physical supplies and primary schools. But at length, the popular enthusiasm so strongly swept toward these secular wants that the religious were in danger of being neglected, if not repudiated. Here the Association fought its second battle for evangelical truth, and, in the face of threatened extinction, determined to stand by Christ and the religious work in the South; and again the Master has sustained it.

On the other hand, its unsectarian character has led most of the religious bodies at the North to open denominational channels for reaching the South. Perhaps this was inevitable; in giving physical supplies and in supporting common schools, coöperation is easy; in distinctively religious teaching and church organization, differences must be regarded.

THE CHINESE.

In the closing years of this decade, a new candidate for popular odium and Christian sympathy came before the American people. The tawny Mongolians from China came in such numbers to California as to attract attention, and soon the Chinese stood side by side with the negro, in the hatred of the same set of politicians and mobocrats. Naturally the sympathies of the Association were drawn toward him, and as the churches sustaining the Association had no organization for helping these people, it sent missionaries and teachers among them.

THE INDIANS.

The Indian, too, so long sunk in his own degradation, and crushed under the apathy of the government and the rascality of agents, once more arose to the surface. The policy of General Grant's administration, as far-reaching in wisdom as it is noble in benevolence, determined the doom of the vampires, and the appointment of honest men to administer Indian affairs. It called upon Christian bodies to assist this great effort by nominating just and competent men for those agencies. So great a chance for the salvation of the red man was never before offered, and this Association was quick to respond. Four such agencies, with their corps of assistants, have been sent into the field, and their zeal and success in ferreting out frauds, in bringing to fine and imprisonment the venders of ardent spirits, and in teaching industry, carrying forward schools and giving religious instruction, render this one of the most interesting and hopeful portions of our great field of labor.

MEXICANS.

Some of our schools in lower Texas touch the Mexican population, and educational and religious efforts have been begun among them with encouraging prospects.

The Past Year.

The past year has had no marked changes except such as progress makes. The schools have, without exception, been prosperous. In two of the institutions, regular freshmen classes have been formed, and in one—at Berea—the junior class has been reached. The examinations at the close of the school year have all been satisfactory; that at Atlanta, Ga., has attracted special attention, partly owing to the appointment, by the governor of the State, of a committee of examiners whose character for intelligence, whose high position in the South, whose patient and thorough examination, and frank confession of the progress and capacity of the pupils, have done much to bring our work into favorable notice, and, what is of much more consequence, have offered a clue to the mode of reaching ultimate harmony in the South; for when the colored people give such proof of intellectual ability, and when intelligent and influential Southern white men will frankly and publicly admit the fact, then we can see the evidence that the two races can live in peace, and work together for Southern regeneration.

The increase in the number of churches under the care of the Association is nine, of which five have been newly organized during the year. Three new houses of worship are nearly completed—one in Charleston, S. C., one in Chattanooga, Tenn., and one in Marion, Ala.

THE FUTURE.

Freedmen.

The success of the past inspires hope for the future. The Freedmen are not "dying out," but, as shown by the census, have increased in population, in this terrible decade, nearly half a million. They are here, and growing in numbers—facts whose significance must be recognized in considering the future of the South.

They are accumulating property, as their numerous homes, increasing number of farms, and steady deposits in the Freedmen's Savings Bank abundantly testify. But above all, they are acquiring intellectual and moral elevation. They constitute a rich soil, and yield glorious harvest for the culture given.

In this field, the Association will continue to give the large share of its efforts, in the two leading departments of educational and religious work.

EDUCATION AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

We dare not plan to reduce our educational force. We shall indeed do less, directly, for common schools, but we shall do more, indirectly, by preparing teachers for them. The States, or the national government, will yet plant common schools in the South. We can help and hasten, by training in our normal schools and colleges, the army of teachers that will be needed. We will also help in a still broader way. No people can rise without leaders, and as these Freedmen toil up the steep ascent, they need the inspiring call and example of those of their own race who can guide them upward. Our institutions are preparing, on a large scale, those who shall act as such leaders, in the various walks of life—ministers, teachers, intelligent farmers, mechanics, business and professional men.

CHURCH WORK.

Our church work will receive increased attention, not by abandoning, but by pushing forward the work of Christian education. This Association is a child of Providence. Its success has come from following that Guiding Hand. In the work among the Freedmen it has taken the task that was most obviously to be done. When clothing and supplies were needed, it sent them. As soon as the primer could be used, it came. As the pupils have advanced, the grade of schools has kept pace.

In the religious work, too, we have tried to do what was plainly the duty most pressing—instilling into the hearts of the people a purer and more practical piety. In some localities we could easily have brought many churches into our ranks; in other places, such an effort would have aroused intense sectarian bitterness; in neither case would any permanent good have been done. If in any part of our efforts in the South we have aimed simply at the highest ultimate good of the people, and through them to the nation and the cause of Christ, it has been in our church work. The pure and intelligent church, though small at first, must be the model and the means of the spiritual regeneration of this people.

We are sustained in this belief by the experience of others as well as our own. The American Board attempted to breathe the breath of life into the dead churches of semi-Christian lands, but at length gave it up, and organized churches of intelligent converts. Still more to the point is the example of some denominations of Christians working among the Freedmen, who began by absorbing and infusing, but have come at length to our method. That method is not school work instead of, or before, religious work, but Christian enlightenment before church organization. These people are already in churches, but many of them are ignorant and corrupt; they have zeal, but it is without knowledge; they have faith, but it is without works. They are like heaps of gold in quartz, and diamonds in the rough. Our method is not a scramble to get them from one heap and pile them upon another, but it is here and there to refine as much of this gold and polish as many of these diamonds as we can, and shape them into jewels that shall serve as a model, an inspiration, and a holy ambition to their own race, a proof of their capacity to the other race, and as gems of adornment to the crown on the brow of the blessed Saviour. There is no part of our plans that we refer to the decisions of the future with more confidence than our religious efforts.

We have before alluded to the fact that nearly all religious bodies at the North have chosen to work through their own denominational instrumentalities. The funds of this Association come now almost entirely from a few denominations—mainly indeed from the Congregational churches. We recognize the fact, and accept it; and without altering our unsectarian basis, or withdrawing our sympathies from any who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and strive to lift up his poor, we yet cheerfully promise, as we did in our Annual Report in 1867, to use the funds intrusted to us in building up the Redeemer's cause, in the South, agreeably to the principles and the polity of those who put into our hands the means of doing it.

Indians.

We rejoice in the prospect of renewed energy and firmness in the policy of the Government toward the Indians. We hail it as the promise of justice to them and the necessary preliminary to all successful efforts for their civilization and Christianization, and we pledge to the Government and to the Indians our most zealous coöperation.

Chinese in America.

The Chinese in America will still claim our attention. If, as once was anticipated, they shall come in such numbers as to require special religious agencies, our beginnings may be expanded; if not, then what we have begun can easily be turned over to the local churches with whom we are now coöperating, and from whom the funds for this work in a measure come.

Foreign Missions.

Our Foreign Missions, except those in Africa and Jamaica, are not a heavy expense to our treasury. The mission in Africa is mainly supported by funds left to us for that special object, by the late Charles Avery, and this mission we must maintain, and shall do so with new zeal and efficiency, not merely because of the fund thus furnished, but because there seems to be a providential fitness between our work for the Freedmen and that in Africa.

We trust the day will come when the waves of the Atlantic that once heard the groans from the pent-up captives in the hold of the slave-ship, will yet recho with the hymn and the prayer that will roll from the lips of their descendants going back to found empire and Christian civilization in the land of their fathers. A double aim inspires our labors for the Freedmen—their redemption in America, and, through them, the regeneration of benighted and plundered Africa.

In all our labors, we seek the poorest of the poor, the most wronged and oppressed, and our highest hope of reward is that the Master may say in that last great day, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have it unto me."

Deaths.

We are called upon to record with sorrow the death of three of the toilers in our field.

That of Rev. George G. Collins occurred June 22d. He was a graduate of Oberlin College and of Princeton Theological Seminary; and, at the time of his death, was under the commission of the Association, having charge of the Lincoln Mission, Washington, D. C., and being at the same time tutor in the Howard University. He was a young man of unusual promise, and his death is a great loss to the cause of Christian education. He was one of the few colored men of the country who have an education so thorough and liberal, and a character so stable and Christian, as to qualify them for the duties of instructors in the growing colleges and universities established to promote impartial Christian education in the South.

In the death of Rev. J. P. Bardwell, July 28th, the Association lost one of its earliest and most faithful laborers. He was first employed as a missionary among the Ojibue Indians; then as a collecting agent, with general superintendence of our Indian Missions; then as missionary among the freedmen; and then again among the Indians. One who was associated with him in this his last work among the Indians bears this testimony: "I desire to record that, for unbending integrity, for firmness and gentleness, for love to men and devotion to his Lord, I have known few such men as he. George Banga says, with a choked voice, 'That was short notice to go on, but Mr. Bardwell must have been ready, because he was always ready. I have seen many Christian men in my life, but I never saw one who made it his business to be a Christian as Mr. Bardwell.' What more or better do you or I want said over our graves than what my interpreter says over the good man gone?"

Mrs. Anna W. Stickel died in Selma, Ala., during the closing month of the year. Though young in years, she had shown her earnest desire to lift up the degraded. She was a graduate of Oberlin, and was a teacher in Brownsville, Texas. She was subsequently married, and then went with her husband as a teacher at Selma, where she terminated her brief but useful career.

We have had notice of the death of fifty-six Life-Members of the Association.

Life-Members.

During the year 497 Life-Members have been added, making a total of 9179.

SURVEY OF THE FIELD.

FREEDMEN.

EASTERN DEPARTMENT.

Rev. E. M. Cravath,

Field Secretary.

In submitting the report of the year for the Southern Field, it is proper to state at the outset, that the funds available for it were very largely reduced, as compared with those of the last five years. This was caused by the cessation of Government help through the Freedmen's Bureau, and by the taking up of new work among the Chinese and Indians, as well as by the necessity of appropriating a portion of current receipts to the reduction of the debt of the Association.

This retrenchment necessitated a modification of the plan of work. In order to keep in successful operation the largest number of schools, and thus extend most widely their benefits, it became necessary to throw upon the people themselves an increased proportion of the expense of the education of their children; and we are glad to bear testimony to the hearty response, as shown in the large sum that has been raised at the South during the year. It was also clearly the part of wisdom to provide for the support of the chartered institutions and the graded schools, with normal departments, where the future teachers are being trained, even if under the unpleasant necessity of withdrawing support from the smaller and scattered schools.

The result has been, as will appear, that the chartered institutions have been enlarged in their accommodations and facilities, and, in the advanced departments, have had a most encouraging growth; and all the graded schools, with normal departments, have been continued, though, in some cases, with a smaller number of teachers and pupils.

The regularity of attendance has, however, been increased, and a higher standard of discipline and instruction has been possible, so that in actual good accomplished, and with reference to ultimate results, it is felt that a decided gain has been made.

I submit the report of the year more fully under the classification of churches, chartered institutions, graded schools with normal departments, common schools, orphan asylums, and physical relief.

No. churches, 45; ministers, 42.

The churches of the Western Department are included in this tabular statement, for the sake of convenience.

The increase in the number of churches has been greater during this than during any previous year. The number of hopeful conversions, and of members added to the churches, is also larger than ever before reported.

The Plymouth Church of Charleston, S. C., the First Church of Chattanooga, Tenn., and the First Church of Marion, Ala., have begun, and nearly completed, houses of worship at an aggregate cost of over $10,000; and the little church at Dudley, N. C., which was deprived of its place of worship, by the burning of the school-house in January, (probably by an incendiary,) has erected upon the same site the best country church edifice in that part of North-Carolina.

The era of church-building in the South has thus fairly begun, and each year will make a larger demand for help in this direction. It is clearly the true policy, generously to assist churches to secure the necessary conditions of growth, so that they may become self-supporting at an early day. To this same end, every congregation has been called upon to bear a reasonable proportion of the salary of the minister, as well as the other expenses of the church.

To show the spirit that prevails in most of our churches, I submit a few extracts from the correspondence of this office.

Dudley, N. C.

Rev. John Scott, the pastor, thus graphically describes the burning of his church, and the sympathy and assistance he received in building anew:

"DUDLEY, February 21, 1871.

"It is three in the morning. One hour ago, I was awakened by the cry of Fire! and rose only to witness the smoking timbers of what was our beautiful church.

"It appears to me to be the work of an incendiary; but if you print the record of the sad deed, I beg that you will not lay it to the spirit of the Southern people, nor to the spirit of the people in general in this community. I believe the people generally are friendly—indeed they have given reliable evidence of it; and I believe the mass will express sincere regret at this loss, and honestly feel it, and would be swift to punish the offender, could they detect him. I knew nothing of it till it was in ashes. Books and all lost.

"The building and seats cost $2250, and have been often pronounced by good judges to be worth $3000. The greatest care and economy were used in its erection, and it was one of the best buildings of its size owned by the Association. It was neatly furnished, being painted outside and painted and varnished within.

"When all was over, in the stillness of midnight by the smoking ruins we knelt and gave our cause into the hands of God. The bell had fallen in the early part of the fire, and no alarm could be rung; but many aching hearts were there, and we thought of and prayed for the 150 children who to-morrow would be without books or school; and especially the 200 who Sabbath after Sabbath came to hear God's word and fill the church, but can come no more. Many are inquiring what they must do to be saved, others have already begun to learn new lessons of God's truth and His love. Where will they go now?

"We prayed too for all around us, even for those who may have injured us, and I do want the people in the South to feel that there are honest hearts from the North among them; some who want to help them and do them good. Lord bless the people, and remove by the power of His love the unkind feelings that linger in war-tainted bosoms, that we all may be one in Christ!

"We will call a few together and teach as best we can in our dwelling, till you advise us. We can take up our carpet and receive most of our school in our house. We have put up the partitions that last year were cut down to let the schools into our sitting-room, but we can cut them down again. We will wait your advice and God's answer to our prayers.

In sorrow, yours, etc."

"April, 1871.

"I must speak again of the kindness of the white people. They have invited us to use their building every Sabbath. They have contributed about $500 toward the erection of our new building, and that, too, when their own church needs every dollar expended on it to make it as comfortable as the one they are helping us erect for the colored people.

"The most of those who subscribed are of that political party usually thought at the North to be either indifferent or opposed to the progress of the negro. This sympathy is all the more marked from the pains taken to express it. At this season of the year, and especially the present year, there is but very little money in this country. Yet they are anxious to pay their subscriptions, and some even take pains to come miles to bring the money.

"In other ways they manifest an interest. Wishing to go to a neighboring town the other day, a gentleman of thoroughly Southern principles offered me the use of his horse, a favor which he had never granted to his own intimate friends. Last Sunday I was invited to preach to a white congregation five miles away. The house was crowded, the attention close, and I was invited to preach to them statedly. Indeed, we do not feel it to be the least of our labors to have carried to this whole community of white people so much of the Spirit of Christ as to have completely won their respect, and even kindness and co-operation.

"The colored people are also in earnest in the work themselves. One member of my church has subscribed $40, and paid most of it already. The hands are quiet and faithful.

"The religious interest is increasing. The shelter now used for church (when the white people are using theirs so we can't go there) was full last Sabbath.

"I never saw such attention as has always been given to the word of God. They listen with breathless earnestness from first to last through all the service, and talk enthusiastically about it afterward through the week.

"I have five more to baptize next Sabbath, though we don't always receive all that come.

"It would do you good to hear these young men and women tell from fortnight to fortnight of their trouble and resistance to temptation, in contact with those who are older, in this land where whisky-drinking is considered as harmless.

"Little by little we're moving on.

Yours respectfully."

The spirit of the white people of Dudley is also shown by the folowing account of a meeting held just after the fire:

"PUBLIC MEETING AT DUDLEY.

"Pursuant to a call a large meeting of the citizens of Brogden Township, Wayne County, (irrespective of color,) was held at Dudley on Saturday, February 25th, to express the indignation and condemnation of the good citizens at the lawless act—the burning of the colored people's school-house, near Dudley, on the night of Monday, February 20th, 1871.

"The meeting was organized by calling C. F. R. Kornegay, Esq., to the chair, and appointing Captain H. J. Carraway, Secretary.

"The chairman explained the object of the meeting in a forcible and impressive manner, denouncing the outrage in the strongest terms.

"On motion, Dr. W. H. H. Cobb, Rev. J. R. Brooks, Mathew M. Jones, John C. Collier, A. M. Price, and J. W. Taylor were appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the meeting.

"During the absence of the committee, the Rev. John Scott, being called for, spoke very feelingly of the object and results thus far of his mission. He said that he had been sent here by the American Missionary Association of New-York, to labor for the mental and moral elevation of the colored people, and was glad that his efforts had met with success so far and the approval of all the good white citizens. He did not cast the blame of the burning upon the community, he knew that he had the good wishes of all good men, and the citizens en masse should not be censured or blamed for an outrage committed by a few law-breakers, hailing, perhaps, from another section. Mr. Scott was followed by the Rev. John R. Brooks in a few very appropriate and well-timed remarks.

"The committee on resolutions returned and reported the following, which were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we, the white citizens of Brogden Township, a peaceable and law-abiding people, do sincerely deplore and condemn all lawlessness of whatsoever nature and by whomsoever committed, and we hereby express our deep regret and indignation, at the base act of the burning the colored people's church and school-house, near this place, on the night of February 20th, by a supposed midnight incendiary.

"Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the Rev. John Scott, of the American Missionary Association of New-York, who for the past year has been among us teaching and ministering unto the colored people, and we are convinced of the moral and mental good to that race resulting from his labors, and of the consequent effect and general good to the community at large. We hope that he may still be continued in his good work among us.

"Resolved, That we are determined to use every exertion to ferret out the guilty party, and in furtherance of this end we hereby offer a reward of one hundred dollars for the arrest and apprehension of the guilty, sustained by good evidence.

"Resolved, That we will make every effort to aid in the rebuilding of the church and school-house, and respectfully request that it may be rebuilt.

"Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be sent to the Goldsboro Carolina Messenger, and that the Goldsboro News and other papers be requested to copy, and furnish the Rev. John Scott, at Dudley, with one or two copies of the paper to be forwarded to the American Missionary Association. C. F. R. KORNEGAY, Chairman.

"H. J. CARRAWAY, Secretary."

Charleston, S. C.

Rev. J. T. Ford, of Charleston, S. C., sends the following newspaper notice of the interesting services connected with the laying of the corner-stone of

"PLYMOUTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

"The Corner-Stone Laid.

"An assembly of about two thousand persons gathered Monday afternoon, at the corner of Bull and Pitt streets, to attend the services at the laying of the corner-stone of the Plymouth Congregational Church.

"The services were opened with the hymn,

'Glorious things of Thee are spoken,' sung by the crowd in the open air, after which prayer was offered by Rev. J. Legare, of the Morris street Baptist church. Then followed a responsive reading of the Scriptures, and a hymn sung by the pupils of the Avery Institute and members of the Sabbath-school connected with the church, three or four hundred in all.

"An address was delivered by Rev. James T. Ford, pastor of the church, who began by alluding to the burning of the old Circular Church, (December 11th, 1861,) where his people had been formerly accustomed to worship, and said that since that time they had found no continued rest for the soles of their feet. The record of their wanderings would be not unlike the journeyings of Israel in the wilderness; from the Circular Church to Hibernian Hall; to the chapel of the Central Church; to the Orphans' Chapel; to the Laurel street chapel, where they began to worship apart from the congregation of the Circular Church; to the Military Hall, where they entered anew into covenant with God and with one another, and became the Plymouth Congregational Church; and finally to the Avery Institute, their present place of worship. A little more than a year since, by a concurrence of events so remarkable that they could but recognize in it the finger of God pointing them to a place of resting, they were enabled to purchase this lot, so favorable for situation, and in sight of the spot where the precious remains of their dead lie buried.

"He said that a church of two hundred members, united by so strong a band that, though tossed about for many years with no abiding place, they had not been separated from each other, had no need to make apology for continuing to exist, and for adding another to the numerous houses of worship in the city of Charleston. He spoke of the special mission, the distinctive principles of the Congregational churches, but said that denominational differences did not mean a war of sects—the first mission of all was to declare Jesus Christ and him crucified.

"At the close of the address, Mr. Ford deposited in a box, to be placed in a cavity in the corner-stone, a Bible and copies of the church manual, the Declaration of Faith made at Burial Hill, Plymouth, 1865, the Social Compact made by the Pilgrims before landing at Plymouth, the Emancipation Proclamation, the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States, a list of the members of the church, and a brief account of its organization and history.

"Rev. T. W. Lewis, of the M. E. Church, then addressed the assembly, urging a generous contribution in aid of this enterprise. A collection was taken, the people coming forward and depositing their contributions in the hollow of the corner-stone, which was suspended by a derrick over the spot where it was to be laid.

"After that, the stone was lowered to its place, the box deposited in the cavity, a marble slab placed over it, and the assembly joined in the hymn 'I love thy kingdom, Lord.'

"The benediction was given by Rev. Mr. Brown, of the A. M. E. Church, after which the assembly dispersed.

"The church will be 36 feet in front by 64 in length, of the semi-Gothic style. It is to be erected by Messrs. Sawner & Ferguson, of this city, and is to cost about $5000.

"Only about three fifths of this sum is secured; but it is hoped that by self-denial on the part of the church, aided by the generosity of its friends, the rest will be obtained."
—South-Carolina Republican.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

Rev. E. O. Tade furnishes this sketch of the self-denial, energy, and success of his people in building their house of worship:

"CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 21, 1871.

"The church work is moving forward rapidly. We have had a good contribution of labor, both from white and colored people. Our men, boys, and women have worked; 'for the people had a mind to work.' The good sisters bring the dinners.

"The church is up, inclosed, nice floor laid, chimneys built, good roof over it, scaffolds all down, one coat of paint on, and we held our first service in it yesterday. Four weeks ago the lumber and shingles were far apart. The windows, doors, painting, plastering, and seating are still to be provided for. I think $500 more will put us through without debt. Mr. H. has sent me a receipt for one hundred of the five that I borrowed of him last winter. The First Church of Atlanta sends us greeting with $25. Our prospects are good, and hopes bright for the future. I think, with the blessing of God, that in a year or two we shall be self-supporting. Every one feels that the Lord has prospered us. Very truly."

Talladega, Ala.

A teacher in Talladega gives a picture of the earnestness of the people for Sabbath-schools, and of the efforts made by teachers and students to meet the demand:

"TALLADEGA, Nov. 8, 1871.

"The work is still progressing slowly, but, I think, surely, toward quite an awakening. We are getting all of our available force into rank and file for efficient work.

"The people in the country around keep asking for Sunday-school teachers. For instance, the other day a man saw me, and said, 'We want a Sabbath-school. Can't you send us a teacher?' 'How large a school can you raise?' 'Forty or fifty.' 'How far?' 'Six miles.' Said I, 'We have teachers, but no conveyance; if you will make arrangements for that, you shall have a teacher.' Yesterday he told me the folks were mighty glad they were going to have a school, and would see me to-day to make arrangements for conveyance.

"Seven miles out, is a school carried on by three ladies, formerly students, not Christians, and they want assistance. So the calls come. We have every available male in service, and are collecting some money around to hire more when necessary. I think this outside work very important. The people off six or eight miles can't get instruction as those who live here. Poor things! they are growing up almost as devoid of religious instruction as heathens; for what they have, much of it, is poor stuff."

Marion, Ala.

Rev. G. W. Andrews, pastor of the church in Marion, describes a blessed revival enjoyed by his church; the necessity for the intellectual instruction of the converts, and the need of care in admissions to the church:

"MARION, Jan. 23, 1871.

"I have been preaching every night for three weeks with most blessed results. More than a hundred are earnest inquirers, and many have found Christ. All has been very quiet; and the whole awakening has been of God, not man. Among the converts are eight or ten fathers of families, who have never before been reached, as they were too intelligent to believe in such a religion as they had been taught in the past. Such ideas of a Christian life as your missionaries teach satisfies their judgment, and meets the wants of their aching hearts. Very truly yours."

"March 9.

"I most heartily concur in the necessity of having some one to instruct the members of our church in the elements of book-learning. Quite a number who joined us last Sabbath have been very wicked men, and the time they have formerly spent with their companions must in some way be occupied by us. Human nature must have an outlet, and we can't sing and pray all the time, nor persuade others. These men must be enlightened, and with God's help we mean to do it.

"Every thing is moving forward finely. There will be a large number to unite with us next communion. The revival has reached the entire region, compelling even the white church to engage in a series of meetings for weeks. I find it necessary to be cautious about receiving persons into the church. I have the names of twenty-one on my books, a part of whom have been examined for membership. I have never met more interesting cases than I find here. We are full of hope. Yours, truly."

The following, from one of our teachers who visited at Marion a short time last winter, gives other pleasing phases of the work, which we are glad to present:

"But the most interesting prayer-meeting that I ever attended among the freedmen was in Alabama, in the Ku-Klux region, where they at the 'Mission Home' looked well to their guns and their rifles before retiring. I reached there on Wednesday night, just the evening of the weekly prayer-meeeting in the school-house. 'Twas a stormy night, but with water-proofs and umbrellas we ventured. Wholly unused to bullets, I must confess, there was a little trembling under one water-proof, as we wended our way along the little path through the woods, and across the one-plank bridge over the 'Branch.' But once within the building, all fear vanished. The room was filled with the finest-looking colored people I ever saw—many of them having been house-servants in the best families in this aristocratic place.

"The pastor, an able, ready man—and, by the way, one of your own Connecticut ministers—opened the meeting, and then gave it into the hands of the colored brethren; and they carried it on with a liveliness that was truly refreshing. Two or three usually rose at once with words right on their lips.

"This church has only been organized a little over a year, and with the most careful discrimination in regard to membership, now numbers nearly seventy. There had been much to dishearten all along. They had no church building, and had been striving hard to get ready to build; but no sooner would they begin to see a little light through the clouds than the white people, fearing that the men with dark skins might acquire too great a hold on this world's possessions, would remove work from the most prosperous, and thus the clouds would gather again. Referring to this keeping down, one of the members once said, 'No-'count niggers can rub along here well enough, but smart niggers had better look out for other quarters.'

"Even at that time, the danger of their being obliged to disband from outside violence was not entirely over. But as they told of their love for their church, I could hardly help thinking of those stories we all read in our childhood, of Christians in early days, when persecutions but increased zeal.

"There was an undertone of sadness through the remarks of several; for they felt keenly, in a way we at the North can hardly realize, that they knew not what a day might bring forth; but one suddenly rose and changed the key. 'I was sad,' he said, 'when I first came in here, but your words of sadness have made me glad; for they have shown me how much we all love our church; and such love, with the love of God for us, which is even much greater, will carry us through fiery trials. I never felt as strong as I feel to-night. 'Tis true, I don't know what may come upon us; but I do feel that the Lord will help us through.' And then he told what he hoped for in the future in such cheerful words that, as he sat down, they burst forth almost with one voice in a song of praise; and then one after another kneeled down, and, in the most simple words of faith, asked their Father to help his children in this their day of special trouble; and I do not think one present had the slightest doubt of his doing so. For myself, not a moment's misgiving in regard to the Lord's answer, and the building of the church, have I had since.

"At a meeting, just before the close of the term, as I learn from a teacher, one after another rose and pledged himself to do a certain amount toward erecting the building during the summer."

A letter of earlier date describes the first Sunday-school Convention in Alabama. Aside from the present interest we feel in this fact as one of the marks of progress among the colored people, we wish to place it on record as a valuable item of information in making up the future history of Sabbath-schools in the South:

"TALLADEGA, April, 1871.

"You will not object this month, I know, to a slight change of base; so gliding from plantation to town, and from school to convention, listen, if you will, to the echo that comes to you from the first Sunday-school Convention in the State of Alabama.

"Passing through Talladega on my way to Nashville, I halted for a night, and, pilgrim-like, climbed the gently-ascending hill that leads to Talladega College. 'Beautiful for situation,' certainly, is this place, selected by the American Missionary Association for their mountain 'Student Home'—especially as I saw it freshly robed in spring attire.

"Here I learned that preparations were making to hold a colored convention in a few days. Invitations had been sent northward and southward to the various Sunday-schools in the State, and I could not resist the cordial invitation to see and hear for myself. You know the enthusiasm begotten North by such a gathering, but you need to add thereto to conceive at all the feeling in this South-land.

"It was a pleasant sight, that of the delegates coming up the hill from the depot, headed by Mr. Strong, pastor of the Mission Church recently formed here. He led the way to Foster Hall, and there was the usual ceremony of distributing for the night. This was but the beginning. Friday morning brought others, till we had thirty-four Sunday-schools, represented by about sixty delegates. The forenoon of that day was occupied in the organization of this first Association.

"In the afternoon, Mr. Steckel, who is superintendent of our schools in Selma, gave us a very fresh and pleasing blackboard exercise on the text, 'Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.'

"Then came reports from the various Sunday-schools; something like thirty of these are carried on by persons who are now, or have been, connected with Talladega College. It was especially cheering to the teachers to hear these reports of success as told by their pupils, who, twenty, thirty, or forty miles out, had Sunday-schools, with an attendance varying from thirty to eighty. They told of their different modes of gaining pupils, and of the wonderful zeal in some instances of the little children themselves—then of the destitution in many places—of scholars coming four, five, and even eight miles—of their want of Testaments, hymn-books, and papers; but not a word otherwise of difficulty or discouragement. With a log school-house, two or three persons with a little knowledge and a good deal of zeal, aided by a few books, they seemed to have no doubt about the interest of the children.

"One superintendent from Oxford gave an account of his school, and a branch at Needmore, a few miles distant. Yancey Sims, a working delegate, immediately rose to say that there was a 'Needmore' near him, though not so called by law—and convinced us, by an amusing and forcible argument, that there were a good many collections of little huts south, occupied by the 'rising' people, that still might appropriately be called 'Needmores.' Rev. Mr. Silsby, of Selma, gave the sermon of the evening.

"The programme for Saturday, as announced, was 'a basket picnic,' bountiful dinner, etc., and the programme was carried out to the fullest extent. The schools met at Swayne Hall, the colored school building, and marched in procession to the woods, where they were entertained with speeches, till they were ready for a feast of another kind. It is estimated that not less than eight hundred persons were present. They went back to the college grounds, and a pretty sight it was to see the table-cloths spread all over the grass and the families gathering round to partake of the turkey, cake, strawberries, etc., spread thereon; while mules, carts, empty chests, and baskets stood like a wall of defense around the grounds.

"We feel that this convention was a long step upward for the colored people; but, in closing, we want to ask you to remember the 'Needmores' of the South.

"Cordially yours."

Montgomery, Ala.

Of this little church, small in numbers, and without a house of worship, we give these items, furnished by a teacher in the Swayne school:

"The church members, though few in number, are strong in faith, and I have been surprised at their perseverance and devotion to the cause of the Master, when at times the way has seemed so dark before them. This seems to me a very desirable point for a church, and the members generally express a willingness to make large sacrifices in order to aid in its erection. The young people are already sufficiently educated to desire and demand better instruction from the pulpit than they can get in the colored churches.

"There has been some religious interest during the year among those under our care; but of course we should have been glad of very much more.

"We can only hope that the seed we have endeavored to sow may yet spring up and bear fruit even an hundred fold."

II. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.

1. Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, Hampton, Va.

This institution was chartered in 1870. We take the following statistics from the last Annual Catalogue:

O. Howard, M. E. Strieby, James A. Garfield, E. P. Smith, John F. Lewis, B. G. Northrop, Samuel Holmes, Anthony Kimber, Edgar Ketchum, E. M. Cravath, H. C. Percy.

Parish; Girls' Industrial Department—Miss Jane Stuart Woolsey; Boarding Department—Misses Charlotte L. Mackie and Susan H. Harrold; Agricultural Department—Messrs. Albert Howe and F. Richardson.

Summary of Students.—Senior Class, 20; Middle Class, 33; Junior Class, 33; total, 86.

Results attained.

An excellent farm of 125 acres has been purchased, and is well fenced, stocked, and supplied with abundant farm and stable room. Three thousand young fruit-trees, of various kinds, have been set out, and a nursery of ornamental trees started.

During the past two years, the young men have been boarded and lodged from the avails of their farm labor. A large majority of the young women have done as much for themselves by house-work, and by labor in the Industrial Department.

An extensive system of buildings has been erected, supplying room for one hundred boarders, and educational facilities for two hundred and fifty students, and is nearly paid for.

At no other institution south of Washington has so large a capital been invested for the same purpose, and the value of the property is twenty per cent greater than the amount of money put in. It is estimated at one hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

This institution is thoroughly known throughout Virginia, North and South-Carolina, and to indigent colored youth in those States, offers the only opportunity of earning a good education.

The location, being at the terminus of the chief water-courses of the State, is not only very beautiful, but practically central, and is so favorable for cheap subsistence that students are boarded at seven dollars and a half per month.

Applications are far more numerous than admissions; the selection of the best material of the race is practicable. The fitness of under-graduates to teach has been thoroughly proved by experience, and the demand for them is pressing.

The following facts, furnished by General Armstrong, show the demand for teachers from the school at Hampton—a hopeful indication for the school and people of Virginia:

LETTER FROM THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION OF VIRGINIA.

"COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
RICHMOND, March 30, 1871.

"GENERAL S. C. ARMSTRONG:

"MY DEAR SIR: From almost every quarter in our State comes up a cry for teachers for colored schools. To-day thousands, probably, of colored children are without schools because of this unsupplied want. The money is ready, the school-houses are ready, or can be obtained, but the teachers can not be found. Your best pupils must all be put to work in the summer; but you ought to have five times as many pupils as you have.

"I approve the plan of your institution highly. Surely if the moneyed friends of education knew the good you are doing, and might do, they would give your institution a large endowment. Very truly yours,

"(Signed) W. H. RUFFNER, Sup't Pub. Instruction."

"This is significant. It seems that in this old commonwealth there is open to colored youth an unobstructed way to large usefulness and fair wages. Teachers are paid from $20 to $40 per month. Several offers of the latter rate have been made to the undergraduates. Applications are pouring in upon us from the various counties, Princess Anne, Orange, Mathews, Nansemond, Campbell. The towns of Salem, Charlotte, and others have, through their local superintendents, urgently appealed for teachers, and offered good salaries. Prejudice seems to have disappeared from this line of effort, and our work is acceptable to all classes. There has been no compromise. Our position has been fairly won.

"Probably affairs in Virginia are more hopeful than in any other Southern State. She will take the lead in the new as she did in the old, although the most terrible sufferer by the war. A high commercial destiny awaits her. Hampton Roads will be a focus of trade, and this spot, the point of departure of American slavery, has become the point of departure of intellectual freedom and power."

At a later date, General Armstrong presents encouraging views of the results and prospects of the school at Hampton:

"A class of twenty young men and women graduated last June, and are already employed in teaching.

"The Institute has already been practically adopted as head-quarters for colored teachers in the State, and county superintendents of education are in free communication with the principal. There has been a marked cordiality and politeness in the course of the Southern people toward this institution, and students who have in vacation engaged in teaching, have uniformly reported a pleasant experience.

"About three thousand children have already come under the influence of our pupils in day and Sunday-schools, as most of them have taught during their course of study.

"The prospects of this Institute for the coming year are encouraging. The attendance will be nearly one hundred; the grade and scope of the studies will be higher and larger. The industry of printing, which has proved so successful at Cornell University, is to be introduced. There has been great success in teaching young women to run the sewing-machine. The industrial character of this school will become more and more varied. When Government shall, as it probably will ere long, take charge of the system of national telegraphy, instruction in that art will have prominence. It is important to offer instruction in those arts from which colored youth are now practically excluded, such as photography, practical engineering, surveying, etc., and to make them familiar with the best kinds of farming machinery."

Summary of Students.—Sophomores, 5; Freshmen, 9; Ladies' Course, 6; Senior Preparatory, 5; Junior Preparatory, 17; Academic, 60; Intermediate, 86; Primary, 107; total, 295.

President Fairchild writes:

"The year that has just closed has been one of great interest and encouragement. All departments of the school have been well instructed, the pupils have been attentive and easily controlled, and, in general, have made excellent progress. About seventy-five of them are qualified to teach, and between forty and fifty have taught a few months during the year. We anticipate the time when we shall be able to furnish several hundred teachers during our long vacation.

"We have enjoyed a good degree of religious interest a portion of the year, and several of our pupils have been hopefully converted. We long for a much greater revival. The prayer-meetings are uniformly well attended and interesting. The young people's prayer-meeting, on Sunday evening, has averaged over a hundred in attendance.

"Ten mission Sabbath-schools have been maintained—six white, three colored, and one mixed. Two of them have met under the trees, and others in log school-houses, with several classes under the bushes around, but they have been well attended, and constant progress is exhibited. As many preaching places have been occasionally supplied.

"The two races, if there are two races of men, have got on together without friction and without impediment. If any evils have grown out of the arrangement, they have been felt elsewhere, not here. The ratio of white to colored has been as two to three, so far as we could ascertain by their looks and their testimony. Should we undertake to separate the races, as we never shall, we should be obliged to apply to somebody more skilled in 'visible admixtures' than we are, to accomplish the task. With the constant evidences before us of the closest intimacy of the races in past days, it is a little difficult to see why, in this region, there should be serious opposition to their attending the same school. If the next quarter of a century is to witness half the progress of the past, the present generation of children will see the curse of caste removed. God hasten the day!

"We have constantly felt the need of better accommodations. Our chapel is simply a white-washed barn. It has been the scene of many interesting occasions, and some would leave it with tears for a new one. But it is not good for a family to remain forty years in the same log house. They can not develop well, if they can be satisfied with such progress. Our school is in very serious need of a new chapel, with new recitation-rooms, and other accommodations. There are many men in the country who, if they could see our need, would relieve us; but they see wants nearer home, and feel them as we feel ours. We rejoice in the good they are doing, while we wish somebody would do more good here.

"But our most pressing material want is a new ladies' boarding-hall. The young men are well accommodated in Howard Hall, the beauty and pride of the place. But our ladies, though patient and happy, are crowded into small rooms, and half a dozen or more into the garret. We have not half the young ladies we might have by extending the notice of our school; but we dare not invite them till we have room for them. We often visit the foundation of the new hall, and rejoice in the noble structure we see in imagination. This will comfort us till we see something more solid and tangible.

"The closing exercises of the year were more interesting than ever, and were attended by nearly two thousand people, which, in a village of two hundred inhabitants, is certainly an encouraging audience. Eighteen of our students, half white and half colored, without selection, presented their orations and essays in the forenoon, and other addresses occupied the afternoon. For an old Abolitionist, who has not forgotten the mobs he witnessed at the North thirty-five years ago, to find himself addressing such a crowd of white and colored, rich and poor, sitting promiscuously, with perfect order, in the centre of Kentucky, uttering their hearty responses to the most radical doctrines of equal rights, is a joy almost bewildering. He is ready to exclaim, 'Now, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.'"

3. Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

This institution was chartered in August, 1867. We take the following statistics from the last Annual Catalogue:

Board of Trustees.—John Ogden, President; Rev. H. S. Bennett, Secretary; George L. White, Treasurer; Rev. M. E. Strieby, Rev. E. M. Cravath, Judge John Lawrence, Enos Hopkins, Hon. John Eaton, Jr., John J. Cary.

Instructors.—A. K. Spence, A.M., Principal; Rev. H. S. Bennett, Instructor in Theology; George L. White, Treasurer and Instructor in Music; John E. Smith and Miss Helen C. Morgan, Instructors in Academic Department; Miss Elizabeth E. Backup, Teacher in Grammar School; Mrs. E. M. Robinson, Teacher in Intermediate Department; Miss Julia E. Benedict, Teacher in Model School; Miss Ellen M. Horton, Teacher in Night School; Mrs. L. E. Aray and Miss Ella Shephard, Teachers of Instrumental Music; Miss Henrietta Matson, Preceptress; Miss L. Mina Stratton, Matron.

Summary of Students.—Total number of pupils, 524: boarders, 99; in Latin, 40; in Greek, 20; Normal Department, 40; Music, 52; Theology, 4.

Professor Spence makes the following report of the work of the year, and the condition of the institution:

"Our 524 pupils represent nine different States. Quite a number have come to the city especially to attend this institution. We have four pupils who are just ready for college.

Religious Work.

"Of the 99 pupils who share the blessings of the 'Home,' 32 have become Christians this year; 41 were already professors of religion, most of them through the influence of the school in former years, and 26, as far as it is known, are still unconverted; but several of these have been in the Home but a short time. It is worthy of note that all the young ladies and misses are professed Christians. Many scenes of deep interest have occurred. The sensible presence of the Lord has been felt among us during the entire year.

"The church is so identified with the school that it can scarcely be considered apart from it. Its membership is now 72, of whom 22 have been added this year. It affords a religious home for the student boarders, where the Gospel is preached intelligently; and it also has an influence directly and indirectly on the churches of the city. Its earnest pastor, the Rev. H. S. Bennett, is a member of a ministerial association, composed of pastors of colored churches, often preaches in their pulpits, visits them at their homes, and is highly esteemed by them. Through his efforts also churches have been planted in Athens, Ala., and Pomona, Cumberland County, Tenn.

"The average attendance in the Sunday-school is 200. We have one mission-school; and besides this all the schools in the city, sixteen in number, have been aided more or less by the teachers and pupils in this institution.

"As a spontaneous result of the outpouring of the Spirit at the beginning of the year missionary labor in this city was begun. As in primitive times, they went everywhere preaching Jesus; in the streets, and in private houses; in the hovels of the poor, and at the bedside of the sick; in hospitals and in prisons; by tract distribution, Bible-reading, personal conversation, and prayer. Soon the Sunday-school went up from 90 to 300; and street-meetings were held on the Sabbath among those who were to a great extent destitute of religious influences. To systematize this form of effort, a Christian Association was formed, each one of whose members promises to do at least one hour of religious labor a week for the good of others. This society now numbers 49. Under its direction several household or neighborhood prayer-meetings have been held each week, at which ten conversions have been reported.

"While the direct good attained by these efforts has been great, the reflex influence on the workers has also been great, leading them to more consecration of life to God, and teaching them practical ways of working in religious things.

"Through the Society of Missionary Inquiry, and otherwise, the attention of the pupils has been turned to those parts of the world still lying in heathenism, especially Africa, and some have more or less definitely given themselves to that field of labor. One has entirely consecrated herself to the life of a missionary in Africa; and it is to be hoped that many may be trained here to a like devotion."

The Future of Fisk University.

"The temporary hospital buildings, purchased of the government, are fast going to decay, causing much annual expense to keep them in repair, ill adapted as they must be for their present use. The grounds are altogether inadequate, causing much additional labor to the teachers, as well as discomfort to the students. With a college-class knocking at the door for higher instruction, what answer shall be given? Shall there be built in the State of Tennessee, situated as it is between the extreme North and South, an institution of learning worthy of the name of university, dedicated to God and humanity, free from caste prejudice, and open to all? Shall it be planted here, beneath the shadow of that capitol building from which the flag of the nation floated so early in the war? here, where the final great battle of the West was fought? here, at this point, which was the key to the South in war, and will be in peace? Shall this institution, which is now a beacon-light in surrounding darkness, continue? The answer must be 'Yes;' and given in dollars and cents."

Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga.

The charter of this institution was secured October 17th, 1867.

Board of Trustees.—E. A. Ware, President; C. W. Francis, Secretary; Thomas N. Chase, Treasurer; George Whipple, E. P. Smith, E. M. Cravath, James Atkins, William Jennings, Joseph Wood, J. B. Fuller, John A. Rockwell, Charles H. Morgan.

From the annual catalogue we extract the following:

Instructors.—E. A. Ware, A.M.; Thomas N. Chase, A.M.; Mrs. Thomas N. Chase, Mrs. E. A. Ware, Mrs. Lucy E. Case, Miss Lucia A. Kingman, Teacher of Model School; Miss M. C. Tarbell, Miss Mary R. Pomeroy, Teacher of Music; Miss Fannie Gleason, Matron; E. K. Jencks, Steward.

Summary.—Senior Preparatory Class, 1; Middle Class, 26; Junior Class, 38; English Branches, 105; Theological Class, 3; Boarders, 124; Day Pupils, 46. Total number students, 173.

We submit a statement by E. A. Ware, who has been in charge of our work in Atlanta since September, 1866, and reports of the examination at the close of the past school year, as evidences of the remarkable success of this institution:

"ATLANTA, GA., June 1, 1871.

"Two years ago to-day, the corner-stone of our first building was laid. During the summer, the building was finished. It was used during last year for dormitories for both boys and girls, teachers' rooms, dining-rooms, and school-rooms.

"As the year advanced, it became plain that we should be obliged to refuse many applicants during the next year, unless our accommodations were increased; and a second building was erected last summer. Both these buildings are of brick, and each four stories high; the first is 83 by 40 feet, besides an extension for kitchen and laundry; the second is 100 by 40.

"We thus began this school year with more than twice the room of last, and with the great advantage of separate buildings for males and females, and also for dining-room and school-rooms.

"The whole number of pupils during the year has been 158; the largest number in one month, 136; the average per month, 121. The whole number of boarders has been 124; the largest number for one month, 100; the average number per month, 78.

"These have come from all parts of Georgia, from Alabama, and Tennessee. Many of them are from schools of the Association; while many others are from country places, and have had little or no schooling. A large number were brought in by last year's pupils, who taught during the summer. A very large majority of them are fitting for teachers, and nearly eighty will teach during the vacation, if places can be found for them.

"In the Senior Class there is but one pupil; he is well fitted to enter college this fall.

"The Middle Class numbers 26; 19 males, 7 females. Their studies have been Latin Reader and Cæsar, Greek Lessons and Greek Testament; Ancient History—Greek and Roman; three books of Geometry, review of Arithmetic, Composition, and Declamation.

"The Junior Class numbers 38; 28 males, 10 females. The other pupils are studying the usual grammar school studies and are classified according to advancement.

"Three young men, who for various reasons will not take a full course of study, have formed a Theological Class and have been studying the Acts. (They have studied Matthew in Sunday-school.) They also, by familiar lecture, have been instructed in some of the leading points of theology. One of these, Floyd Snelson, was ordained last month, the council expressing great satisfaction at his examination. He will become pastor of the Congregational Church at Andersonville, but will continue in school one, and perhaps two, years longer.

"There has not been that general religious interest which we have hoped and prayed for; but one after another has chosen the new life, and some 18 have become Christians since the beginning of the year.

"Every effort is put forth to make the school as home-like as possible. Teachers live in each building, and each is under the care of a lady. Teachers and pupils sit at the same table, and every evening all unite in family devotions.

"The young men are divided into two sections; and, after school and Saturday, work at leveling earth-works, cultivating the garden, etc. The young ladies do much of the house-work.

"The last Legislature voted an annual appropriation to our school of $8000. The vote passed the Senate by a large majority, and the House unanimously. I need not say that this was in every way most gratifying.

"From the Peabody Fund we have received $800, to aid sixteen pupils who are fitting to teach.

"There have been many and generous responses to appeals for aiding needy pupils, and for furnishing rooms. We have had more than twice as many pupils this year as last. Our new building has been crowded so that there have been three in some rooms which were designed for two only. We are making earnest efforts to raise the means to enlarge this building so as to be ready to meet the demand of next year. Friends here in Atlanta have subscribed over three thousand dollars for this work, and thus we hope it will be accomplished. Very truly, E. A. WARE."

THE ATLANTA EXAMINATION.

We give more than usual prominence to the examination at the Atlanta University, because the circumstances and results were more than usually significant.

As the university received State aid, the Governor properly appointed a committee of examiners, and in selecting that committee, he wisely chose men of high standing and conservative tendencies. Among the number were an ex-governor, a judge, an editor, a clergyman, and an M. D.; the majority of them Democrats in politics.

The result, as appears by the report and other sources, was a triumphant vindication of the negro capacity for education, and a complete revolution in the opinions of the committee, and of the other eminent persons present.

It is a small thing for us to say that we rejoice in this success of our school. It affords far higher grounds of gratification; for in it lies the hope of real and permanent harmony and prosperity for the South. Arms, legislation, and politics may fail; but when the colored people show that they can and do improve, and when the whites are candid enough to admit and appreciate it, then we may believe that the era of good feeling is dawning. We verily believe that this Atlanta examination is the beginning of a great and glorious end.

To show the impression produced on the spot among teachers, pupils, and the people of Atlanta, we give below a letter written at the time, under the fresh impulse of the occasion:

"DEAR J——: ATLANTA, July 2, 1871.

"I can't wait till I see you before letting you know of our great joy and victory.

"I do feel that in our school-room during our three days of examination, last week, there was a conquest over prejudice that will revolutionize Georgia. The Governor appointed ten men, mostly Democrats, one of whom was the Governor of Georgia during the rebellion, as an examining committee. Had they not been appointed, I presume they never would have crossed our threshold. One acknowledged when he received the appointment from the Governor he was shocked, but, by the earnest request of one of the other members of the committee, consented to come for two hours. He remained, however, intensely interested through the three days.

"Well, they all came but one; they saw and were conquered. The ex-governor was to report for the committee on the last day. He is not a man easily moved, but is remarkable for his strong will, fixedness of purpose, and executive ability. But a more free and full confession of injustice to mission teachers, and of prejudiced belief in the inability of the negro to rise, could not have been desired. The people of Atlanta have learned, through their eminent men of the city, that their teachers have no political scheme to carry out, and no ambition to gratify; they have learned that the blackest student could demonstrate clearly problems in algebra and geometry, and read smoothly Latin and Greek.

"You can not understand as we do, how much this lesson they learned in those three days involves. The possibility of educating the masses, both colored and white, makes the free school system, which is being agitated, more popular.

"Strong opposition to carrying out our plans with reference to our building will be quelled. Appropriations from the Legislature will be more readily granted. A better feeling toward all Northern men will be kindled by seeing that the calumny which has been heaped upon us has been most unjust.

"We hear our school discussed and admired at every corner; the city papers are full of praise; distinguished men stop to shake hands with us on the street. In short, such a revolution in feeling is amazing. The joy of teachers and pupils at the close of the exercises was perfectly thrilling. We closed with the doxology. I could have repeated 'Praise Him all creatures here below,' for an hour. Indeed, the thought has not left my heart yet. One of the girls said to me as we left the school-room, 'I just want to shout; the hand of God is in this; we never could have done so well ourselves. God was with us.' Another said, 'I never prayed so earnestly in my life that we might have success, and deserve it, too.' Certainly God must have heard and answered her; for though a fine scholar, she outdid herself in every thing. She illustrated the three methods of elementation in algebra. She was so perfectly self-possessed, and answered every thing so clearly, that as she sat down a burst of applause could scarcely be repressed.

"Yours truly, T. N. C."

From the Atlanta New Era, June 27.

The annual exercises of the Normal and Preparatory Departments of Atlanta University were opened yesterday.

We have never seen an examination conducted more fairly, more thoroughly, and which resulted more satisfactorily than did most, if indeed not all, the classes.

The language of the pupils was generally good, very rarely, if ever, betraying any traces of that peculiar "lingo" for which the Southern African is noted. The answers were usually given by the pupils in their own language, and not from a literal rendition of the text. Hence, on that account, their correct pronunciation and appropriate use of words was all the more noticeable.

Perhaps the most interesting exercise of the day was the examination by Professor Chase of the classes in Cæsar, Virgil, and the Anabasis of Xenophon. It is certainly an interesting sight, especially to a native Southern man, to see a large class of boys and girls—in which the African of every shade, from jet black to the bright quadroon, is represented—reading, translating correctly, and parsing systematically and accurately such examples of Latin and Greek composition as are to be found in Virgil and the Anabasis.

From the New Era, June 29.

The third and last day's anniversary of Atlanta University closed yesterday.

The rhetorical exercises comprised speeches, original and selected, by the students of the various classes, and were rendered in a manner highly creditable alike to teachers and pupils. During the whole of the exercises we were unable to detect the erroneous pronunciation of but three words, and these were by a single student.

At the close of the rhetorical exercises by the school, Rev. W. B. Brown, of Newark, N. J., delivered a very appropriate and impressive address on the subject of education as applicable to the negro race, abounding in much practical good sense, and timely and appropriate advice and words of encouragement to the pupils. Mr. Brown's address was timely, able, chaste, practical, and, at times, truly eloquent.

He was followed by ex-Governor Joseph E. Brown, Chairman of the Board of Visitors, who paid a high but well merited compliment to the ability, skill, and self-sacrificing devotion of the faculty, and made some very timely and pertinent remarks in advocacy of the cause of education.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

The exercises in the Atlanta (Colored) University during the present week have been exceedingly interesting, as they are something novel in this section of country.

We were not prepared to believe what we witnessed. To see colored boys and girls, between fourteen and eighteen years of age, reciting in Greek and Latin, and demonstrating correctly problems in algebra and geometry, and seemingly understanding what they demonstrated, appears almost wonderful.

There was a large crowd in attendance yesterday to witness the exercises.

The Board of Visitors went through every department of the University, and were pleased with the neatness, order, and discipline maintained in every one.

There are one hundred and sixty students in attendance from this and adjoining States, The students who come from a distance obtain board and tuition at $11 per month. while those in the city are only charged $1 per month. The University owns some $90,000 worth of property.

They receive $8000 per annum from the State of Georgia. Some of the most proficient and advanced scholars, strange as it may seem, are genuine coal-black Africans.

From the Georgia (Augusta) Republican.

We had the pleasure of attending for a short time, on Wednesday, the annual commencement of Atlanta University. We were gratified to see the proficiency already attained by the pupils of this school, who but a few years ago were slaves. We were informed that the Board of Visitors, most of whom were Southern men and Democrats, expressed great surprise at the ability displayed by the scholars during the examination.

Governor Brown, speaking for the Board of Visitors, said that the exercises of the two preceding days had dispelled the opinion, heretofore entertained, that the members of the African race were incapable of a high degree of mental culture.

REPORT OF BOARD OF VISITORS OF ATLANTA UNIVERSITY.

The following is the report of the Board of Visitors to the Atlanta University:

ATLANTA, GA., June 28, 1871.

To His Excellency R. B. Bullock, Governor of Georgia:

The Board of Visitors appointed by your excellency to attend the examination of the students of the "Normal and Preparatory Departments of the Atlanta University," on the 26th and 27th inst., have the honor to that the undersigned have performed the duty assigned them, having given earnest attention to all the examination exercises on the days designated in your order of appointment.

The Atlanta University was incorporated in the year 1867, and has now been in active operation about two years. Designed to afford opportunity for thorough education to members of a race only recently elevated to citizenship, and much of its prescribed curriculum of studies being of a higher grade than that of other institutions in the South whose doors are opened to pupils of color, it is, in our section of the country, a novel enterprise, concerning the success and usefulness of which much interest is felt all over the Union.

We therefore deemed it our duty, not only to give the examination the strictest attention, but also to carefully scrutinize every thing pertaining to the management of the institution.

The examination was conducted in a manner fairly and truly indicative of the character of the mental training to which the pupils have been subjected, and of the actual attainments of each in his or her studies.

We were agreeably impressed with the numerous evidences of the patience, painstaking perseverance, and professional skill of the teachers, which the thorough training and admirable demeanor of the pupils demonstrated. It would not comport with our sense of propriety to award especial praise to individual teachers employed in the University, since all are so well skilled. But it is due to them and the public to say that Mrs. Chase, Mrs. Case, Miss Tarbell, and Miss Pomeroy, whose classes were examined in our presence, are well and fully qualified for the duties of their several departments; that Professor E. A. Ware, Principal of the University, and Mr. Thomas N. Chase, Professor of Ancient Languages, are masters of their profession. The progress of their classes and the thoroughness of their teaching, and the unmistakable evidences visible on every hand (in the school-room, the dormitories, and elsewhere about the premises) of order, system, and judicious discipline, have won this testimony from us.

The exercises of the examination were conducted strictly in the order indicated in the printed programme, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.

At every step of the examination we were impressed with the fallacy of the popular idea (which, in common with thousands of others, a majority of the undersigned have heretofore entertained) that the members of the African race are not capable of a high grade of intellectual culture. The rigid tests to which the classes in algebra and geometry, and in Latin and Greek, were subjected, unequivocally demonstrated that, under judicious training and with persevering study, there are many members of the African race who can attain a high grade of intellectual culture. They prove that they can master intricate problems in mathematics, and fully comprehend the construction of difficult passages in the classics.

Many of the pupils exhibited a degree of mental culture which, considering the length of time their minds have been in training, would do credit to members of any race.

We fully satisfied ourselves that the system of intellectual and moral training adopted in this institution is eminently practical. The rudiments of education are taught most thoroughly; reading, writing, and arithmetic receiving their full share of attention.

The exercises in reading and singing were most pleasing and gratifying. The system of teaching these useful branches having wrought such proficiency as we witnessed among the students of the University, is in our opinion worthy of adoption in all our schools.

We found abundant evidences of the very judicious moral training to which the pupils of the institution are daily subjected. Their satisfactory answers to questions tended to define the character of their moral training, their polite behavior, general modesty of demeanor, and evident economy and neatness of dress, are indicative of a conviction on the part of the pupils that they are being educated for usefulness, and not for mere ostentation or to gratify a selfish ambition.

We inspected the buildings, and found them admirably adapted to the purposes for which they were erected. They are kept in a neat and clean condition. Everywhere in and about them an intelligent regard is had for those sanitary rules, so important to be observed in institutions like this, where numerous individuals are daily and nightly assembled.

It is patent that judicious economy pervades the management of every department of the institution. We are convinced that the funds placed in the hands of the managers have been wisely expended.

That so much good has been done with the means at command has been chiefly due to the missionary spirit with which the teachers entered upon their self-assigned task, and have performed their arduous duties while receiving salaries barely sufficient to supply the necessaries of life.

Accompanying this report we hand you a copy of the "Catalogue of the Atlanta University" for the years of 1870–71, in which is published a history of the institution, an account of receipts and expenditures, etc., since its organization. We heartily commend the institution to the fostering care of the State, whose appropriation in aid of it, we are satisfied, has thus far been judiciously expended, to the attention of the benevolently inclined throughout the country, and to the kindly sympathy and approval of the people in whose midst it is located.

We are aware that it is too much the habit of boards of visitors to educational institutions to regard themselves as under obligations to praise without stint all that they may see, and point out no defects which they may discover.

In discharging the duty to which we were assigned by your excellency, for considerations not necessary to recount, we have felt that it was our duty to give to you, and through you to the public, a report strictly according with the facts.

Of the justice of this report the incredulous can satisfy themselves by visiting the institution, as we have done, with an eye single to the truth.

That the usefulness of the Atlanta University may be promoted and enhanced, we recommend that our public-spirited citizens visit it, not only on public occasions, but during the hours of the ordinary exercises of the institution.

Very respectfully yours,

Joseph E. Brown,	W. A. Hemphill,
William L. Scruggs,	John L. Hopkins,
John H. Knowles,	D. Mayer,
James L. Dunning,	Jared Irwin Whitaker,

5. Talladega College, Talladega, Alabama.

A charter for Talladega College was received February 17th, 1869.

Board of Trustees.—H. E. Brown, President; B. F. Sawyer, Secretary; George Whipple, Treasurer; E. P. Smith, E. M. Cravath, J. G. Chandron, William Savery, Ambrose Headen, Miss P. M. Beebe.

Number of pupils, 386.

Instructors.—A. A. Safford, A.M.; Mrs. L. M. Safford, Mrs. Phœbe M. Sparhawk, Miss Josephine Pierce, Miss Dell A. Safford, Miss Kate S. Mattison, Matron; E. M. Sparhawk, Superintendent Labor Department.

At the close of last year, Rev. H. E. Brown, who had, in 1867, taken possession, in the name of the A. M. A., of the college property, and established the school, returned North for the purpose of completing his course of study in theology, having just finished Foster Hall, a substantial three-story brick building, 40 by 100 feet, and thus put the institution in a condition for a greatly enlarged work.

He was succeeded by A. A. Safford, of Chicago, Ill., under whose care the school has been prosperous and successful. Much has been done during the year toward bringing this institution before the people of the State, and establishing it in their confidence. Previous to the completion of Foster Hall, it was not possible to give suitable accommodations to students from abroad, and so, except in plan, the school had been mainly a local one. It is now well known, and is winning for itself patronage and support as the future college of the State for the education of the people, irrespective of race, condition, or color.

Mr. Safford writes,

"The fall term of the State normal and A. M. A. schools passed pleasantly, and closed with a satisfactory examination, and an exhibition which was well appreciated. At the close, as a result of the 'capture' of the State by the Democrats, the State normal school was ordered to be removed to a point further south. There has, in fact, been no such removal, but a suspension of all the normal schools in the State, both white and colored. This did not affect us, however, for the students, almost without exception, remained with us, although they were thus obliged to pay tuition. The winter term brought to our doors the public school (colored) of Talladega. By making many changes in our rooms, we were able to accommodate them all. Then followed a thorough grading of the school.

"Nearly 400 pupils in all have been enrolled; 60 in the normal department. Many of these are young men and women who attended school in the fall term, and taught during the winter.

"A literary society, called the 'Mutual Improvement Society,' has been well sustained in order and exercises, and has been productive of much good. It has been under the control of the teachers, who are honorary members, but is officered by the students.

"The Sabbath-school has increased from 140 to 300 members, and 31 mission Sabbath-schools have been taught by our young men within a radius of twenty miles. There has been no marked revival, but a good degree of religious interest has continued during the year. All but three of the young men in our family are Christians. And at this point I can not forbear mentioning the great religious work that was previously accomplished here through the efforts of Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Brown. Its influence upon the colored people, and through them upon the school, can hardly be overestimated, and for it we are profoundly thankful.

"Most of the forty young men and women who have boarded in our family have had work furnished them on the farm, in the garden, the industrial department, and the house, so that they have been able to pay the nominal price for board and tuition. But we could not furnish labor to all who desired it, and some had to return home in sadness and disappointment.

"Our needs will be even more pressing next year than they are now. We must have better accommodations for the young men. They have been compelled to live four in a room, and sleep three in a bed. These and many more inconveniences and discomforts have been borne patiently by them; but with the large increase in our number which we expect next year, it will be impossible to stretch our present boundaries so as to accommodate them all.

"We need a bell for the college building. Thus far we have been called to service, to school, and to prayer-meeting by the notes of a great tin horn. Our 'sexton' is quite skillful, and worse sounds have been heard than he produces from it; but we long for the sweet, clear, inviting, home-like tone of a bell.

"The spirit shown by the white citizens of Talladega has been an occasion for gratitude. We have never been insulted or injured in word, act, or manner. Several of the best citizens have called upon us, and visited our schools. They have approved our course, and have assured us that there is no danger of our being disturbed in any way."

III. GRADED SCHOOLS WITH NORMAL DEPARTMENTS.

1. Williston School, Wilmington, N. C.

Rev. Henry B. Blake, Belchertown, Mass.; Mrs. Mary R. W. Blake, Belchertown, Mass.; Miss Ella Roper, Worcester, Mass.; Miss Hannah Blake, New-Britain, Ct.; Miss E. A. Warner, Lowell, Mass.; Miss H. L. Fitts, Candia, N. H.; Miss Mary Kildare, Newry, Ireland; Miss Martha J. Norton, Strong, Me.; Miss Susan R. Child, Woodstock, Ct.; Miss Emma McKeller, Wilmington, N. C.

Value of school property, $9000; number of pupils, 350; number in Sabbath-school, 200.

Our Superintendent, Mr. Blake, says,

"Our schools have been well ordered and thoroughly taught, and have made good progress. The good results of our work in the past are now plainly visible. They are seen in the many houses for the Freedmen going up all around us—not hovels, but cottages; and in the improved dress and furniture of the people, the result of a subtle influence going from our home and school into a hundred homes. They are seen especially in the colored congregations. There are signs unmistakable that the most ignorant of the preachers are going to the wall. The people will not hear them, while the more advanced are making great efforts to put themselves abreast their work. The 'extravagances' are passing away from their assemblies and order and decency are becoming the rule. We have seen a marked change in this line this year.

"We are seeing the results of our school work in the change in public sentiment. Our schools now command respect. The day for any thing else is past. We now receive, from a number that is continually growing, the most cordial sympathy and support.

"We think we may say now that a system of free-schools has been inaugurated in North-Carolina, and is likely to become a permanent thing. To this great result the school work in Wilmington for the last five years has largely contributed. I have preached considerably in the large colored churches, and we have had a weekly preachers' meeting, in which a number of the preachers have met for the study of the Bible and the discussion of every thing connected with the preachers' work. It has given us an opportunity to teach those who are teaching."

REPORT BY M. A. WARREN, PRINCIPAL.

"I do not know that I can better begin my annual report than by giving you an idea of our anniversary. Imagine, then, our 300 pupils, with 300 more of parents and friends, filling our chapel to its utmost. Among others on the platform are F. L. Cardozo, Secretary of State, and Hon. J. K. Jillson, State Superintendent of Education, and many Southern teachers who have come to see for themselves whether the reports of our scholarship are true. The exercises consist of singing, original declamations and compositions—every one (except the music) being the product of the brains of our pupils. One was a résumé of the life of Martin Luther, another of that of Washington, two were on education, one on home, etc. The thought displayed in some was a surprise even to us. Following these exercises was a brief review of the advanced senior class in geometry, Cicero, and Cæsar. At the close, about 60 certificates, similar to diplomas, were given by the principal to such pupils as had earned a public approbation of their industry and good conduct; after which we heard remarks from gentlemen present. Mr. Cardozo made a statement which I must be pardoned for repeating. 'To-day,' said he, 'I have listened to renderings of Cæsar and Cicero, and demonstrations of propositions in geometry (one of which he had remembered puzzling over when in college) from boys whom six years ago I was instructing in the barest rudiments!'

"The branches pursued this year have been history, geography, arithmetic, grammar, rhetoric, (simple,) Constitution U. S., algebra, geometry, Latin, Greek, and lesser studies. The progress made has been satisfactory. Every year, some in our higher classes leave school to go to work. This is sometimes a little discouraging, but most of our present advanced pupils express a determination to persevere to graduation. One young lady, who was owing us for books, stated, not long since, that her father was so troubled to pay for a building lot which he had just secured for a home, that she disliked to ask him for money; that her mother was caring for some motherless children, and out of school she was quite busy in sewing for them; that she had been teaching an apprentice of her father's, who then owed her seventy-five cents for it; 'but he hasn't paid me yet.' 'And do you intend to return to school next term?' 'Oh! yes, sir; and until I graduate, if I possibly can.' And thus through poverty she is struggling up to the prize, namely, to be a teacher. This spirit is deepening; I assure you it is a pleasure to witness it, and to be the one chosen to stimulate and direct it.

"When directed to raise the tuition to a dollar a month, I was very doubtful of my success; but having called a meeting of the parents, and explained to them how the Association is now embarrassed by a heavy debt, they heartily responded, and promised to try to pay the required tax. To those who are absolutely too poor to pay it, I have always made abatement. The amount raised this year for tuition is $1644.21."

4. Lewis High-School, Macon, Ga.

Miss M. E. Sands, Saco, Me.; Miss E. M. Barnes, Bakersfield, Vt.; Miss S. A. Hunt, Sunderland, Mass.; Miss M. M. Fitch, Holliston, Mass.; Miss E. W. Abbott, New-Haven, Ct.; Miss S. A. G. Stevens, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Mr. Henry Jones, Macon, Ga.

Value of school property, $12,000; number of pupils, 501; number in Sabbath-school, 175.

We extract the following from the report of Miss M. E. Sands, the Superintendent:

"Our highest class have finished United States history and arithmetic, and have taken up physiology and algebra. Two young ladies have gone to Atlanta University. Other scholars are as well qualified, but are not yet ready to leave their homes.

"I was asked by a white gentleman, a few days since, if the scholars learned well. He had never visited a colored school, but had been told that the pupils could not get beyond a certain point. I assured him that none of ours had yet reached that point. At once accepting my invitation to visit the school, he was both pleased and surprised at what he saw and heard.

"Our night-school of forty men and women, who work hard during the day, is one of our greatest pleasures. They are so eager to learn, apply themselves so closely, and some of them make such rapid progress, that it is really a privilege to teach them.

"But the most precious result of the year is the many conversions to Christ among our scholars. Happy days and weeks were those when it was our privilege to wait on the Saviour, to follow His bidding, and labor with those who were trying to find Him, and to hear them rejoicing at last in His forgiving love."

The following letter was written by Mrs. Neely, the wife of the county superintendent of schools. We rejoice to have such cordial commendation of the work from one so competent to judge:

"MONTGOMERY, April 18, 1871.

"It has occurred to me that possibly you might be interested in a letter from Montgomery, written by a spectator like myself.

"The teachers are all working too hard.

"It is a pleasure to see the great improvement that has been made here within two or three years. A large part of the scholars are as well advanced as white children of the same age generally are at the North.

"The Sunday-school is growing larger; and they spare no pains or money to make it attractive. Miss W—— often spends one or two hours of Saturday in putting upon the board some beautiful design for the morning Sunday-school lesson.

"Last Friday we had a little impromptu celebration of the firing on Fort Sumter. To see the whole great school together, with waving flags, and hear them sing 'America,'

'John Brown's Soul is Marching on,' 'We are Rising,' 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' etc., and think of ten years ago! What hath God wrought!

"Many of the scholars are beginning to teach again, mostly in Montgomery County. Mr. Neely was much pleased with their services."

Miss E. C. Ayer also writes us, in June,

"A number have necessarily left this month, but others have come in, and there is a good degree of interest manifested. The older ones especially are very ambitious; and our hearts are encouraged as we learn how different ones manage to support themselves and continue their studies. One of the normal scholars is in charge of the first primary department in the school, and is quite successful."

10. Lincoln School, Marion, Alabama.

Mr. T. C. Stewart, Marion, Ala.; Mrs. T. C. Stewart, Marion, Ala.; Rev. G. W. Andrews, East-Hampton, Ct.; Mrs. H. W. Andrews, East-Hampton, Ct.; Mrs. A. B. Ackley, Granville, Ohio; Miss M. C. Day, Sheffield, Ohio; Miss L. F. Dunham, Cleveland, Ohio.

Value of school property, $5000; number of pupils, 370; number in Sabbath-school, 104.

The school here was very successful. The details are not published, because so much room has been given to the work of the church.

11. Trinity School, Athens, Alabama.

Miss M. F. Wells, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Miss M. Lina Goodell, New-Haven, Ct.; Miss Carrie M. Blood, Lime, N. H.

Value of school property, $3000; number of pupils, 174; number in Sabbath-school, 95.

Miss Wells writes us the following in regard to the repairs on the "Home:"

"The health of our family has suffered from the dampness incident to newly plastered rooms, yet we have all survived the din and dust and damp and noise; have taught our classes as faithfully as circumstances would allow. Sometimes our recitations have been in the lower hall, then in the upper hall, then in the sitting-room—in my room, and, lastly, on the stairs. We give our pupils the credit of being the best children that ever lived, for they have endured hardness as good soldiers, and have become less demoralized than one would expect amid such untoward circumstances.

"I was conscious at the first that $500 was wholly inadequate to repair and furnish the home, and religiously resolved to spend it all on repairs, and ask God to provide furniture, carpets, etc. He has heard and answered; at least, we no longer sit on barrels and boxes, but have a good supply of comfortable chairs; also a table in the dining-room, some new carpets in other rooms, a bedstead in place of our bunk. The rest still stand, but we expect they will disappear gradually, and that we shall finally rejoice in a general appearance of civilization.

"Miss Goodell has been indefatigable in her labors with the church choir. Already they are winning golden opinions from the best white singers in the place. And the good singing is no mean agent in attracting to our congregation the better class of young people from all the colored churches in the place. Almost every week there come applications from children of rebel parents for permission to join our choir. We always take them, whether they have much singing talent or not. This adds to our numbers as a congregation, and to the prospective increase of the church."

Rev. Mr. Bennett, of Nashville, Tenn., who has made several visits to Athens, Ala., writes thus concerning the colored school and its faithful teacher:

"The school at Athens has been in operation for five years, under the charge of Miss M. F. Wells, who has endured many deprivations in her labor of love.

"Athens is a lifeless town of fifteen hundred inhabitants, without business or thrift. The colored people especially are the sufferers from the general inactivity. The only good thing they have is the school, and this they cling to with enthusiastic devotion.

"Miss Wells commands a wide influence amongboth white and colored. The white people would gladly transfer her from her present field of operations to teach in their schools, if she would only consent.

"On my first visit, I found her alone, doing her household and kitchen work, and teaching a school of seventy pupils. She has since been joined by Miss Goodell. The pupils of the school have been carried forward to an advanced grade. Four or five of them are now reading Cæsar, and others are following hard after them."

12. Burrell School, Selma, Alabama.

Mr. E. C. Stickel, Decatur, Ill.; Mrs. Anna W. Stickel, Decatur, Ill.; Mr. Homer W. Carter, Tallmadge, Ohio; Mrs. M. J. Meade, Hillsdale, Mich.; Miss S. O. Ostrander, Murray, N. Y.; Miss Mary S. Pond, Irvington, N. J.; Miss Anna M. Nourse, St. Louis, Mo.; Miss Lucretia Gardner, Mallet Creek, Ohio; Miss Lizzie Alvord, Austinburg, Ohio; Miss Anna Haylor, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss Mattie R. Davis, Geneseo, Ill.

Value of school property, $7000; number of pupils, 744; number in Sabbath-school, 200.

E. C. Stickel, Superintendent, writes respecting this school,

"It is a source of congratulation that there has been such hearty cooperation on the part of the Board of Education of the city of Selma with the American Missionary Association, whereby the colored youth of school age, enrolled in the city, have had for two years the privileges of a free public school.

"The teachers were commissioned and sent out under the auspices of the American Missionary Association; examined by the city Board of Education, and sustained by an appropriation from the city council of ten per cent of the gross revenue of the city, and a share of the State fund.

"It is also a source of satisfaction to the colored citizens of Selma, that out of 750 colored youth of school age, enrolled in the city, 650 have been members of the free public school, either the whole or part of the time. By arrangement, 103 colored children, from towns around Selma, have enjoyed the privileges of the school. . . . .

"We have tried to supplement the great lack of moral and religious training at home. A half-hour before the close of the school in the afternoon, the pupils have met in the chapel for concert exercises from the Bible, black-board exercises and illustrations, short talks on health and habits, manners and morals. A very marked improvement is seen among all our pupils, and through the influence of the Monday afternoon scholars' prayer-meeting many souls have been brought from darkness to light."

Value of school property, $15,000; number of pupils, 110; number in Sabbath-school, 75.

At the beginning of the year, $20,000 was contributed by Dr. F. Julius Le Moyne, of Washington, Pa., to reconstruct the school building at Memphis, and to endow the school. From necessity, the school was mainly suspended in order to repair the building.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Hamilton, Lexington, Ky.; Mr. H. F. La Veyea, Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Sarah Hamilton, Greensburg, Ind.; Miss Mattie L. Callahan, Andover, Mass.; Miss Laura King, Lexington, Ky.; Mrs. S. A. Adams, Delaware, Ohio.

Value of school property, $8000; number of pupils, 425; pupils in Sabbath-school, 125.

The superintendent of the school writes thus:

"You know how much I feared the effect of introducing the pay system. It has made our number smaller, but I must own that its results have convinced me of its wisdom. A better class of pupils has been secured; the pupils have never been more earnest, and the growth in character has been correspondingly great. In all my teaching and experience in school, I have never seen a more earnest and devoted class of pupils. Many were obliged to deny themselves many of the comforts of life to secure the advantages of the school; young men and women, after the school hours, working at every kind of labor to get the means of attending school.

"The prayer-meetings, held each week of the school by the teachers, have resulted in much good. There has been less of rude behavior than before, and a growing disposition to yield cheerful obedience to the regulations of the school. The final examination, at the close of the year, of all the classes, showed that the teachers had been faithful to their duties, and that the work was well done.

"The hold the school now has upon the people points to increased usefulness in the future, and I shall expect a much larger attendance the next year than there has been in this. We have met opposition from the old quarter; but it is losing its power, and can not harm us in future to any extent."

Value of school property, $20,000; number of pupils, 455; pupils in Sunday-school, 300.

G. Stanley Pope, the Superintendent, writes,

"We have met some hardships during the year, of course; but the trials attendant upon the work are all swallowed up by the successes of the year. The advancement in scholarship has been all that we could expect, and our hearts are filled with thankfulness and praise.

"There have been twenty-nine conversions during the year, and some were feeling their need of a Christian's hope at the close of school.

"One of the most encouraging features of the religious work has been the Christian development in some of the young people who were already converted. It has done us good to see them leave their old dead forms, and come into the 'light and liberty of the sons of God.'

"These young people have become very much interested in the temperance work. 154 of our pupils and their friends have signed the pledge of total abstinence, and all but nine of these the pledge to abstain from the use of tobacco in any form. It was a great struggle for some to consent to sign the latter.

"The Sunday-school has steadily increased during the year. The average attendance for May was an increase of 60 per cent on the attendance for October. The collection for May was a gain of 653 per cent for October. After paying for a new library for themselves, they became very much interested in doing something for others, and contributed $16.50 for Mendi Mission. We have raised in all $41.50 in Sunday-school; $1404.35 by tuition, and [illegible] for window-shades.

"Very many of our pupils are expecting to become teachers, and a few intend to fit themselves for the ministry.

"A few desire to teach this summer, but they labor under greater disadvantages than those who are further south in the States which have made provisions for free schools.

"One young man has found an opening to teach who came into our school just before Christmas. At first he was such a great trial that we doubted very much, on account of his example before others, whether we ought to allow him to remain in school. He had never read a chapter in the Bible, although he could read quite well. We brought him to the Lord in prayer, and in a short time he was converted, and he has been one of our most faithful and persevering students.

"Our school closed (May 26th) with a picnic and excursion up the river a few miles. It was a new thing; all seemed surprised to find that we could have a picnic without having drinking and disturbance on the grounds. Only two or three were disorderly enough to even light a cigar, and these were not our pupils. The people were satisfied that wine was not the only thing that would make the heart glad.

"The proprietor of the grounds, who came out and witnessed all the exercises, said he had never had so orderly a set of people, either white or colored, on his grounds before. The captain of the boat gave the same testimony."

V. ORPHAN ASYLUMS AND PHYSICAL RELIEF.

During the war and for the first three years of peace, a great demand was made upon the Association for the relief of physical suffering. Thousands of dollars' worth of clothing and provisions were distributed by our missionaries and teachers. Happily, this demand has been growing less each year, so that now comparatively little is required in this department of service.

There are, however, always the poor in the South as well as in the North, so that there is pressing need of the supplies still generously forwarded for this purpose to the Association. Indeed, we are sometimes unable to meet the calls that are made for clothing for women and children. It is therefore hoped that the help of friends in this direction will still continne.

The Brewer Orphan Asylum, near Wilmington, N. C., had its origin just at the close of the war, and was instrumental in saving the lives of many children. Happily, the necessity of this institution no longer exists in such a sense as to justify its support by the Association, and satisfactory arrangements have been made with Mrs. Perry, of Boston, the generous founder of the asylum, to transfer the name and funds to a normal school just established at Greenwood, S. C. The Brewer Normal School will commemorate the name and complete the work of benevolence begun in memory of one who has gone to her rest. The Washburne Memorial Asylum property at Atlanta, Ga., still remains unsold, but is held in the interests of the normal school work, for which it was given, in connection with the first purpose for which it was used. The necessity of the asylum having ceased, the whole interest naturally belongs to the normal school work.

In the utter want of all statistics and documents, owing to the great fire in this city, I find it extremely difficult to make out any satisfactory report of my department. I can give only a brief outline.

CHURCHES.

There are two churches in Mississippi, in both of which there have been interesting revivals of religion during the past year. One is in Monroe County and named "New-Ruhamah." The other, at Tougaloo, has enjoyed a glorious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Some of the most promising young men (three of one family) who have united with the church there have expressed a desire to go as missionaries to their heathen brethren in Africa. There has been considerable persecution of the church in Monroe County by the Ku-Klux. The teacher of the day-school, held in the chapel, was driven off, the night preceding my visit there, and the pastor was warned to desist from further preaching. The owner of the land on which the Freedmen had been permitted to erect a log chapel is now unwilling they should continue to hold their services there. I have endeavored to secure another site, but without success as yet.

There are three churches in Kansas and two in Missouri, under our care; all of them are small. The churches in Missouri are at Lebanon and Westport. Rev. Hardy Mobley, pastor of the former, has been the teacher of the school until lately. He has succeeded, with some aid from the American Missionary Association, in securing a site and erecting a chapel. The church at Westport has received no assistance the past year, and would have been without any pastoral care but for the voluntary services of Rev. J. C. Beekman, of Kansas City, who was under our commission the previous year. The church seemed too small and unpromising to warrant the expense, on our part, of a missionary.

There are two churches in Texas; one at Brownsville, organized by the help of Rev. Jeremiah Porter, the other at Corpus Christi; both are small. In Louisiana, there are 14 churches under the care of the Association. The statistical table of the churches will give the particulars. These churches suffer for want of adequate support.

UNIVERSITIES.

Tougaloo, Miss.

I herewith subjoin a part of the prospectus of our Tougaloo Normal School. The Mississippi Legislature gave it a University charter last winter, and it is prepared to organize the different departments as they may be needed:

TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY.

Board of Trustees.—Lieutenant-Governor R. C. Powers, Hon. H. W. Warren, Hon. M. T. Newsom, Rev. E. M. Cravath, Professor H. S. Beals, Hon. H. R. Pease, Superintendent Public Education; Hon. T. W. Stringer, General C. H. Howard, Rev. M. E. Strieby, G. R. Lemons, Hon. G. C. McKee, M.C.; Hon. John R. Lynch, Selden N. Clark, Rev. George Whipple.

Instructors.—Academic Department—E. Tucker, A.M., Principal, and Professor of Ancient Languages; Miss S. Beals. Normal Department—Professor A. J. Steele, Principal and Lecturer on Practical Teaching; Miss L. E. Eastman; Miss A. J. Crandall, Teacher of Music, Instrumental and Vocal. Agricultural Department—H. S. Beals, Superintendent and Business Agent; Mrs. H. S. Beals, Matron.

The institution has been in successful operation for the past two years, under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, and is one of the most promising institutions in the State.

LOCATION.—This institution is located near Tougaloo station, on the New-Orleans, Jackson, and Great Northern Railroad, seven miles north of Jackson, Mississippi. It is easy of access from different parts of Mississippi and other States. Separated from town or city, the place is peculiarly favorable to study, and free from evil influences.

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.—There are three fine buildings for the purposes of the institution; one exclusively for the accommodation of male students from a distance, another for females. The grounds are ample, and the site, upon high rolling land, in the midst of a fine grove of oaks, is both pleasant and healthful.

DEPARTMENTS NOW ORGANIZED.—It has been found necessary to organize only common school and normal classes. Other departments for university education and professional training will be put in operation as necessity demands.

The Agricultural Department is a marked feature of the institution. A plantation of some five hundred acres, owned by the institution and under the management of Mr. H. S. Beals, a gentleman of much experience and ability, affords rare facilities for instruction in practical farming, and at the same time gives those who desire it an opportunity to pay part or the whole of their expenses by manual labor, without materially interfering with their studies. An Industrial Department will be of equal value to females, who desire it, in the way of defraying expenses and in giving practical knowledge and experience in household and other womanly duties.

NORMAL DEPARTMENT.—The design of this department is to train teachers for the public schools.

It consists of a Normal and Training, or "Model" Department. The Normal is to provide thorough instruction, especially in those studies taught in the public schools, giving the students the benefit of the most approved methods of teaching; so that, while they are acquiring the knowledge necessary to their profession, they may also become familiar with the best methods of imparting knowledge to those who may come under their guidance in the future.

The Training Department will consist of two grades, the Primary and Intermediate. Its object is to impart instruction in the more rudimentary branches; to prepare those who desire it for admission to the regular Normal classes, and to afford opportunities to students of the Normal classes for practicing the modes of teaching in which they receive instruction. This practice will be under the supervision of experienced instructors, who will point out errors, commend excellences, and suggest means of improvement.

NECESSARY EXPENSES.—The institution, being partly under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, and enjoying the advantages of the farm, all expenses are reduced to the lowest rates. The tuition in the Normal Department is fixed at the moderate sum of one dollar per month.

Students desiring to secure board in the institution will be accommodated with good rooms, comfortably furnished, and with good, plain board, in the students' boarding hall, at the reduced charge of ten dollars per month.

All necessary text-books will be supplied to students at thirty cents per month; making the absolute school expenses of any student not over twelve dollars per month.

DISCIPLINE.—All necessary supervision will be exercised over the deportment and habits of students in their boarding-houses.

They will be held to a strict account for the keeping of study hours, and no calls will be allowed during the time set apart for this purpose. Ladies will not be allowed to receive calls from gentlemen, or to ride or walk with them without permission from the principal.

Use of fire-arms by any of the students on the place is prohibited, unless by permission.

Use of intoxicating drinks is entirely prohibited. All students will be required to attend religious worship regularly, on the Sabbath.

Such other rules of lady-like and gentlemanly conduct will be given to the students as will tend to growth in moral excellence, and in that cultivation of manners that will make them models for their pupils when they are called to teach.

All students are expected to yield ready and willing obedience to all the regulations of the school, as it is self-evident no others are suitable candidates for the work of teaching.

The blessing of God seems to rest upon this institution. Judging from the results, thus far, there are none upon our list in the South that will afford a better interest upon the investment made, when we regard the mental and moral improvement in connection with the outlay of missionary funds.

In view of the poverty of the Freedmen, it is not a small consideration to be able to say, as in our prospectus, "Your total expenses, at Tougaloo will not exceed $12 per month;" and to a large majority, "You can pay most of your expenses by work, if a male student, on the farm; if a female, by assisting in the boarding-hall."

Mr. H. S. Beals has been remarkably efficient in the management of the farm so as to afford work to the students, resulting in valuable products. It is in this way that the expenses of board have been so reduced. The corn crop this year will not fall short of six hundred bushels.

A bill passed the Legislature, but has thus far failed to secure the approval of the Governor, granting some $4000 in aid of the Normal Department. This amount, if secured, would put that department on a good basis for one year. There is need of much furniture and apparatus in order to secure its greatest efficiency.

The dormitories are all full, and there are hundreds more in the State who would like to avail themselves of the privileges of the school if there were accommodations. There could be no better beneficence than the bestowment of money to build new dormitories and a chapel for this institution. The little church meets in one of the school-rooms. There is no suitable room for their Sabbath service nor for the general daily exercises of the institution. Many churches in the North-west have made special efforts, through ladies' benevolent societies and otherwise, to furnish rooms. Some twenty rooms have thus been made comfortable. Some expensive repairs were found necessary upon the old mansion, (used both for recitations and dormitories and for residence of teachers,) and a new laundry has been constructed. But what we greatly need is one large brick building to accommodate at least 200 students, and afford facilities of other like institutions as above indicated.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY.

New-Orleans, La.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Healy, President, has been absent a considerable portion of the time soliciting funds for scholarships, for general endowments, and more particularly to purchase a building absolutely needed for the Theological Department. The great number of scholars reached (1054) and the fact that three fourths of them are of Roman Catholic parents, make this one of our most important institutions. It is situated at a centre of influence for Louisiana and neighboring States. In this respect, it is not inferior in importance to any other of our institutions.

NORMAL AND GRADED SCHOOLS.

Columbus Union Academy, Mississippi.

The Principal, J. N. Bishop, Esq., has had many difficulties to contend with in the hostile public sentiment in that section of the State. The school, however, has been full, the building is in good repair, and, notwithstanding some terror of the lady teachers at times, owing to threatenings of Ku-Klux outrages, the school made good progress and retained its hold upon the freed people.

The lady teachers were Misses Craig, Etheridge, Holt, Maunder, Muzzy, Mahony, Rockfellow, and Mrs. Marsh; and, as missionary and matron, Mrs. Dickenson.

The Barnes Institute at Galveston, Texas, has been during the year a successful graded school, under the charge of Mr. John O. Stevenson, with Misses Lizzie A. Stoneman, A. M. Kean, and Mary

A. E. Nichols—all devoted missionaries of the cross of Christ as well as efficient teachers.

The Rio Grande Seminary is mainly for Mexican youth, and is sustained almost entirely by the personal efforts of Rev. Jeremiah Porter and wife. We have aided in the support there of Miss Nellie Waterman.

Pine Bluff, Ark.—Mr. M. W. Martin, his wife, and his daughter, Mrs. L. E. Allason, represent the Association at Pine Bluff, Arkansas. We have sold the property there to the local school board, with the expectation of locating our Normal School for Arkansas at Little Rock, where we have ten acres of land donated by the city government. There has been considerable religious interest at Pine Bluff, attesting the earnest spirit of the missionaries. With sorrow we record the death of Mrs. Martin soon after reaching her father's house in New-Jersey, on her return north last June, after a two years' stay in Pine Bluff. She was indefatigable in her labors for both parents and pupils to lead them to a true and saving knowledge of the Gospel, and her letters did much to keep up the interest of the churches in that part of our field. She died from the effects of the climate, and will most assuredly hear our Saviour say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me." Mr. Martin, with his bereaved son and daughter, has returned to Pine Bluff for another year.

Disappointed by not receiving promised aid from the Freedmen's Bureau for the buildings at Little Rock, we must wait, and the large State of Arkansas, with its thousands of Freedmen, hungering and thirsting for knowledge, must be destitute of any High or Normal school, until Providence shall open the way for the bestowment of the required funds. We do not purpose to found a college there, but can but feel the great need of a Normal School, under Christian influences, to supply properly qualified Christian teachers for the common schools in operation under the State.

Lincoln Institute, at Jefferson City, Mo., has now for a Principal Rev. M. Henry Smith, who for several years, with his wife, represented the Association at Warrensburg, Mo. He is paid by the trustees. We simply sustain one teacher in the institute for the present. The State has voted aid to a small extent. We have hopes that this institution will, with the help of Christian benevolence, continue to sustain our principles of opposition to all caste in the education and treatment of the colored people, and for years to come will send forth annually into the common schools of Missouri an increasing number of teachers not only instructed in the usual text-books, but imbued with the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ. There is now in progress a revival of religion, and we are well convinced that the influence of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, as well as of Rev. R. B. Foster, his predecessor, (now acting as financial agent of the institute,) will constantly lead to this result.

MISSIONARY TEACHERS IN COMMON AND SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—Besides the names of teachers and missionaries mentioned, our devoted workers in the common schools of Texas are:

Misses Knapp, Evans, Green, Burwell, (colored,) Rowe, and Trussell; and Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, and Messrs. Jones and Washington, (colored,) and (name not remembered.)

In Arkansas:

Messrs. Lyman, McClelland, Misses Ford, McClelland, Royce, and Bovard.

In Louisiana:

Rev. N. B. James, (colored,) Rev. S. W. Rogers, (colored,) Rev. S. W. Otts, (colored,) Mr. Robert J. Walker, (colored,) and Miss Ramsey.

In Missouri:

Rev. G. H. Jones, Rev. Hardy Mobley, and Rev. M. H. Smith.

We also own school-houses at Fulton, Troy, and Westport, and the land upon which they are located.

At Cairo and Mound City, Ill.:

Mr. P. C. Tolford, Mr. J. B. Palmer, Rev. J. S. Manning, Rev. G. H. Jones, Mrs. J. B. Palmer, Mrs. M. J. Craig, Misses E. A. Tuttle, F. Jones, and E. M. Carroll.

In Mississippi:

Messrs. Tuttle, Bascom, Yates, L. B. Gesner, J. F. Gesner, Beavis, Washburn, Galloway, Murray, (colored,) Lucky, (colored,) Stryker, Steele, Richardson, Misses Eastman, Tucker, Beals, Bullard, Allan, Ward, Mahony, Waterbury, Howe, Glanville, Champney. Three of these lady teachers and three males were driven off by the Ku-Klux Klan.

Since the passage by Congress of the "Ku-Klux Act," so called, it has been more quiet; and, through the presence of the soldiers, the teachers have been undisturbed and have felt comparatively safe. Rev. H. W. Cobb and wife labored for some three months as missionaries at Tougaloo, and had part in the spiritual harvest there. Mr. Cobb also labored at Columbus and other points to promote more directly our church work. Rev. James Ballard also labored for a while as an evangelist in the same State with good results.

CHINESE IN AMERICA.

Teachers.

Miss Emma Jordan, Oakland, Cal.; Mr. William K. Powell, Oakland, Cal.; Miss M. K. Colburn, at Oakland, San Francisco, and Stockton; Miss M. A. Burnett, Stockton, Cal.; Mr. George M. Dexter, San Francisco, Cal.; Mr. Joseph H. Merrall, San Francisco, Cal.; Mr. John T. Stephens, San Francisco, Cal.; Mr. J. T. Bowers, San Francisco, Cal.; Miss Jennie Hopkins, San Francisco, Cal.; Miss M. J. Sherman, at Sacramento, Cal.; Mr. Charles Kimball, Grass Valley, Cal.; Chin Gam, at San Francisco, Sacramento, and Oakland.

The wisdom of our entering upon the work of missions among the Chinese in America has been completely demonstrated. The schools at Oakland, Stockton, Sacramento, and San Francisco have been successful in numbers, in the increasing interest of the pupils, in their effect upon the general public sentiment, especially of the members of the Congregational churches, in reaching, as at Stockton, the Chinese women, whose condition seemed hopeless before, and, above all, in the blessing of the Holy Ghost, as it would seem, in several instances, to the spiritual awakening of their darkened minds.

The lady teachers who went from the East have greatly enjoyed the work, and have proved that the economical and efficient system of night or day-schools, under the sole management of lady missionaries, as pursued with the freedmen, is equally adapted to the Chinese.

A converted Chinaman, Gam, one of the three who united with the Oakland Congregational Church last year, having visited China and returned, is now in our employ. He assists at different stations in gathering in pupils. They do not rush eagerly to the schools as soon as opened, as do the children of the freedmen; but when they find no money is to be made out of them, and that the teachers mean only to do them good, and especially that there is an excellent opportunity to learn the English language, they come; and having once got acquainted, they soon become attached to their teachers. They do not object to reading in the Bible; on the contrary, soon begin to show interest in the meaning of what they read, and eagerly ask questions about it.

There have been Sunday-schools at Los Angelos, Santa Cruz, and some other places, which our Superintendent, Rev. John Kimball, has been more or less instrumental in starting and sustaining. He has not only kept a constant supervision of all the work, counseling and coöperating with the teachers, but has done much by his public addresses to arouse the churches to a sense of their duty to these heathen at their doors and in their households.

Superintendent Kimball has lately visited Oregon, and reports that the Chinese population is rapidly increasing there by direct importation from China. Many are employed upon the western portion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. At Portland, he found very little being done for them. At the time of his visit, not a school, nor even a Sabbath-school for them, in operation. But the Congregational church, Rev. Dr. Atkinson, having just completed and occupied their new edifice, are ready to enter upon a work for the Chinese. Rev. W. R. Jocelyn and the Young Men's Christian Association will also coöperate with us at Portland.

In Lower California, the Chinese continue to come in by sailing-vessels as well as by steamer. While, therefore, the average monthly immigration at San Francisco has diminished the past year, the increase, both above and below upon that coast, has been greater than ever before. Superintendent Kimball recommends that a missionary be stationed at Los Angelos as soon as practicable.

Public sentiment is not more hostile than heretofore, and still persecution has by no means ceased. Both political parties felt bound to cater a little to the anti-Chinese feeling in their electioneering platforms, but the bulk of those who are most bitter in their opposition belong to the defeated party. In consequence, the result of the election is generally regarded favorable to the Chinaman. One of our lady missionaries at Stockton writes, in a recent letter, "A boy was attacked and seriously bruised on his return from Sabbath-school. We have been disturbed during our school exercises, both on Sabbath and other days."

Among the encouragements of late, may be mentioned larger collections for our treasury on the Pacific coast. The Oakland First Congregational Church give $200, thereby supporting the native convert, Gam, before mentioned. Another convert (Amoy) has recently joined that church.

Miss Colburn, at Stockton, writes of the reopening, after a brief vacation, "The children come back to school gladly. One of the little girls said, 'No school one moon—too much; no good.' Her mother says, 'I like Me-Ho to be good girl, go to school, grow good woman.' Some forty women in all have been taught at Stockton by our two ladies, Misses Colburn and Burnett. Miss Colburn writes,

"There are encouraging tokens in our work among the women. Some have shown their appreciation of instruction by voluntarily paying tuition, others by purchasing books. The women are for the most part visited at their homes. One who brought a dollar to pay for one month's tuition says, 'If I have a good heart, I shall go to heaven.' Those who have learned to read, receive gladly a copy of the Bible. An instance is reported of a wealthy merchant taking a copy; another, of a promising boy who did not know a letter of the alphabet last February, when he first attended Miss Burnett's school, but can now read his Bible. His teacher says, 'He has been regularly to the night-school, and his interest in the Bible is delightful to witness. As I see how much they value their Bibles, bringing them each night, eagerly reading and treasuring the knowledge thus gained, I am satisfied that we are not laboring in vain.'"

A recent letter from Mr. Kimball gives the following items, showing the character of the people, and of the work among them:

"Many of our pupils are very transient; a very large number have been under instruction for a very brief time; all have made some progress, and those who have attended regularly have astonished their teachers.

"There are ebbs and flows in this work. The Chinese are greatly interested for a time, and then they are very hard to reach. Their interest varies very evenly with the interest of their teachers, though this is not the invariable rule. After a vacation, the teachers find it very hard to get their scattered scholars together again; this was especially so at Stockton, after the recent vacation. The field for work among the people is very large. They are gathered in various places, in numbers varying from five hundred to two hundred, where nothing is being done for their improvement. Shall not the Association enlarge its work?"

The following letter from Gam, the converted Chinaman, exhibits the peculiar idioms of the Chinese-American, as well as the language and impulses of the genuine Christian:

"San Francisco Oct 24 1871.

"Rev J. Kimball

"Dear Sir

"You invited me to write you a letter. I have no knowledge to write well but I am very anxious to take my liberty and try to do the best I can. I am a great sinner but I know the Lord has promise to pardon those who repent and believe in him also said we must love one another and so I always glad to do as I have done by but the understanding which I had is not enough to spread abroad the wisdom of God, so I beg you to ask God to enlarge my heart with his Holy Spirit then I will sow the seeds in to their hearts which we may receive either sixty or a hundred-fold. Otherwise I must do all I can for the Redeemer sake and trust him with my whole heart because he first love us and gave himself for us.

"I will also express my hope that the improvement of my friends at Sacramento three weeks ago one of them join the Presbyterian church and the others is very faithful always study attentively and love to hear about our Lord Jesus Christ. Since I left Sacramento they were very glad to have me return.

"Two weeks ago I received a letter from one of my favorite friends he confess that he is a sinner and request me to pray for him so I ask God to purify his heart and cause him to be a useful man also to the others.

"The boys at the third Congregation church of this city they also have much please to have me continue working among them they are very industrious boys and always storing their minds with useful information 4 of them are Christians which came from my neighborhood so I thank God for having directed them in to the path of righteousness and also encourage them and tell them all about our wonderful Redemption so I expect they will help me a great deal when I gets home again.

"At the Oakland school on Thursday evening, also on Sunday, we have from twenty to thirty.

"One of my own countrymen said to me two weeks ago if a man commit a sin he afterward repent and should ask some one to pray for him God will not forgive the sin which he had done but I said unto him if a man has a watch and did not know how to shut it up then the dust will take possession within and stop it entirely but all he could do is to take it to the watch maker and ask him to clean it out but as soon as the man received the words put forth his hands and cause the watch to run in the very same moment so the Lord also have power to take away any iniquity if we only repent and believe in his Holy Name. Your affectionately friend G. GAM."

INDIANS.

IN his inaugural address, President Grant foreshadowed his policy relative to the Indians, in the following words: "The proper treatment of the original occupants of this land, the Indians, is one deserving of careful study. I will favor any course toward them which tends to their civilization and ultimate citizenship."

Up to that time, for scores of years, it is not too much to say that, if any treaty stipulations in their behalf were faithfully observed, they were the exception, not the rule. Laws passed in fulfillment of treaties were often found to contain ambiguities scarcely unintentional, by which crafty men were enabled to deprive the Indians of rights sought to be therein secured to them. Necessary supplies furnished by the government were fraudulently diverted by unprincipled government agents, and hundreds of thousands of dollars appropriated for their civilization and education were regularly drawn from the United States Treasury, of which not one dollar was used for their benefit. The problem to be solved was, How can a new policy, a "policy of truth, justice, humanity, and peace," be successfully inaugurated?

The first movement was the appointment, under an act of Congress, of a Board of Peace Commissioners, composed of men from different parts of the country whose names carried the assurance of honest and fair dealing. The next step was to invite the coöperation of Christians, and to give to their several missionary organizations the selection of Indian agents, under whom the appointment of government farmers, blacksmiths, carpenters, physicians, and teachers, provided for by treaty, was made. Seventy-five agencies were thus provided, under fifteen superintendents appointed by the Department of the Interior, with special reference to their working harmoniously with the several agencies, and bringing the whole machinery in contact with the warm heart of the Christianity of the country as a vitalizing power.

This policy seeks to reclaim the Indians from their wandering, savage life, to stimulate them to agricultural pursuits, "to disarm them of their cruel passions and desire for revenge," and "turn their thoughts and hearts toward future happiness and heaven, by the power and influence of Him who brought peace on earth and good-will to men."

The Indian population under the jurisdiction of the United States is estimated by the Secretary of the Interior at about 320,000. Of these, 75,000 in Alaska, and about 3660 scattered in several States and not maintaining tribal relations, are not practically within the scope of the new policy. The remaining number are located as follows:

Washington Territory	15,487	Wyoming	2,400
Oregon	24,503	Nebraska	6,410
California	7,383	Kansas	6,052
Arizona	5,066	Indian Territory	53,476
Nevada	6,000	Minnesota	6,377
Utah	12,800	Wisconsin	6,355
New-Mexico	18,640	Michigan	8,099
Colorado	7,300	New-York	4,804
Dakota	27,815
Idaho	4,469	Total	242,271
Montana	18,835

The Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association were requested to select four of these agents, which they did as follows:

Rev. E. P. Smith, Agent of the Chippewas of the Mississippi;

Major S. N. Clark, Agent of the Chippewas of the Superior;

Rev. W. T. Richardson, Agent of the Menomonees and Oneidas in Wisconsin; and Edwin Eells, Agent of the Skokomish Indians, Washington Territory.

With the consent of the Government, Mr. Smith holds the position of Secretary of Indian Missions under the Association, and has the general supervision of its work among the Indians. To facilitate his doing this, Rev. J. P. Bardwell, who first received the nomination for that agency, declined in favor of Mr. Smith, and subsequently, until his death, acted as his clerk. Mr. Bardwell died at Leech Lake, Minnesota, July 28th, sixty-three years of age. He had been for many years connected with the work of the Association, first as a missionary among the Ojibua Indians, then as a collecting agent in behalf of the mission, then among the Freedmen, and last, again among the Indians. His best eulogy was spoken by an Indian: "I have seen many Christian men in my life, but I never saw one who made it his business to be a Christian, as Mr. Bardwell."

Mr. Smith reports the number of the Chippewas of the Mississippi as 6500; Chippewas of the Superior, 3500; Menomonee agency, 3000; the Skokomish agency, 900.

Any attempt to forecast the results of the present policy based on the past would be unjust. In the best government efforts hitherto, the Gospel, the essential element of all true civilization, has been left out, and the facts already quoted show that by far the greater portion of the reported expenditure has been a stupendous fraud on both the Indians and the Government—a series of frauds so outrageous as to leave little ground to wonder that the Indians have by them been sometimes maddened to deeds of most awful and bloody revenge.

The government aid that has actually reached them has extended only to a very limited supply of clothing and food, with the least imaginable stimulus to industry, and nothing to develop mind.

To the present administration must be given the credit of inaugurating a policy contemplating the union of all the elements of civilization—industry, education, citizenship, and Christianity. A very important foundation of hope lies in individualizing the people, giving to the Red man a domicile, and stimulating him to effort by the opportunity to accumulate real and personal property. This is about all that can be done by the government for the adult. But a great point will be gained, if he shall be stimulated to earn his own subsistence, and to lead a quiet and peaceful life.

The next generation, taken in hand now, in schools and under proper religious influences, can be quite largely brought out of barbarism, and a very hopeful feature lies in the fact that very many of the old people are willing to have their children trained in schools. At White Earth, nearly all the children of school age could be taken, if the accommodations were sufficient. At Leech Lake, 200 children might be in school within a year, and probably 500 in two years. At Red Lake, 200 might be in school; and this process, continued for five years, would bring every child under school advantages, and one generation of such school training would largely settle the whole question as to the Chippewa Indians. The second generation would see them entirely beyond the need of Government aid.

With the buildings erected and the farms opened, a pupil can be kept at school for $75 a year. Seventy-five thousand dollars a year, for fifteen years, will provide for the civilization of these Indians, and relieve the Government from their future support.

The appointment of a commission, at the instigation of the Association, and made up in part from its appointees, to investigate the matter of Government land scrip, issued to certain half-breed Indians, has within the last six months saved the Government an amount that would, expended in schools, go far toward settling the whole question.

With the exception of the Oneidas, at the commencement of the present effort not one family of Indians in fifty were living in houses, and even those who were housed, had no land to which they had any title. The White Earth reservation, set apart four years ago, had scarcely been opened. A half-dozen log-houses made the settlement, and the degree of civilization which the Indians had attained was incidental, and due to missionary efforts rather than the result of well-directed Government aid. The clearing of the rich bottom-lands at Red Lake was nearly all due to missionary labor there, some fifteen or twenty years ago.

Only the few Indians who live in houses had adopted civilized customs in food, dress, etc. Nearly all were living in blankets and wigwams. Missionary labor among a people with such habits is almost always comparatively fruitless. To be successful, the Gospel must take root. It is very unlikely to abide in a bark house. Very little of a decidedly religious character, therefore, remains as the result of missionary labor intermitted years ago.

While the degree of barbarism indicated by these facts is discouraging, yet it is undeniably true that the Indians, who were the recipients of these labors, are greatly modified, and are now accessible to influences for good.

Beginning late in the year, and under unfavorable circumstances, efforts have been largely given to material aid, and have been, in the main, very successful. Wherever there has been offered the Indian such an inducement to work as the average white man always demands, he has been found willing. The great obstacle to industry and thrift among them has been the want of a homestead. Neither Indians nor white men are industrious beyond their wants, and the family living in a bark lodge has but few wants.

At White Earth, and at Bayfield, an experiment has been made of bringing the Indians to labor, and has succeeded even beyond the expectations of friends. They have plowed, planted, cut fence-rails, made hay, and gathered their crops. About thirty houses have been built, the logs hewed, and the lumber sawed, mainly by the Indians. Some 400 acres have been put under cultivation, and a no more industrious, hard-working community has been seen in Minnesota than that about the White Earth reservation; and this is the first year in which any thing like a fair trial has been given them. The same spirit is shown at Red Lake and Leech Lake whenever any thing like the same inducement is offered; but at these points the land is held jointly, and the Indian's generosity leads the industrious to support the idle as long as the crops last. There are other discouragements peculiar to the locality, leaving little encouragement for those Indians except the indications of what they might do if more favorably located.

It must not be concealed that the experiment is made under very unfavorable circumstances, owing to the indifference, unbelief, and hostility of the whites. Even professing Christians, some of the best in Minnesota, have no hope for the Indian. They pray for Africa and Asia, but have no hope for the salvation of the Indians of Northern Minnesota.

The present policy of Government affords new grounds of hope. If it can be steadily maintained, aid given for educational privileges, and Christian men found to enter this field, as they enter any other missionary field, though here with fewer deprivations, there can be little doubt as to the result. The present generation would be lifted and civilized to a moderate extent, the next be entirely out of wigwams, and a third generation be living like any other people in Minnesota. This surely is not a great thing to ask of the Government and the churches. No people have more at stake in this matter than the people of Minnesota. These same savages (if left such) are to live within their State lines; there is no border country beyond. They are to remain pests and annoyances, continually sinking lower and lower as their ancient privileges and possessions are curtailed; or they are to be brought under the policy of truth, justice, humanity, and peace, and be disarmed of their cruel passions by the power and influence of the Gospel.

Religiously, so far as can be judged from the deportment of those who have been a little time in school, there is nothing discouraging. They have no religious system in the way; their "grand medicine" falls before an advancing civilization; their belief in the future state is clear and universal; they anticipate a future life; and there seems to be no reason to fear that, removed from the wigwam and the influence of bad white men, their children, at least, can be educated for Christ.

BRAINERD.

There have been twelve additions to the church at Brainerd during the year, eleven on profession of faith. Some of these were from the Sabbath-school. Mr. Thompson says, "I am glad to be able to report that others are coming forward asking fellowship with us, some (of whom we hope well), will, I doubt not, be in communion with us before these lines reach you. It is evident that the cause of God is prospering with us. Our congregations are good, and good attention is paid to the word of God. The question of 'full surrender to God' is much talked of in the congregation. It looks like an awakening, and we ought to expect no less, but, rather, more, that God would bring sinners to himself, and make them new creatures in Christ Jesus.

"There is cause for great joy when we see children standing side by side with persons in advanced life, all babes in Christ, however, and together asking "the way to Zion." The Sabbath-school is well attended, the average being upward of a hundred; and as the children are brought under religious training at an early age, we hope for good results. Indeed, we do now enjoy the fruits of our labors.

"The day-school is well attended, our teacher, Martin Harris, having a desire to do good both in school and as an assistant missionary. I thank God for such a man at my side."

MANNING'S HILL.

"The church at Manning's Hill is a new part of our work comparatively. It is established in a thickly populated neighborhood, and gives promise of being very fruitful.

"The day-school there, under our native brother, John L. Kelly, is now in good working order.

"The people have built for themselves a new and substantial chapel, the only help received being a small grant from government."

CHESTERFIELD.

Rev. C. B. Venning, the excellent pastor of the church at this station, though in poor health throughout the year, has yet been able to attend pretty regularly to the duties of his position. He reports no additions to the church on profession, and only two by letter.

Among the indications of prosperity, he says, are an increased interest in education, both by old and young, and an increased attendance in the Sabbath-school, which has nearly doubled in numbers.

The contributions for the support of the ministry are about as usual, while those for station purposes have increased two-fold.

BRANDON HILL AND PROVIDENCE.

The general tone of Mr. Wilson's report of these stations is cheerful. At Brandon Hill there has been no religious excitement, yet the number of additions to the church on profession of faith (eight) has been greater than for two or three past years. Mr. Wilson says, "It is gratifying to see a great work without any unusual excitement. We feel that the people are acting more intelligently, and that the work will be a more permanent and genuine one. Some of those who have been added to the church have been reclaimed from very bad lives, and now are walking so orderly that we can not doubt they have experienced a change of heart. I have often felt disappointed that our labors among the people here have not had more apparent effect upon them, and have sometimes too much doubted their having any effect; but I am quite convinced that faithful Christian labor will not be lost here, and that the labors of God's servants, some of whom have sacrificed their lives, have not been in vain. It is true it is a hard field, and that we have peculiar trials and discouragements; so have our people—and so much the more do they need our assistance. I am sure also that God in his own way is doing his work. It may be it is being already done, and in the way he wishes."

Mr. Wilson reports an effort of the people to erect a new chapel, and expresses himself as much gratified to see the spirit with which the young people contribute to the work. At Providence, t congregation is increasing, a large number of young people attending. "I think," says Mr. Wilson, "the people are improving at both places in intelligence, and in having a higher tone of Christian morality. One thing is certain, we are having fewer cases of discipline. I can see too that our churches are having a good effect upon the people, even upon those who do not join us."

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

Missionaries.—Rev. George P. Claflin, Mr. D. W. Burton, Mr. C. L. Matteson, Mrs. Claflin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. Mair, Mrs. Matteson, Miss Emily Beeken, Miss Emily L. Porter.

Native Assistants.—Rev. George N. Jewett and wife, one printer, and five other helpers.

Stations.—Good Hope, on the Sherbro Islands; Avery, on the Bargroo River; and Läwänä, on the Boom River.

Mr. and Mrs. Burton have returned to the mission during the year, taking with them Miss Porter, who went out for the first time. Mr. and Mrs. Matteson have returned to the United States.

The three stations are from forty to one hundred miles apart. That at Good Hope is the oldest. The mission premises consist of 2 acres of land, well planted with fruit; a mission house, 28×40 feet, one story high in front, and 26×50 feet, one and a half stories high, in the rear; a chapel 25×40 feet, with brick walls; and a frame house for the assistant missionary.

The church numbers thirty native members, of whom full half were from the school. In the prayer-meetings, from eight to ten usually take a voluntary part. Rev. Mr. Jewett has charge of the church.

At the Avery Station, on the Bargroo River, forty miles from Good Hope, there is a mission house of stone, 25×40 feet, and a smaller frame house, 16×24. Here is the saw-mill erected by Mr. Burton from special contributions for this object.

The latest intelligence from this station, September 11th, was that God's blessing was resting on the labors of the mission. Some were being gathered into the fold as trophies of divine grace. Mr. Burton says,

"For some weeks past, a growing interest has been manifest at our Bargroo Station, and three of the young people have taken a decided stand for Christ. There has been no unusual effort made; but God, in mercy, is sending the blessing in answer to prayer, and we hope it is but the beginning of a blessed time. I have been greatly cast down in view of the condition of things, but these mercy-drops are giving me new strength."

Läwänä Station, on the edge of a considerable native town of the same name, on the Boom River, is about forty miles from Good Hope. The absence of Mrs. Claflin, in consequence of continued ill-health, has seriously embarrassed the labors of this station.

Mr. Claflin's location in a native town, comparatively free from contact with foreigners from professedly Christian lands, gives him a better opportunity than is generally enjoyed to comprehend the native character, and the influences controlling it. It has generally been thought that the native African has no system of religious superstitions, hoary with age, which must be overcome before the entrance of the Gospel, which giveth light. It is discovered, however, that the prevalence of fetish worship, or gree-greeism, is almost universal among them, having ramifications that touch every relation of life, and seek to adapt themselves, in some one of their various forms, to every accident of human existence. This is nearly allied to a spirit-worship, in which, with various incantations, and with fetish offerings, the spirits of their dead ancestors are worshiped, or their counsel and aid sought, with a reliance not unlike that of some who, in more favored lands, seek to hold communion with departed spirits.

The fetishes, variously formed of leaves and bark, with mystical ceremonies, peculiar stones, bones of animals, parts of the human body, feet and bills of birds of prey, the end of an elephant's trunk, etc., are sought and worshiped on all occasions. Each has its specific purpose—to prevent or cure disease; to prevent accidents; to preserve from venomous snakes; to preserve life; to protect from thieving, treachery, or witchcraft; to enable one to steal or to war unharmed; to give skill in fishing, hunting, gambling, farming, etc.; to cause accidents, disease, and death; to give courage in battle; to destroy the power of an enemy, so that a sword lifted against one shall break and fall to the ground, a gun pointed at him shall fail to go off, or a ball be turned aside; to put an enemy to sleep, so as to take him unawares; to gain clearness of vision to discern much booty. They are worshiped, and curses pronounced over them against a hated person, which curses, the fetishes, if powerful enough, are supposed to fulfill. The curse is publicly pronounced, with long and bitter imprecations. If the cursed sits on a seat, it must pain him; if he lies on a bed, it must distress him; when he walks, a venomous snake must bite him; in the forest, a falling limb must kill him; when he builds a fire, it must destroy him. 'He must die all dead.'

To these superstitions, the Mohammedan has added others bearing a resemblance, fetishes or greegees made with passages of the Koran, in the Arabic tongue, and curiously incased, with sacrifice and prayers. For these, the Mohammedans claim all the powers that are supposed to reside in the various fetishes of the natives.

"Believing these things," Mr. Claflin asks, "is it strange that the miracles of the Gospel make no impression? Believing these things, is it strange that the Mohammedan has more favor with them than the Christian? Have they not, they ask, under such protection waged war, and been successful? Have they not found the words written on the hearts of great warriors? Have they not seen the power of the fetishes in curing disease and insanity, and saving from death?"

Such, says Mr. Claflin is some of the darkness that rests on the people of Africa. Is not the night heavy upon them? Will Satan easily abandon a work so rich in the elements of complete success? Truly we may answer in the words of our Lord, "This kind goeth not out but by fasting and prayer." To unite the prayers of God's people for Africa is this relation made.

The difficulty of finding missionaries for Africa yet remains. Few, if any, feel called upon to serve the Master in so trying a climate. But the position gained in this moral warfare must be held. No foot of advance should be yielded to the enemy. Already are numbers in our institutions turning their eyes toward Africa as a future missionary field, but they are not yet prepared. It would be bad generalship to send an undrilled force into so hard a battle-ground, to contend against such fearful odds. They must be thoroughly furnished for every good work. This requires time. Who will fill the gap till the reinforcement can be brought up, furnished and fitted for the contest? Are there not some in the army of the Lord ready to respond to this providential call and volunteer for the work?

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Makawao, Hamakua, and Kula.

Missionaries.—Rev. J. S. Green; Mrs. A. C. Green. One church, Congregational, Rev. J. S. Green, Pastor, assisted by Rev. J. P. Green.

Mr. Green for some years reported three churches, namely, at Makawao, Huelo, and Keokea; but on account of the steady and, of late, rapid waning of the people in numbers, they have been reported as one—the Union Congregational Church of Makawao, Hamakua, and Kula, with out-stations at Huelo and Keokea, at each of which the ordinances are administered quarterly. The whole number that has united with this church from the beginning, in 1843, has been 1117. Twelve members have been added at Huelo this year. An English preaching service has been sustained as in previous years, but no distinct English church has been formed. Although he has been frequently requested to organize such a one, Mr. Green does not think the condition indicates the expediency of doing so.

Schools.—The schools in the district occupied by the mission of Mr. Green have been steadily decreasing in interest, till in July, 1870, they numbered but 260 pupils. Under the new inspector-general, there has since been a favorable change both in numbers and interest. Rev. J. Porter Green has a boys' school which promises to train up a class of young men for usefulness among their countrymen. It is a governmental and a manual labor school.

Mr. Green does not give a very favorable report of the religious condition of the Sandwich Islands. His convictions are very clear that the removal of so many of the older missionaries, and intrusting the care of the churches so largely to native pastors, was disastrous. He is quite sure that it was imposing upon these pastors responsibilities for which they were not prepared, the evil results of which, he says, are springing up on every side.

SIAM MISSION, BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries.—Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D.; Rev. Cornelius Bradley; Mrs. S. B. Bradley; Mrs. Mary Bradley; Mr. G. G. Graham, Printer.

Mr. C. B. Bradley, who has just received appointment to the Siam Mission, is a son of Rev. D. B. Bradley; was born at Bangkok, and is familiar with the Siamese language. He came to this country to obtain a collegiate and theological education; on the completion of a regular course of these studies, he was ordained at Oberlin, and is now on his return to the land of his birth, to join his father in the mission work. Mrs. M. Bradley is a graduate of the ladies' course at Oberlin.

Dr. Bradley reports the addition of five members to the mission church—two of them members of his own family, and three Europeans; none have been added from the native population.

An edition of the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Canticles, and the prophecy of Isaiah, 659,000 pages in all, has been issued from the mission press, and the expense, $387.64, paid for out of a grant of $500 from the American Bible Society. From the unexpended balance of the grant, $112.36, an edition of 1000 copies each of Jeremiah and Lamentations was about to be issued.

Of the $3602.26 expended for the Siam Mission, $3194.76 were from the earnings of the mission—only $407.50 being drawn from our treasury.

The results of missionary labor in Siam yet belong more to the realms of faith than of sight. There seem, however, to be indications that the superstitions of Buddhism have but a comparatively slight hold upon the young king. He is reported to be taking steps tending to their overthrow, and instituting rigid inquiries into the character of the Buddhist priesthood, which may result at any time in the ejection of hundreds of its members from the honors and privileges which they have long enjoyed. He is sending several of his brothers and other relatives to Europe for education, and taking active measures, the tendency of which must be to introduce into his kingdom a more enlightened civilization, such as will overthrow the degrading

Dr. Bradley reports the addition of five members to the mission church—two of them members of his own family, and three Europeans; none have been added from the native population.

An edition of the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Canticles, and the prophecy of Isaiah, 659,000 pages in all, has been issued from the mission press, and the expense, $387.64, paid for out of a grant of $500 from the American Bible Society. From the unexpended balance of the grant, $112.36, an edition of 1000 copies each of Jeremiah and Lamentations was about to be issued.

Of the $3602.26 expended for the Siam Mission, $3194.76 were from the earnings of the mission—only $407.50 being drawn from our treasury.

The results of missionary labor in Siam yet belong more to the realms of faith than of sight. There seem, however, to be indications that the superstitions of Buddhism have but a comparatively slight hold upon the young king. He is reported to be taking steps tending to their overthrow, and instituting rigid inquiries into the character of the Buddhist priesthood, which may result at any time in the ejection of hundreds of its members from the honors and privileges which they have long enjoyed. He is sending several of his brothers and other relatives to Europe for education, and taking active measures, the tendency of which must be to introduce into his kingdom a more enlightened civilization, such as will overthrow the degrading idolatry which exists there. But the abandonment of Buddhism does not imply the adoption of Christianity, and the missionaries in Siam earnestly desire the continuance of fervent prayer, and unremitted missionary labor, that those upon whom the hold of superstition seems to be failing may not lapse into infidelity, but be instructed in the Gospel, and brought into the knowledge of Christ.

BY

REV. HENRY MARTYN SCUDDER, D.D.

JOHN 8 : 32.—"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

THROUGH the dark ages, human life ran with a sluggish tide. Its voice was a weary monotone. We tire even in listening to it.

As the ages advance, life becomes more intense; the movements of human society wax more significant, and the forces that converge upon the destinies of our race display more energy. The tide runs strongly. It gathers affluents at every step. From their heavenly seats prophecies descend to earth and turn into history. The truth spoken of in the text—Christ's truth—becomes known, and it prevails. It pervades the atmosphere of individual minds and of commonwealths. Men breathe it as they breathe air, unconsciously; and new life and liberty are the results.

The centuries of modern history bear, each upon its own front, a distinctive characteristic illustrative of the progress of that truth which makes men free. In the sixteenth century, the Reformation dawned, and not only illumined its own birth-place with its aureral light, but climbed to a zenith from whence it dispensed its splendors of quickened thought, hope, and courage to many countries. Rome was whipped from the highway which she had so long obstructed. It was as though an angel, crowned with a rainbow, flew through mid-heaven uttering our text, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The sixteenth century gave to the world the true conception of religious liberty.

In the next century, in England, a momentous conflict culminated in glorious success. It had been a long, and bitter, and sometimes bloody struggle: on the one hand, the people, through the House of Commons, contending for their rights; on the other, the crown, encompassed by an oligarchy, contending for unrighteous prerogatives. At last, through the throes of a revolution, the victory came. The people solemnly declared that the Stuarts had forfeited their regal rights; and electing Prince William of Orange as their sovereign, made with him a settlement that secured a constitutional government.

Civil and religious liberty won a grand and permanent triumph, and England became what she is this day—a free country. From that time, the monarchy has been for the people, and not the people for the monarchy. This was the magnificent illustration of our text which the seventeenth century gave.

The eighteenth century was variously notable. Peter the Great shadowed forth the policy of a stupendous empire; Charles the Twelfth of Sweden moved through Europe like a thunderbolt; the American colonies achieved their independence. But there is another event which fascinates the student of history. The doctrine of freedom needed a new and counter illustration. It was necessary to demonstrate to mankind the difference between liberty and anarchy—the distinction between freedom and lawlessness. It was a demonstration made in blood. The French Revolution, with its unutterable atrocities, made plain the lesson of the text that liberty must be based upon truth. It was written in letters of flame on the sky, which overhangs all nations, that the TRUTH alone can make men free. There can be no freedom without morality; a people must be virtuous in order to be free. This was the contribution of the eighteenth century to the doctrine of human liberty.

The nineteenth century has been prolific. We see Napoleon the First climb to his own pinnacle of glory, never approached by any other mortal, and then fall. We see the brave Greeks fight and win their independence. We behold Prussia vaulting with her educated soldiery, at one leap, into European supremacy. We see France trodden down; and Italy's long-indulged dream of unity at last fulfilled. We see also the confirmation of the Pope's infallibility, which is yet to prove the great disaster of the papacy. It is also the century of science and art. Steam moves every thing. The telegraph whispers to us at our breakfast-table the news of the globe. The spectroscope tells us what substances exist in the photosphere of the sun. Vessels sail through the Suez Canal; cars run through the tunneled Alps; and the Pacific Railroad makes Japan and China America's western border. Wonderful as all these events are, to us Americans the central spectacle of this century is on our own continent. Two antagonists met. On the shield of the one was written, "Equal rights for all men." On that of the other, "Mastership for the white; slavery for the black." There was no room for reconciliation. Compromises were mere make-shifts. One of these must go down. Both were giants. The continent was turned into an amphitheatre. The two gladiators, like pugilists in a ring, first sparred and made feints. They went around each other, tried each other's mettle, advanced and retreated in a routine of political manœuvres; but finally the hour came. The nations pressed as spectators into the seats of this amphitheatre. There they sat with eager looks. A few applauded the Northern gladiator; most hissed. But in spite of them, the black giant went down, though he had boasted himself a Goliath, and stigmatized his foe as a little David, who knew not how to fight. He fell, and his head was cut off. Then liberty revived, good men were glad, devils howled, angels sang, and God rejoiced; for this was the commentary on our text that the nineteenth century was commissioned to make.

What were the results? Mountain ranges with their ice and snow, their running torrents and frozen glaciers, their towering bulks and fathomless chasms, often divide nation from nation; but gloomier, loftier, and seemingly more impracticable than the Himalayas was the barrier that, separating the North from the South, shut out the negro from freedom, hope, and race-development. But God's breath of battle blew the barrier down; and there came the verdict of war in favor of millions of waiting souls, "You are no longer slaves; you are as free as any other Americans. No one, hereafter, shall be lord over you; you are made lords over yourselves." This was the voice of war.

The nation took time to breathe and think; and then was heard another voice saying, "You are our creditors, by reason of years of unredressed wrong; and you are our comrades, because you fought with us and for us in this war. You need protection. We will show you how to guard yourself. We do not suggest the bowie-knife, the revolver, and the rifle; but we give you a tremendous weapon, a bit of paper—the ballot; you shall have the right to go to the polls and put it in. We confer upon you citizenship, and we open to you the path of ambition; you may become alderman, mayor, representative, senator, governor, vice-president, or president. You have been Helots long enough; now be men—be citizens of the republic!" This was the verdict of the American people in their sober thought.

Was there ever in the history of the world a movement forward so sudden and stupendous? A race of slaves freed by the verdict of war; then, by legislative enactment, lifted from their low estate into the high places of citizenship! Yesterday under the lash; to-day voters and office-holders! Would not such an experiment try the timbers of the ship of state? Hurricanes may be expected athwart the track where this clipper-ship, the Republic, sails. Were we not already carrying too much sail? Would it not be better to take in a reef than to set studding-sails? We believe that, if the crew prove true and do their duty, the good ship will not only stand it, but make good time.

As I look at the South, I am interested in its future career, as in a question of muscle. The negro element in the South is the element of muscle. There is the muscle that grew the tobacco, that tilled the sugar-cane and the cotton. Its capacity is immense; its adaptation is complete. It can endure heat. It can live and thrive by the borders of deadly swamps, and can vanquish malaria, laughingly shaking off chills and fever! This view exhausted the slaveholder's conception of the negro: How much could he dig, plow, plant, weed, and hoe? There was just so much available work in him, and it was a great deal, and could be computed in dollars and cents. On this account, this volume of muscle was carefully fed, clothed, sheltered, and physicked. This muscle was in gear. It was under law. Its steady working was secured as exactly as that of the leathern belts which turn the wheels in a factory. The institution of slavery was the factory, and in it the muscle worked with the precision of machinery. We of the North applied the torch of war to that factory, and burned it to the ground. The muscle escaped out of it unsinged. It is still there; but now it is no longer enslaved. It is free, and unsupervised. What is to become of it? Have we lost our interest in it as a matter of muscle? By no means. Shall indolence and recklessness waste it? Will liberty evoke from it as much as the lash did? That is the question. We can not afford to lose this mass of muscle—to throw away its availability to the industries of the American commonwealth! Can it be economized, concentrated, and thoroughly utilized? Does not the text afford the answer? If they know the truth, it shall make them free. Intelligence, culture, and self-respect will make free muscle better than fettered muscle.

I am also interested in the career of the colored people as a question of mind. The world has been deeply affected by the story of a single mind that was cramped for many years—the story of Casper Hauser, who was cooped up in a room, in close confinement, almost up to the period of manhood. When at last he was let out, he was a child—yea, less than a child; knowing nothing, and thinking that the stars which he saw in the sky touched his eyeballs. But here we have an entire race cribbed and cramped in all its powers, and can we help being interested in them? There was no other course than this of repression open to the slaveholder. All despotisms, no matter of what grade or degree, must proceed upon this principle. When the Emperor of Austria, in the year 1821, addressed the professors in the university of Laybach, he said, "Do not teach too much. I want obedient subjects, not learned or scientific men." All despots are owls. For their eyes there is altogether too much light in daylight; they strike their prey in the night of ignorance. In the colored people, we have to deal with mind that is enfranchised, though utterly uncultured. It is like the opening of a new continent. Every thing is to be done; prairies to be plowed, forests to be girdled, marshes to be drained, and land to be laid out in vineyards, orchards, corn-fields, and meadows. The field is inviting. It is capable mind. It is anxious mind—yearning to know. Here, then, on our hands, is a race to be cultivated. They all are children. They constitute the nation's nursery. They lack knowledge; and what can make them free from ignorance and error but truth? Give them the truth, and it shall make them free.

I am deeply interested, likewise, in their new character as freshly-fledged voters. We have done what Sparta never dared to do. We have passed men up from a condition of abject slavery into the territory of suffrage, without any intermediate training. Sparta was afraid of her Helots, and was accustomed to thin them out by massacres. None other than a strong, virtuous, fearless, self-conscious people would venture to do what we have done. We have freed the slaves, and placed them by our side as voters. In what channels will this new volume of suffrage flow? Will it prove itself intelligent suffrage? Will it develop, strengthen, educate, and bless the novices who exercise it? Will it shape itself in such a way as to neutralize the turbulent immigration that flows in upon us from abroad? Will it prove a home alkali to receive and antidote this foreign acid? They need education and guidance. Give them such instruction. Let them know the truth, and the truth shall make them free. It will make them freemen, who shall disgrace neither themselves nor the government that emancipated them.

I feel intensely interested in the religious culture of this people. They are a peculiar race. They are patient, docile, full of song and mirth, and vivacity irrepressible, which even ages of oppression could not obliterate. They are warm-hearted and fervent; but, on the other side, they are more mercurial than masculine in the cast of their minds. They are superstitious and ignorant. They are excitable. They have more religion than morality, and are prone to indulge rather in tumultuous feeling than in virtuous practice. They remind me of a tropical forest, where there are luxuriant growths and noxious undergrowths; where there is a commingling of the aroma of flowers with the pestiferous exhalations of swamps; where there are humming-birds and trogons in the branches above, alligators and serpents in the bogs below. How can we contemplate the present condition of the African race in our country without feeling that those uninstructed, untutored millions present to us a vast field for labor?

The American republic is evidently commissioned of God to solve several difficult problems. Our great and good Schoolmaster sets us task upon task. As soon as we finish one, we find another and harder one ready for us. We have a number of these problems on hand

now. The uneducated Irishman is one of them. We have him to tame. It is a job. It is as troublesome for the commonwealth to tame him, as it was for Rarey to tame the zebra; but he did it. The zebra is African by birth, but genuinely Irish in the stripe of its temper. It kicks, bites, and strikes out with its fore-legs. Its genius for fight is prodigious. Nevertheless it became as obedient as it was graceful, strong, and agile. He tamed, and we shall. We shall not give up the work till we have thoroughly done it. The Irishman comes here unruly and uproarious. Recreant Americans, traitors to the rights and liberties of the people, greedy office-seekers and hungry money-stealers, beset the Irishman and lead him astray, while he is not loth to follow. He feels his suddenly acquired power. He grows fat like Jeshurun of old, and kicks; but this is only a temporary performance. He has good points, and is to be tamed, and, beneficially both to himself and to us, incorporated into the body politic. The Irishman is yet to become a polished column in the temple of liberty. We shall have to expend much sagacity and skill on him, but we shall, in time, accomplish our task.

Another problem that frightens many is the Chinese. They are coming and will come in greater numbers. We have only just felt the thin spray of this inrolling surge of heathen immigration. Some fear that it will prove a tidal wave which will submerge us. I have no such fear. Japan and China will pour their young men into this country to receive an impress of education and of true religion; and then the fluent wave will become refluent, and carry back blessings to those empires.

Ah! but what sort of a commonwealth will this be, that is such a strange commixture—Saxons, Celts, Africans, Mongols, and others? Be not afraid. These heterogeneous elements are to blend in a grand unity. God has determined that nutritive blood shall flow in the veins of this republic, and nutritive blood is a complex fluid. A man must feed upon starch, and sugar, and oil, and albumen, and water, and salt, and lime, if he wishes to have generous blood. This seems to be a medley. One might think these ingredients would not coöperate. But they do, and they must all go into the mouth, if we would have nutritive blood in the heart.

The colored race furnish the other problem. It is nearest to us. We can not rid ourselves of it, even if our temper ran that way. The negroes of the South must be Christianized and civilized. Who will do it? We must. The South can not. It is wasted and depressed. Besides, if it could, it would not. It is sullen, morose, and rather disposed to hinder than to further schemes of amelioration. We who freed the slaves are become, by that act, their natural guardians.

We must wisely and persistently help them till they can help themselves.

There are three voluntary societies in the land which, in my estimation, overtop the rest. The first is the "Foreign Missionary" enterprise, which aims to evangelize and civilize the entire pagan world. The second is the "Home Missionary" enterprise, which finds its immense field in the West, and tries, with gigantic effort, to keep up with our ever swiftly advancing frontier. The third is the Association whose anniversary we are convened to celebrate to-night, and which finds its sphere in the colored population of the South. It entered this field even before the war; but then its agents were beaten, its schoolmasters mobbed, its edifices torn down, its missionaries imprisoned, or driven across the border. But now the door is widely opened, and no man can ever shut it again. What is wanted? Why, every thing is wanted. Day-schools and night-schools; primary schools, grammar schools, and normal schools; high-schools, schools of law, schools of medicine, and schools of theology; Sunday-schools, agricultural schools and industrial schools; all kinds of schools, seminaries, academies, colleges, and universities; and above all, a pure Christian church which is the school of schools. In these various departments this society has made a noble and auspicious beginning. It purposes to elevate the colored people in all their relations, economic, mental, civil, and spiritual. Its instrumentalities are mighty though simple. They are these two: the discipline of the school-house, and the inspiration of the church.

Here is a field in which all can coöperate. You may be peculiar in your views, but it does not seem possible that your peculiarity should be such as to prevent your coöperating. Are you an ethnologist? Study this race in its history of wrongs and woes, and give them a helping hand in their upward struggle. Are you a political economist? As you cast about to note and appropriate every element of national prosperity, do not overlook the capacities and energies of this people. Are you an educationist? Become an advocate for this generation of adults, who are, nevertheless, children. Are you a philanthropist? Then you love every body, and must love these also, and give them your sympathy and aid. Are you a Democrat? I suppose that there are some who will answer to that name in Hartford; what does it mean? Does it not involve the equality of man with man? Then enter into this scheme, and say, "These, too, are men, and we will try to make them brethren, of whose advancement we shall be proud." Are you a Republican? That's what I am. Who is a republican? One who believes that the "res publica," the general interest, the common good of the people, is the only legitimate aim of government; not the good of a class, but of all the people. If, then, you are a republican, there is work here for you. Are you a Christian? You are to do unto others as you wish them to do unto you. This secures you.

It appears, therefore, that no matter what you are, this enterprise of educating the colored people finds you out, and appropriately ininvites your coöperation. Here, at least, no one can say, "There is no room for me." If you do not in your single self represent all the characters just indicated, yet surely some one of those characters must be represented in you; for I presume that no one here will be ready to say, "I am neither ethnologist, nor political economist, nor educationist, nor philanthropist, nor Democrat, nor Republican, nor Christian." If there be present such a one, pray, what are you?

Redemption is by blood; this seems to be a law of the universe. The black people were redeemed out of their bondage by the blood of their Northern saviours. The blood of those who fell on our battlefields, the sufferings of those who were starved in the pens and prisons of the South, and of those who died in the hospitals and homes of the North, the tears of the multitudes thus bereaved, the treasures of the nation so freely expended, all these conspire in pressing upon us the demand to perfect this experiment of freedom, to contribute to it time, wisdom, energy, prayer, and money. The God of war began this good work, the Prince of peace must crown it.

The day was, when every true American carried shame in his soul; shame, that in a land consecrated to liberty there should be millions of slaves. When he thought of it, though all alone, he blushed; and when he went abroad among other nations, and was taunted, his face crimsoned, because the taunt was truth. That day has gone by. National self-respect is restored. Wherever we go, we are able, each of us, to say, "I am the citizen of a great republic, where all men are free." And this endowment of self-respect, God's last and best national gift to us, calls for a response of gratitude which can in no way be so well rendered as in doing all that we may be able to do to educate and elevate the colored people of these United States. (Applause.)

Wednesday Evening Session.

The Association met in the evening at half-past seven o'clock, Vice-President Holton in the chair.

The Annual Sermon was preached by Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., of Illinois, from Luke 16: 8, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

The opening exercises were conducted by Rev. Moses Smith, Rev. C. H. Richards, and Rev. Dr. Patton.

Voted that the first order to-morrow morning be the report of the Committee on the Financial Report, and that the hour from nine to ten be given to devotional exercises.

After singing and the benediction, the Association took a recess till eight o'clock Thursday morning.

Thursday Morning Session.

The Association met again at eight o'clock, Thursday morning, Vice-President Holton in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Curtiss, of Illinois.

The report of the Committee on Educational Work among the Freedmen not being yet ready, the subject was opened for general discussion. Rev. E. M. Cravath, Field Secretary, gave some account of the work.

He was followed by Rev. C. M. Terry, of Minnesota, on the same subject.

At nine A.M., the Association engaged in devotional exercises, led by Rev. C. H. Richards, of Wisconsin. One hour was occupied in singing, prayer, and conference; brethren Holton, Strieby, Chapin, Bascom, Doe, Weir, and Smith taking part.

At ten o'clock, the Association resumed business, Rev. Dr. Chapin, of Wisconsin, in the chair.

Rev. Dr. Magoun, from the Committee on Education among the Freedmen, presented the following report, which, after remarks by Dr. Magoun, was adopted:

The committee have had in their hands that portion of Secretary Strieby's report containing a general survey of the education of the Freedmen, the detailed survey of the Field Secretary including statistics of the Eastern Department, together with the statistics of the Western Department; and a number of catalogues of chartered institutions. From the summary attached to these papers, and from our own analysis, we find that seven chartered institutions of a higher character are reported, with 36 instructors and 1800 students attending, and of these students 46 are under college instruction, and 34 studying theology. The institutions referred to are Straight, Tougaloo, Fiske, Berea, Atlanta, Talladega, and Hampton. In several of these, college classes are already formed; they will all presently have such classes. The work of their Normal Departments is one evidently of special, immediate, and very great usefulness. Besides these there are 21 Graded and High Schools, 16 in the eastern and 5 in the western field, with 110 teachers, with Normal Departments containing 6477 pupils. In three of these there are commercial and industrial courses of instruction with 63 pupils. There are also 69 common schools, with 33 teachers in the Eastern Department, and 66 in the Western—99 in all, and 8731 pupils, and 8809 Sabbath-school scholars in the Sabbath-schools attached to them. In all 346 persons have been under commission during the year, and 15,208 pupils enrolled in the Eastern and Western Departments taken together. The whole work covers the States of Virginia, North-Carolina, South-Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, the Indian Territory, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Missouri.

The magnitude and importance of this work can hardly be overestimated. Only one thing has more impressed the committee in going through the interesting and impressive details placed before us, namely, the necessity of its immediate and great enlargement. While we stand appalled at the masses of colored men suddenly called to citizenship without being educated to it, our obvious duty to push the work of educating their children, so soon to be men and women themselves, with all the energy, compass, and completeness possible, is not only unquestionable but oppressive. More than the $328,000 expended on the whole work last year; more than the $400,000 recommended to be raised by the National Council at Oberlin a year since, is needed for this branch of the work alone. Two things alone the institutions of various grade sustained by the Association do not seem to lack—a multitudinous and enthusiastic attendance, and the influences of the Holy Spirit. In all other respects their wants are many, great, and pressing. The very great wisdom of planning and planting the higher institutions for this most needy people at the earliest moment is now apparent. It will be the highest wisdom now to improve and elevate them in advance of the immediate necessities created by the rapid progress of the lower schools. Thousands will presently be knocking at the doors of these young colleges, where now there are hundreds; and instead of a hundred teachers of common schools, and a little more than a hundred teachers of graded schools, there will soon be thousands upon thousands of such Christian teachers needed. The call upon persons of large means to endow and equip these colleges, for which large sums are needed, will, we trust, be heeded. Such operations springing up among the people or the pupils themselves, as that of the Jubilee Singers, putting $20,000 into the treasury of a single institution, manifestly can not be repeated. Evidently, too, the work of the Association must pass more and more out of the realm of common-school instruction, and develop itself more and more in that of the higher education. The teachers and leaders of the people must come from the normal schools and colleges now established in usefulness and in the confidence of the people, and of the former at least many more must hereafter be founded. And these will require ample gifts, and a great many of them, as well as the colleges. The time has clearly come for a notable enlargement of Christian and public-spirited munificence in this grand work of educating a people in knowledge and culture founded on the sure foundation of God's holy word.

The committee can not bring back the subject referred to them to the action of the Association without uttering their profound gratification at the features of conversion experience among students which come out in the detailed reports from the different institutions. Conviction of sin, continuous enough to show its reality and depth, followed by a clear and distinct sense of pardon and acceptance through the blood of Christ, have marked these conversion experiences in a degree to certify the thoroughly evangelical character of this education work, and call for profound gratitude to God. In this view, what has been begun in some institutions in the training of well-educated colored preachers is of the greatest moment and hope. The committee have been stirred with wonder and joy at the onward movement disclosed in the papers placed in their hands; and they are impelled on all accounts to say that a very great increase of gifts is merited and loudly demanded, for the endowment and equipment and current expenses of these colleges, seminaries, and schools.

GEORGE W. MAGOUN, Chairman.

Rev. Dr. Whiting, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Ministerial Education among the Freedmen, presented the following report, which, after remarks by brother M. T. Weir, of Kentucky, Secretary Strieby, and Rev. Isaac Preston, of Illinois, was adopted:

The commitee discern the almost vital demand for an abundant ministry of preaching among the freedmen. God has ordained the living ministry for a work nothing can displace or equal in effectiveness.

This race are affected—as are all rudimentary civilizations—in a marked degree by the forces of popular speech. The masses really can be reached in no other way, and no other method would be equally useful to them.

The committee earnestly commend the plan of the Association to make novitiates, in this ministry, of the more approved and advanced young men in their schools. This temporary trial-service is a training the schools can not equally well impart.

It will fashion the young pupil-heart to the work; give a knowledge of the necessities of the people by actual contact—train to a skill in presenting truth and meeting the masses which, unless gained early, is seldom gained at all—and the people, always drawn by youthful enthusiasm, grow through such a ministry into an interest and care for the ministry as a profession which they never would feel without this acquaintance with the processes of preparation for it.

The committee think, indeed, that some such supplemental method is indispensable in carrying the preached word into the wide wastes which so cover the field of the Association.

Each year maturer, better gifts for this work will be in the hands of the schools. We call special attention to the plan of the Association for multiplying this native ministry through temporary labors in it during the school period.

LYMAN WHITING, Chairman.

Hon. S. D. Hastings, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on the Financial Report, presented the following report, which was adopted:

The committee to whom was referred the annual statement of the treasurer, with the accompanying paper, would respectfully report that the documents bear evidence that they contain a correct statement of the financial transactions of the Association during the past year. The footings are correct, and the report has the certificate of the auditors to the effect that they have examined the vouchers and found every thing right.

The total receipts for the past year were	$329,968 93
And the total expenditures were	327,997 67
	$1,941 26

The balance against the Association Sept. 30, 1872, is	59,920 58
	$1,941 26

The reduction in the debt being the difference between the receipts and expenditures for the year.

The expenditures for the past year have been made for the following purposes:

For the support of Missions in different localities, including the Southern field	$236,347 94
For Missions in Italy, contributed for this special purpose	500 00
For permanent endowments	48,927 00
	$285,674 94
For expenses of various kinds in carrying on the operations of the Association	42,322 73
	$327,997 67

The expenses of the year appear to have been over 12 per cent on the total receipts of the Association, or a trifle over 15 per cent on the amount received for Mission purposes.

[This includes the cost of the "American Missionary," a large share of which is repaid. If this expenditure were deducted, the figures would be 10.05 per cent or 12.8 per cent instead of 12 or 15.—ED. AMERICAN MISSIONARY.]

While we have the utmost confidence in the wisdom and prudence of the Secretaries and Committee who manage the affairs of the Association, we would kindly suggest whether the ratio of expenses to the receipts could not be reduced.

The Committee have nothing before them by which they can form an opinion as to the economy with which the affairs of the Association have been managed, or as to the wisdom of the various expenditures which have been made, but that future Committees may have the proper documents before them to enable them to form an intelligent judgment on these points, we would suggest that such of the books and vouchers of the Association as may be necessary for the purpose, be on hand at the next annual meeting. They recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Treasurer be in future requested to report all the permanent endowment fund belonging to the Association, its source, how invested, amount of income therefrom, and how expended; also, all real estate and other property, its source, where located, amount of income from it, (if any,) and how expended, and expense of land not productive.

2. Resolved, In view of the broadening field of the Association, the encouraging developments of Providence, and the necessities of our country in its relation to the freedmen, that the churches should raise for the purposes of the Association, during the ensuing year, not less than $400,000. (Amended as below.)

3. Resolved, That it should be the endeavor of the pastors so to train the Churches in systematic benevolent contributions as not to require the employment of agents to secure annual collections in aid of this Association, and that we commend the efforts of the officers of the Association to carry out this method, having due regard to the necessities of the treasury.

4. Resolved, That the Executive Committee be requested to have present at the next meeting of the Association such books and documents as will enable the Finance Committee to form an intelligent judgment as to the propriety of the expenditures of the Association and the economy of its management.

Hon. S. D. Hastings, from the Committee on the Financial Report, requested leave to offer an amendment to the report of that committee, substituting $500,000, instead of $400,000, as the sum which the Association shall ask from the churches for the operations of the coming year. The amendment was adopted with enthusiasm.

Rev. W. A. Bartlett, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Chinese in America, presented a report, which, after remarks by Mr. Bartlett, was adopted.

In the detailed report of the missionary work among the Chinese in America, the Committee find evidence of gratifying success, wherever missionaries have been located. At Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, and San Francisco, conversions are reported. Everywhere the lady missionaries have been able to gather enough to occupy their entire time profitably. Public sentiment on the Pacific coast is improving. Remarkable as it may seem that there should be an occasion for a Christian body to resolve that Chinese should be admitted to the churches on showing the usual evidence of Christian character, yet the fact that such a resolution was adopted by the State Congregational Association of California proves that our brethren are alive to the situation and are determined to put down the cruel caste feeling that had gained too much ascendancy, even in the churches.

The Committee commend the method of coöperation with the local churches in the work, and suggest that wherever such coöperation is practicable and nothing has yet been done to reach the Chinese population, an effort should be made to establish a school. The results where the work has been begun call for its extension until every eligible point shall be occupied. The recommendation of enlargement is made with the confident assurance that the Christian people of America recognize the providential call, as well as the true economy of reaching the vast pagan populations of China through their own representatives sent to our shores, and will sustain the Association by supplying the additional funds for this grand work.

Duty to our country, to the souls of those who have come and are coming amongst us, and to the millions of Asia, demand that we seize upon this providential opportunity for disseminating the Gospel of Christ.

The audience united in the singing of the verse, "Shall we whose souls are lighted."

Rev. R. B. Howard, of Illinois, from the Committee on Indian Missions, presented the following report, which, after remarks by Rev. Dr. Riggs, of the Dakotah Mission, Pres. Chapin, Hon. E. D. Holton, Hon. J. V. Farwell, and Rev. E. P. Smith, Secretary of Indian Missions, was, after subsequent discussion, adopted:

Your Committee believe that results already more than justify the wisdom of the policy lately adopted by the government toward the Indians. They prove that had the government taken this course twenty years ago we should not now have been discussing the question of the civilization of the red men. In view of the pressure of greed and political patronage, which is sure to continue against the working of the present humane policy, the moral sentiment of the nation should be aroused and brought constantly to aid the President and his Cabinet; and Congress should be made to feel that appropriations to be expended, without fraud, for the benefit of the wards of the government, will receive the approbation of their constituency.

The churches of the land must arouse the consciences of the American people more and more, until it shall be impossible to return to the old ways of Indian fraud and cruelty. The necessities of the case are becoming more and more pressing. We have no longer a border to which we can banish our savages. They must live within the lines of our civilization, either as barbarians or as a civilized people.

As savages, they can not be tolerated; the alternative is the successful execution of the present effort for their elevation.

We congratulate the Association on the success with which its Christian work has been prosecuted during the past year. This is owing to the business capacity and Christian character of the men which it has nominated as agents. As the government continues to demand agents, not only of competent business ability, but of pronounced Christian character, we trust this body of Christians will always be able to meet that demand.

The American Missionary Association should hold itself in readiness to enter and occupy any new field that may be opened to it among the Indians. Its past success warrants the belief that missionary work for the red men can be committed to no wiser or safer hands.

Your Committee would suggest as a matter to be immediately considered and acted upon by our executive officers, a consultation with the A. B. C. F. M. on the feasibility of transferring the care of Indians under its charge to the care of this Association. In this way it seems to us the work itself would be simplified and unified; the Government would have but one body of Congregationalists to co-operate with, and the appeal for church contributions and their expenditure would be through but one channel. Brethren, we ought to nerve ourselves to take and fully bear the new and increasing responsibility laid upon us in this work by Providence, and to seek the direct and enabling influence of the Holy Ghost.

After prayer by Rev. S. J. Humphrey, District Secretary of the American Board, the Association took a recess till two o'clock P.M.

Thursday Afternoon Session.

The Association met again at two o'clock P.M., Vice-President Magoun in the chair, and was opened by singing the hymn, "Behold, the expected time draws near," and prayer by Prof. J. C. Webster, of Illinois.

Rev. W. D. Love, D.D., of Michigan, from the Committee on Church Planting at the South, presented the following report, which, after remarks by Rev. Dr. Patton, of Illinois, was adopted:

The Committee on "Church Planting in the South" commend the theory and practice of the Secretaries and Missionaries of the Association. The obstacles in this department of labor are more numerous and varied than the patrons of the Society generally suppose. When and where to form churches? How much to affiliate with existing ones of long standing? Whether ever to absorb them? How to conduct our own labors without exciting jealousies, oppositions, and bitterness from other denominations long upon the ground? are questions constantly recurring. There are already churches enough among the freedmen of one kind, and these are amply supplied with ministers, such as they are. Northern Missionaries, of some denominations, found at the South a large number of churches and preachers of their own order, but without their type of piety. Our own Missionaries found no churches or ministers of our own polity. They could have absorbed and catalogued many of the existing churches, with their leaders. But such additions would have been dead-weights on our hands, a stigma to our principles, and a source of irritation to other denominations. Intemperance, licentiousness, lying, stealing, exist in many of those churches without discipline, and under the patronage of the Christian name. It is sometimes proclaimed among them that they have "no use for Bible Christians." Drunken church-members can at times be counted by the dozen, especially on Sunday. Thefts and adulteries that grew out of the hot-bed of slavery are not yet rooted up.

Churches and ministers of such corruptions are not for absorption, but regeneration Holiness can not be infused among them; they must be born again. The isolated instances of piety there will not leaven the whole lump without first an exposure of its wickedness. Grace requires light, as leaven requires heat. Reconstruction in the churches was more needed than in the States. Missionaries of their own denominations have found it so. Missionaries to the dead Armenian and Nestorian churches long ago proved that man can not breathe into such masses a spiritual life, and that God will not. He demands first a law-work that revives sin. Then they themselves put off their old habits as the carcass of the old man with his deeds.

We must begin with first principles; teach and preach the Gospel in prayer until God gives converts, and then form churches, with the doctrines, watch, and discipline of Christ's house. Thus primitive churches grew from the synagogue, not in them. Opposition may now be awakened as of old; we are only in watching and prayer to maintain the spirit and teaching of Christ and go forward. What is good and true in the old bodies will segregate itself from the mass and join the new.

The wants of the freedmen, and of the whites, at the South, make such a seed-sowing of churches imperative. The specimen is needed everywhere at once; the fruit will be a hundredfold in the years to come.

Education, even religious education, can be no substitute for such churches. Education itself needs the churches, and the churches education. Let us beware of the error of some Foreign Missionaries in trying to make education a basis for the gospel. A basis for its work is in the human heart. The gospel is itself complete and self-poised, and needs not to be held back for engineering to go before it. Our education to the freedmen should everywhere itself be Bible religion first, midst, and last; all science, all learning, being in the interest of that religion, and baptized with it. Churches should spring up at all our posts of labor as soon as there are converts to be members, and teachers to be elders. The consummate flower of all the work of the Association is the Christian church. Every thing else should prepare for it, and lead toward it. Six such new churches are reported for the past year, and ten houses of worship begun, finished, or purchased. If it be possible, let more time and strength be expended in this direction. One Secretary's suggestion, that pious and promising young men be looked out and brought forward to this work, is very timely and important. We can not wait to carry all through the collegiate and seminary course without losing precious opportunities, and permitting millions to go to their graves unblessed by such Gospel labors.

Yet, the churches should everywhere be the banner and protection of education. We should copy after our early New-England fathers, who planted the church and the school together, and produced the finest specimen of civilization the world has ever known. To meet Roman Catholicism we need wider and more rapid extension of education at the South—Catholicism, that has struck for the freedmen on that broad field during the last few years. She proposes to inoculate the colored race with her religion by playing upon their superstitions, by manipulating their souls with tinsel, lights, music, and tinkling bells, at which devoted lips go down to kiss the floors. By Gospel education the freedmen may be exalted above such baits and allurements Our present schools and seminaries at the South are of the utmost moment to provide quickly teachers for more schools, and preachers for more churches. By all these agencies the light will shine, and, conspiring with whatever else God may kindle, shall lighten all the dark, pitiful realm rescued from the nightly pall of slavery. Revivals will prevail—eleven are reported among our freed people the last year, showing, as of old, the power of the word and spirit to convince, regenerate, and sanctify. Thus will our church-work bear its God-owned, noble part in the coming of Christ's kingdom.

On motion of Secretary Whipple, the proposed amendment of the VI. article of the Constitution was adopted, by which the Corresponding Secretaries are made advisory members of the Executive Committee.

Pres. A. L. Chapin, D.D., of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Foreign Missions, presented the following report, which, after remarks by Rev. W. A. Bartlett, of Illinois, was adopted:

The Committee to whom was referred that portion of the report of the Executive Committee which pertains to the Foreign Missions, respectfully report that they have reviewed the statements presented, and find nothing demanding the special action of the Association at this time.

When the report is printed, the special attention of the friends of Missions should be turned to what is said of the enlargement, already begun and yet more in prospect, on the African field, and the relation of that work to the development of a Missionary spirit in connection with the progress of Christian education among the freedmen of our own country.

It is quite evident that three of the four Missions now under charge of the Association should still be cherished and efficiently sustained. That at the Sandwich Islands is so nearly self-sustaining as to require little more than the fostering sympathy of its American friends.

The Committee on this department of the Association's work would concur with the Committee on the Indian Missions in the suggestion that our Executive Committee confer with the Prudential Committee of the A. B. C. F. M. respecting the feasibility of a mutual transfer of Missions, with a view to a better defining and concentrating of their respective operations.

At three o'clock, the Association proceeded to the celebration of the Lord's Supper, Rev. S. J. Humphrey, of Illinois, and Rev. O. Emerson, of Iowa, presiding at the table.

After the Communion service, Rev. H. A. Stimson, of Minnesota, from the Committee on Systematic Giving, presented the following resolution, which, after remarks by Mr. Stimson, Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Illinois; Rev. Dr. Riggs, of the Dakotah Mission; Rev. R. B. Howard, of Illinois; Rev. Dr. Patton, of Illinois; Rev. Moses Smith, of Illinois; Rev. E. P. Smith, Secretary of Indian Missions; and Pres. Magoun, of Iowa, was adopted:

Resolved, That the Association recommends to the churches to adopt some plan of Systematic Giving, that will secure a contribution at least once every Sabbath, according to the Scriptural injunction, and also that this Association recommends that the offerings of each Church be apportioned among the various Societies recommended at Oberlin, on the basis of their relative estimated expenditures for the current year.

Secretary Strieby, of New-York, offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of the Association be given to Rev. Dr. Goodwin for his able, timely, and practical sermon last evening, and that a copy be requested for publication with the proceedings of the meeting.

Secretary Strieby read a letter from Rev. E. N. Kirk, D.D., of Massachusetts, President of the Association.

BOSTON, Oct. 25, 1872.

DEAR BROTHER STRIEBY: May I request you to express to the Executive Committee my thanks for their message of sympathy and kindness.

Unable to participate in the delightful exercises of our anniversary, I shall rejoice with you in spirit, as you together review the manifestations of God's faithfulness during the past year. I congratulate the members of our society that they have been permitted to take part in a work so dear to Christ, so vital to the future peace and prosperity of our beloved country.

It is possible that various causes may combine effectually to check the tide of emigration from China. But I thank God that our Association has fully appreciated the necessity of meeting that tide of heathenism with the transforming influences of the Gospel. Within the present month I have seen a specimen of this transformation, which must confirm the faith and quicken the zeal of every friend of Christian Missions. A Chinese child was given by her parents to one of our missionaries. In four years the power of the Gospel, exhibited in the domestic life of a Christian family, had effectually eradicated the traits of character which a heathen education had added to the natural defects of our race. If not a Christian, she has escaped the depressing influences of a Chinese education. Buoyancy, brightness, tender affections and sweetness of manner would rank her with the best specimens of the children of our race.

Go on, dear brethren. If the Chinese do not come here, you have done your part in testifying your readiness to meet them in a Christian spirit, to lead them to Christ, and to save your country from the contaminations of Paganism.

I congratulate you that you have taken your stand with our Chief Magistrate in his patriotic and Christian policy with regard to our neighbors of the Indian tribes. You have said to the National Government that you approve its policy. Heretofore this nation seems to have regarded the Indian as a nuisance, whose extermination was necessary to the nation's prosperity. Our present Chief Magistrate, we understand to leave with our common Creator the future history of the red men.

While recognizing our own responsibility for our treatment of them, so far as they are a weak people, we must pity them and defend them against the rapacity of our own citizens. So far as they manifest a savage disposition, we must equally protect the white population from their fierce and cunning cruelty.

They have no right to claim a magnificent continent for their hunting-ground; but they have a right to so much land as is necessary with proper cultivation to support them. But they must peacefully submit to the settlement of the white man in the neighborhood of their reserves, and permit the necessary public highways to cross those reserves. And the whole power of the government is pledged to defend alike every white and red and black man, living beneath the shadow of the national flag.

Understanding this to be the President's policy, I congratulate you that you have openly defended that policy, and offered our society to perform their part of the work necessary for its execution.

Thanks be to God, we enter on our new year with undiminished hope. I congratulate you on the present condition and prospects of our schools, colleges, and churches.

We look for no sudden changes, but have every reason to trust our Saviour that he will work, through ours and kindred institutions, a change in the condition and the character of the Americo-African race, which shall reveal to our brethren of every section of the country, that our views of duty were not visionary, and that your labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

May his presence be realized in your assemblies, and his blessing crown your work in the coming year. Your fellow-servant, EDW. N. KIRK.

After prayer by Rev. G. T. Ladd, of Wisconsin, the Association took a recess till seven o'clock this evening.

The Association met again at seven o'clock P.M., Rev. Dr. Patton, of Illinois, one of the Vice-Presidents, in the chair.

Addresses were made by Hon. J. V. Farwell, Rev. W. T. Richardson, U. S. Agent to the Menomonee Indians, Rev. E. P. Smith, Rev. H. A. Stimson, Rev. Dr. Magoun, Rev. W. A. Bartlett, and Hon. E. P. Weston, LL.D.

The hymn "We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time," was then sung, followed by further addresses by Pres. A. L. Chapin, D.D., of Beloit College, Gen. J. R. Lewis, of Georgia, Rev. C. M. Terry, of Minnesota, and Rev. R. B. Howard, of Illinois, and closing remarks by the presiding officer.

Rev. C. L. Woodworth, District Secretary for New-England, offered the following, which, after remarks by Secretary Strieby, was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Association are hereby offered to the First Presbyterian Church of Racine, for their Christian courtesy in opening their house of worship for the meeting of this Association; to Rev. Mr. Sawin, for his labor of love in taking the special care of the arrangements for this meeting; to the good families of Racine for the Christian hospitality they have so generously offered and provided; and to the choir connected with this church, for their service of song, in connection with our public worship in the house of the Lord.

After the doxology and the benediction by Pres. Magoun, the Association adjourned.

Value of one third of the agricultural scrip of Virginia, appropriated to Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, $85,000, which makes the total Income to the work of the Association, $134,999 93. There have also been pledges of nearly $50,000 made to Hampton, Berea, and Straight University, which will soon be paid.

Supplement to Treasurer's Report.

It will be seen that the balance against the Association has been reduced but about $2000. In accordance with counsel given at previous Annual Meetings, the Committee have not risked the prosperity of its work by an attempt to reduce this balance too rapidly, from its ordinary receipts. They did, however, contemplate its reduction to $50,000, which would have been done but for the falling off from its usual receipts, during the first three months of the year, of more than $20,000, owing, doubtless, to the fires in the Northwest, and their influence on the country generally. It was then too late to reapportion the estimates for the year.

It should be added that nearly $7000 contributed in Great Britain, in September, not being reported in season, are not included in the receipts for the year. If this had been added, the balance would be but $53,000.

As another encouraging feature, the Committee are permitted to report that during the year the accumulation of permanent capital, in some of the institutions commenced and fostered by the Association, is larger in amount than the present balance against it. There remain, almost untouched, lands in Iowa, valued at not less than $30,000, almost entirely set aside to meet the reported deficiency.

REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Twenty-Sixth Anniversary of the American Missionary Association calls us together to-day.

We render thanks to the great Head of the church for the health of officers, missionaries, and teachers, for unusual success in many parts of the field, and for the continued favor of the churches.

But death has done its work. We shall no more meet the earnest face of John P. Williston at these annual gatherings, nor will our treasury receive those large and frequent contributions which his modesty would only permit to be announced as from "An Old Friend." We have been surprised, as well as gratified, to find on examination that these unostentatious gifts in ten years amount to over $30,000! He has gone to his reward.

Two of our teachers have, during the year, been called hence to hear the Saviour say to them, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Miss Martha Johnson, of Peacham, Vt., was in the midst of her seventh year of Christian toil in the South when the messenger of death reached her. She died in Beaufort, S. C., Dec. 24th, 1871.

Miss E. J. Etheridge, of Princeton, Ill., who had left home and friends, and had spent several years in laborious and self-denying efforts for the elevation of the Freedmen, died at her post of duty at Tougaloo, Miss., in the assured hope of the Gospel.

Four hundred and eighty-nine Life-Members were added, and forty-one are reported as having died, during the year.

General Survey.

The work of the American Missionary Association has a wide range, yet in the main is a unity. It embraces the educational and religious elevation of the Freedmen, the Chinese, and the Indians; it reaches the West-Indies and West-Africa, Siam and the Sandwich Islands. Leaving out of account the two latter, which are nearly self-supporting, the rest are all united by closely affiliating lines; the Freedmen, the Chinese, and the Indians are alike poor, despised, and oppressed. A sympathy for the lowliest draws the Association to them. For each, like foes are to be resisted, like evils to be overcome, and like means employed. The colored people of America, the West-Indies, and West-Africa, are one race, and Providence seems to be pointing clearly to the emancipated slaves of America as a great means of evangelization in Africa. The early efforts of the Association for the slaves in America and those liberated in Jamaica, and its missions in Africa, seem to unify in it this apparently scattered work.

THE SOUTH.

Education.

The Association has planted seven chartered institutions, located in Hampton, Va., Berea, Ky., Nashville, Tenn., Atlanta, Ga., Talladega, Ala., Tougaloo, Miss., and New-Orleans, La. In all these the languages and mathematics are taught; in three of them freshmen classes are formed, and in the oldest, Berea, there are freshmen, sophomores, and juniors. These are the only institutions for colored people in the South, so far as we know, that have regular college classes. Including the Theological Department of Howard University at Washington, which is assisted by us, there are four theological classes under the care of the Association. Interspersed among these higher institutions are 19 normal and graded schools, in such prominent places as Wilmington, N. C., Charleston, S. C., Macon and Savannah, Ga., Montgomery and Selma, Ala., Memphis, Tenn., etc. And covering the ground still more are 65 common-schools, mainly under the care of our Northern teachers, together with the many hundreds of schools taught by male and female pupils from our institutions. Here is a range of educational instrumentalities meeting the wants of the most advanced scholars, and reaching to thousands upon thousands of the masses.

The total amount of real estate controlled by these institutions founded by the Association is not less than $600,000 in valuation.

Let us glance at some of the wide-spread Christian influences emanating from these schools:

1. They impress the white race with a sense of the reality of the work undertaken, as is evinced by the frequent coöperation of the public authorities with our schools for the blacks where public funds are available, and especially is this seen in the assignment of the scrip for 100,000 acres of land to the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute by the Legislature of Virginia, the lands being those granted by the national government to that State before the war, and left unappropriated till recently. The total grant by the general Government was 300,000 acres. The Virginia Legislature divided it into three equal parts—two for the white race and one for the blacks—and the latter portion was given to Hampton Institute!

2. These schools give to the colored race a like sense of permanency, and stimulate them to hopefulness and to self-sacrifice for education. The proof is found in the large and increasing sums of money paid by this people for tuition. Besides the payments to the schools taught by colored students, and to other institutions, the Freedmen have paid to the support of our schools $33,987.43 the past year!

3. Such Christian schools are the true levers for the elevation of the blacks. They give a Christian manhood, stimulate enlightened industry, economy, and thrift, they prepare competent business, professional, and public men—the leaders and inspirers of the masses—and they create the demand for an enlightened gospel and a pure Christian life.

4. This Christian elevation of the blacks is the only real basis of reconstruction in the South. Hostile peoples can not be pinned together by bayonets, nor bound in harmony by mere laws: mutual respect must be the basis. The colored race can win this respect of the whites only by knowledge and moral worth. The school and the church only can give these.

Moreover, nothing will so assure the South of the kindly feelings of the North toward it, as these unselfish Christian efforts for the good of the blacks, and thus of the whole South.

One great discouragement stands in the way—the need of the endowment and multiplication of these schools. To meet the growing wants of a rising race, these institutions must be more fully equipped in buildings, teachers, and apparatus. The number of the schools should be increased, for "what are these among so many" millions of people?

CHURCHES.

The churches under the care of the Association are a growth, and necessarily a slow one. The Freedmen present a warm soil, already occupied with church organizations, but often so ignorant and corrupt, both in preacher and people, as to be barely better than none. Our churches could only be planted where the Christian school has reared an intelligent membership. Fifty such churches are fostered by the Association, and are manifesting an increasingly rapid growth, materially and spiritually. Six new churches have been formed during the year, ten houses of worship have been either completed, nearly finished, or purchased, and revivals, more or less extensive, are reported in eleven localities. The new buildings have shown the liberality, enterprise, and taste of the people. One instance may be cited: The church at Marion, Ala., was organized the first Sabbath in January, 1870. In July, 1871, it determined to build. It then had thirty-three male members, all so poor as to have considerable difficulty in providing the means of support. The AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION gave a lot worth $100, and $860 in cash. Citizens of Marion contributed in money and work $245; friends at the North, $260. The members themselves did the work and wrung the rest out of their own poverty, giving in work and money $1462. In the eighteenth week after they entered the woods to cut the sills, the house, worth over $3000, was dedicated, and of the seven houses of worship in Marion—one of them costing four times as much—this is admitted to be the best, in construction and inside finish!

The revivals reported are marked by quietude, deep conviction of sin, and clear evidence of acceptance. These revivals are generally most extensive where our schools have been longest established, showing the connection of the Christian school with genuine church-work.

TRAINING OF MINISTERS.

Another and more mature development of our school and church work will be the training of a native ministry. Hitherto the unlettered churches have made no call for educated ministers. But the hour is coming, and the men! The churches need them, and the schools are preparing them. But it will be unwise to wait, in the majority of cases, for the full course of eight or nine years. The practice so successfully pursued by our Methodist and Baptist brethren, of employing the speaking talent of the student in preaching while he is studying—thus testing and improving his gifts—can have no fitter field of trial than among the colored people of the South. They are natural orators, and some can be made useful on a shorter course of study; others may be found desiring and repaying higher culture. The AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION proposes to make this trial, by selecting some of its most promising and pious students, not merely to speak in neighborhood meetings in term-time, but sending them out in vacations to preach instead of to teach. In some cases their pay will be nothing, in all cases, little; for they will be pioneers and church organizers among a people that are poor and not generally prepared to appreciate them. The Association will meet this difficulty by paying the student for his preaching services an amount equal to what he might earn if he spent the vacation in teaching, say from $100 to $150. The money will be well spent, for it will at the time be educating the young preacher and the people who hear him, and will afterward enable him to go on with his studies. But the Association can not divert funds for this purpose from the needy work already in hand. We must have additional means for this object. Will the churches or far-seeing individuals give us the additional sum of $5000 this year, that we may put in operation a new instrumentality so promising for this special field in the South?

Chinese in America.

The immigration of Chinese to America has undergone no material change, and we are continuing our Christian schools in California, in coöperation with the churches there, ready for enlargement when increased population shall demand it. An Advisory Board, a Superintendent, and seven teachers have charge of the work. We have increasing confidence in the wisdom of this effort. It is needed to assure the incoming Chinese that Christianity differs from the political chicanery, the caste-prejudice, and the mob violence with which they are too often greeted. It is needed as the drill that shall prepare the Chinese, as Christian soldiers, to return to their native land and conquer it for Christ.

The Indians.

The Association, in compliance with the humane policy of the government, has nominated four Indian agents, Rev. E. P. Smith, for the Chippewas in Minnesota; Major S. N. Clark, for the Chippewas in Wisconsin; Rev. W. T. Richardson, for the agency of Green Bay, Wis., and Edwin Eells, for the Skokomish agency, Washington Territory.

The tribes among which our laborers are employed number in all 13,760 persons. The success of the work thus far, as will be seen in the detailed report, is remarkably encouraging, and warrants the belief that this wandering race may yet be reclaimed and evangelized. But this can not be done without time and toil. The Anglo-Saxons were not Christianized in a day. The Indians are savages and heathen, and there will be troubles and outbreaks, but Christian perseverance will conquer.

It was felt by the religious bodies when they entered into coöperation with the government, that a thorough trial of its new policy was essential to ultimate success. As a Missionary Association we have nothing to do with party politics, but we must be permitted to hope that a full trial of this Christian policy will be granted under the administration that may be elected six days hence, whoever may be chosen as its head.

DETAILED SURVEY OF THE FIELD.

THE SOUTH.

EASTERN DEPARTMENT.

Rev. E. M. Cravath,

Field-Secretary.

During the war, the American Missionary Association followed closely upon the advancing lines of the Union armies with its ministers and teachers; but, in the nature of the case, its work was shaped to meet the demands of the hour and to conform to the uncertain issues of the pending struggle. With the destruction of slavery and the reëstablishment of the Union, the South became as never before an open missionary field, so that plans could be and were laid for systematic and thorough cultivation.

It may, therefore, be said, that this Annual Report is the record of the seventh year of the permanent occupation of the South by the American Missionary Association. With only two or three exceptions, its fifty churches have been organized within these seven years, and twenty houses of worship have been built or purchased. With the exception of some land at Berea, worth a few hundred dollars, all the property represented in our schools and colleges is the accumulation of these seven years.

The plans devised by the Association for the elevation of the colored people of the South having been thus fully inaugurated, the yearly growth is now in the line of work already begun, in the enlarging and strengthening of the forces already created, rather than, as in the previous years, in the developing of new lines of effort. Our mission is to uplift the people by the power of Christian education. So we have churches and schools of Christian learning. The work of the past year will be recorded under the following divisions, namely:

1st. Churches.
2d. Chartered Institutions.
3d. Graded Schools with Normal Departments.
4th. Common Schools.

I.—CHURCHES.

Church Extension.

Of the churches reported in the statistical tables, six have been organized the past year, one at Allemance, N. C., two near Savannah, Ga., one at Selma, Ala., and one at Goliad, Texas.

The church at Pomona, Tenn., which was organized in 1871 by Rev. H. S. Bennett of Fisk University, Nashville, and included in our report of a year ago, is now supplied by the Home Missionary Society, and, consequently, does not appear in our list.

Church Building.

The Plymouth church of Charleston, S. C., the First church of Chattanooga, Tenn., the First church of Marion, Ala., and the church of Corpus Christi, Texas, have completed their houses of worship, and have been enjoying their advantages for the most of the year.

The church near McMinnville, Tenn., the Second Congregational church at Memphis, Tenn., the Plymouth church at Montgomery, Ala., the church at Goliad, Texas, have built during the year and are now occupying their meeting-houses, although not yet completed.

A neat chapel is also nearly completed at Byron Station, near Macon, Ga., where a church will soon be organized. Two years ago, but three churches in the Eastern Department had meeting-houses; the others were worshiping in school-buildings. During the past two years, nine houses of worship have been built. In the Western Department, the church building at Corpus Christi and that of the Central church at New-Orleans, the first completed, and the latter purchased, during the past year, largely exceed in value all the church property previously held in that department. The number of church buildings ought to be doubled the coming year. Our churches for the South especially demand for their usefulness and success, suitable church buildings. Being almost the only churches of the Congregational order in that section of the country, they are looked upon by many as only temporary attachments to our educational work. They need separate and tasteful houses of worship as the best evidence that they are permanent and have a great mission to accomplish in behalf of the kingdom of Christ in the South.

Then, too, a wise policy demands that the churches under our care should be put in a condition for permanent growth and usefulness rather than that they be rapidly multiplied.

Revivals and the Spirit of the Churches.

It will be noticed by reference to the table of statistics that the increase in membership has been almost entirely by profession of faith. The ratio of this increase will be found, on comparison with the statistics of churches generally, to be encouragingly large. It is also worthy of note that the most extended revivals of the year have been in the churches earliest established and most closely identified with our schools. The Congregational Church at Atlanta was one of the first organized, and has had a settled pastor for several years. The revival there was marked in the conversion of the young people who had been under the influence of the church and school. The revival at Macon was also most satisfactory in the classes of persons reached. During a revival in Atlanta University, nearly every student, who had been for any length of time under the influence and teaching of the Institution, was converted. The few not brought into the Kingdom were mostly those who had not been in school long enough to have clear ideas on the subject of religion, but were yet mystified by the false notions in which they had been reared. These facts are greatly encouraging, and show the power of intelligent religious instruction as contrasted with the prevalent methods among the colored people.

But we give the accounts of the revivals, and the spirit of the churches in the words of those who have been connected with the work that has been done:

North-Carolina.

Rev. John Scott has had the charge of the churches at Beaufort and Allemance, in addition to his pastorate at Dudley. He writes:

Dudley.

"Much regret has been felt by the Church at our absence, so many Sabbaths, to preach in other places, but the people have never failed to have a meeting on the Sabbath and during the week. Our little Church now numbers about fifty. There have been seven conversions during the year. Earnest efforts are made, even by those in advanced age, to break established habits.

"Benevolence.—'God will protect his own work,' say they, 'and needs none of our aid;' but we have thrown light upon this subject and a contribution is not now so repulsive. The Church has just given $5 to the Seaman's Friend Society, and it now and then gives a like sum to the Bible Society, &c. Learning to save for such objects is new work, as the exercise of divers other virtues, but they are learning step by step. The Church has done a marked work in producing a friendly and Christian feeling among the white people. During the recent revival, the Methodist minister to the whites has preached to the colored people in our church as often as he could spare time from his other duties. His white brethren have done all they could by encouragement, prayers, and presence. Passions are better restrained, and promises better kept, than they were a year ago.

Allemance.

"This place is in Guilford county, where I have made several visits during the year, and organized a church of about 30 members. Since then about 15 have been added by profession.

"The congregation has met all winter in a ruinous building once used as a dwelling for those who made cannon for the Confederacy in a foundry near. Some come six miles nearly every Sabbath; and great credit is due to Miss E. W. Douglas, the missionary there, who has taught, held religious meetings, and lived in the same ruinous house. The work is successful, and the people must have a small church costing about $1000.

"They are west of the fine region of the State and are mostly without mechanical skill. Thus helpless, yet willing, they really deserve aid."

Miss E. W. Douglas, the devoted teacher who has held for two years the outpost at Allemance, writes of the newly-organized church thus:

"There are some in all our meetings who by their tears and prayers show that they are seeking the pardon of their sins. Our school prayer-meetings have been seasons of interest. I have enjoyed them more than the more public meetings because it is easier to have them orderly. It has always been thought here that a converted person must wait some months to 'get strong,' before taking any active part in meetings. I spoke against that idea last year, but did not seem to convince the people that that was not the best way.

"This winter I have had no occasion to say any thing about it, for the converts have gone to work immediately in the vineyard, and have thus sustained the meetings when the bad weather has kept the older Christians at home. Except in two or three instances, there has been nothing of the 'bodily exercise' by the 'mourners.'

"Sabbath before last two in our afternoon meeting, and four in the evening, rejoiced in the hope that their sins were forgiven. One more says Jesus met him on his way home that evening. He is a very intelligent man, and has done more for the school than any other one since I came here. He has been a constant attendant at Sabbath-school, but has resisted the strivings of the Spirit until quite recently. As he left me on that Sabbath eve he said, 'Pray for me; I am a lost man.' He had been praying for himself for nearly three weeks, and had repeatedly asked the prayers of others. That night he told me he was going home to set up the family altar, and to try to serve God, whether he gave him any joy in the work or not. He went a little way, and then knelt to pray, and he says: 'I can never tell any one the joy that came into my soul.' I think he will be a great help to the church here."

Charleston, S. C.

Rev. J. T. Ford sends the following notice of the dedication of the new house of worship, by the Plymouth Church, taken from one of the daily papers of the city:

"A large congregation assembled at the newly-erected house of worship, on Pitt street, yesterday, to participate in the dedicatory exercises. This building has been erected by the efforts of the colored people, of whom the congregation is mostly composed, with the assistance of large-hearted friends both in this city and the North. It is a beautiful little chapel, of wood, sixty-eight by thirty-six feet wide, with a Gothic roof and entrance. The interior is plainly but handsomely arranged.

"The house is lighted by a large reflector placed in the ceiling overhead, which is also a ventilator—a thing greatly needed in some other churches in this city. The whole cost of the house, as stated by the pastor yesterday, was $5459, of which $4584 had been already paid, and $275 more pledged, so that about $600 remained to be raised. The people showed their appreciation of the position by contributing $300, and by pledging about $300 more. This is a liberality beyond all praise, and argues well for the continued prosperity of the congregation.

"A portion of this amount was given by friends of the enterprise who were present, and who, catching the enthusiasm of the congregation, helped them with liberal hands; but the greater share was assumed by the congregation themselves. We understand that many friends of the pastor in the North have contributed liberally to the enterprise.

"The services yesterday were opened by the singing of an anthem, by a choir under the direction of P. B. Frost, and by invocation, followed by reading of the Scripture by Rev. E. J. Adams, and prayer by Rev. W. H. Brown.

"The dedicatory sermon was then preached by Rev. Henry Ward Fox, D.D. After the sermon and the collection, the house was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, by the pastor, Rev. J. T. Ford. The completion of this enterprise is highly creditable to our colored fellow-citizens; and, while we do not forget that their pastor has received much aid from Northern Christians, yet we believe that much of the credit of success is due to the efforts of the congregation themselves, and we desire to give them credit for it. It is an example as worthy of imitation as of praise."

Savannah, Ga.

One of the Savannah papers speaks as follows of Rev. Robert Carter, and his earnest and successful labors in and around the city. Brother Carter was formerly the slave of Howell Cobb, of Macon:

THE COLORED CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

"This church, under the pious and faithful ministrations of the Rev. Robert Carter, has greatly prospered, and if not the most populous, is among the best governed and most progressive in the city. In the short space of three years, it has been built up from almost nothing to a congregation of one hundred and thirty communicants in this city, twenty at the chapel on the canal, and thirty on the Ogeechee. Parson Carter has also established two day-schools and a night-school in that benighted portion of his parish, and we are glad to hear is doing much good in enlightening and Christianizing the colored population. We have long known him as an intelligent and devoted Christian and excellent man. His great aim is to do good and promote peace, and in this noble work we hope to see him abundantly encouraged by the good-will and substantia aid of all our citizens.

"The church is now engaged in the task of raising money to pay a small balance due on their organ, and we trust all who may be called on will lend a helping hand, be it little or much."

Macon, Ga.

Rev. Mr. Rogers gives the following account of the results of the year in his church:

"Never before has our work in Macon been so abundantly prospered. We can already rejoice over thirty new-born souls, and still the work goes on. These blessings have not come unsought. Our little band of teachers, and our church, in perfect sympathy with each other, for months have prayed for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The 'Week of Prayer' was faithfully observed. The feeling on the part of many praying ones, since that date, is best expressed in the words of wrestling Jacob: 'I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.'

"Our meetings have been largely attended, especially during the last two weeks. The anxious-seats have been thronged with inquirers. Some of the most wicked young men of the city have been converted in these meetings. I have long felt that nothing but grace could melt those hard hearts; and now grace has done it.

"Greater distress for sin I have never witnessed than some of the inquirers have manifested. One young woman on whom I called, just before her conversion, said she had not tasted food or wet her lips for twenty-four hours.

"A most remarkable case of conviction occurred in the school. A young woman was brought into such distress during morning devotions that her case attracted the attention of the whole school. For her, study was impossible. She said she 'didn't know what was the matter with her.' She absented herself from school; and when, after a lapse of days, she came again, her face shone like the light. She could hardly be kept from going around among the scholars during the morning session, to tell what Jesus had done for her. Her expressions of attachment to Jesus were almost passionate.

"A most touching case has been that of an old man, seventy-six years of age, who has bowed night after night in the midst of young people, and now his testimony is clear: 'I have been changed from nature to grace.'

"The effect of this revival in the restoration of backsliders has been quite marked. Two or three persons who have been under the discipline of our church seem newly converted.

"Yesterday was a happy day for us. Thirteen of the converts were received into our church, eight of whom were young men, from sixteen to twenty-two years of age. Members of other churches came to witness their reception. Some of the converts are waiting till the next communion season before joining our church, and three or four of them, at the earnest solicitation of friends, have joined other churches.

"I can not be sufficiently grateful for the cordial cooperation and prayerful effort of the teachers of Lewis High School. They are always present at the meetings, and their personal labor has been unremitting. Pastors of other churches have preached for me as often as I have needed help, and have shown a sympathy in the work that has been quite refreshing.

"The difficulty of revival labors among this people, as all workers in this field can testify, is greatly increased by the erroneous ideas which the colored people entertain in regard to conversion.

"The old people often tell the most extravagant stories of the sights which they saw, and the voices they heard, when they were converted. Many of the young believe they must see and hear likewise before they can be converted. To show them the simple way of trust in Jesus is often no easy thing. One by one the converts have learned to trust; and my prayer is that a healthy conversion may be followed by a holy life."

Atlanta, Ga.

Of the revival in Atlanta we have the following reports:

"ATLANTA UNIVERSITY, GA., April 12, 1872.

"During the whole of our history as a school, now nearly three years, there has been a good degree of religious interest, so that at the end of each year we have been able to count many who, during the year, have become Christians; but never before have we been blessed as during the past few weeks.

"The Spirit's power has been manifest more than usual, especially in the prayer-meetings.

"When the news came of the glorious work in Macon, and some of our pupils heard that many of their former mates had become Christians, one and another arose, expressed determination to serve Christ, and asked our prayers. This opened the way for others who had been waiting only for some one to begin, and we had a most blessed meeting. There was conviction of sin and sorrow for it, inexpressible; there were prayers that wrestled with God; there was joy unspeakable for forgiven sin.

"Another evening, one of the girls, in a quiet but most impressive manner, said: 'My friends, no one of us is ashamed to have a good lesson, or to stand at the head of our class; no amount of ridicule on that account would trouble us. How is it then that we are ashamed to stand up for Christ and to speak for him, which is the noblest act one can perform?'

"A young man who had begun the Christian life last year, but who had become discouraged by difficulties at home during the summer, said to us: 'When I returned this year I determined to attend to my studies and have nothing to do with religion. I tried to occupy my mind with other things, and to drown my feelings with temporal pleasures, for the education of the colored youth of the South, to be expended under the direction of the American Missionary Association.

We rejoice in the flood of beneficent influence which will flow through all the years from this noble source.

We gratefully accept the trust put upon us, promising to use it as a stimulus for increased activity on the part of the Christian Church, and we offer our prayer to the Divine Father, that he may abundantly bless the remaining years of our honored friend with the grace of His Spirit and the joy that follows the accomplishment of the desires of a heart burdened with the love of our suffering and ignorant fellow men.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Thomas A. Emerson, of Clinton, Conn.

The Association then adjourned to the chapel.

Recess was then taken to 7.30 P. M.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The Association was called to order at 7:30 P. M., and prayer was offered by Rev. Thomas Laurie, D.D., of Providence.

The minutes for the day were read and approved, and the Secretary was authorized to complete them at the close of this service and to publish them under the direction of the Executive Committee.

Rev. David O. Mears, D.D., of Massachusetts, addressed the Association, and was followed by Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D.D., of New York, and the closing address was made by the President.

The following vote of thanks was unanimously passed after appropriate remarks by District Secretary C. J. Ryder.

We approach the conclusion of this Annual Convention of the American Missionary Association with grateful hearts for all the way by which God has led it from the day when it crossed the brook with its staff of testimony to this time of extended influence and usefulness, with humble rejoicing both in the intellectual and spiritual fellowship of this meeting, and also with a special sense of responsibility under the burden of obligation which God has placed upon us by this unprecedented enlargement of our stewardship. We wish to express our devout thanksgiving for the grace of hospitality which has been bestowed in such abounding measure upon the churches of Christ and the good people of this city of Providence, with whose name in its divine significance we are to associate this peculiarly impressive anniversary.

We recall the delightful welcome which greeted us at the opening of these services, only to be impressed with the assurance that this Union Congregational Society and the other churches of the city were not at all forgetful to "entertain strangers." Their love indeed, made us at once to feel at home in their households, and in the midst of their delightful families.

Resolved, That to the local committees, especially the indefatigable Secretary, to the pastors of all the churches, to the choir and leaders of the services of song in the house of the Lord, to the local and metropolitan press for its generous reporting of these meetings to the large congregation outside by its multiform and winged processes, and to the lines of transportation which have made us the recipients of their courtesy, we express our great indebtedness with sincere thanks.

And so, in behalf of the members, officers and missionaries and friends of this great Association, we say once more: We thank you for your generous entertainment and crave for you the recompense for such ministering in the name of our Divine Master.

Rev. J. H. McIlvaine, D.D., of Providence, pastor of the church, responded.

The Doxology was then sung, and, after the benediction by the President, the Association adjourned.

Henry A. Hazen, Secretary.
Frank E. Jenkins, Ass't Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

REPORT ON EDUCATIONAL WORK.

BY REV. LEWELLYN PRATT, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The report of the Educational Work of this Association shows steady advance, in spite of straitened means. New responsibilities have been assumed in consequence of gifts of school buildings, and of the appeals from the people themselves, taxing—beyond the receipts from the churches—the resources of the Association.

An important feature of the Educational Work is represented in the twenty Normal Schools, from which have gone out seven thousand young men and women now engaged in teaching at the South. It is probable that nearly half a million of scholars have been under their care. These, together with the Normal Departments in our chartered institutions, Talladega College, Atlanta University, Straight University Tillotson Institute, Tougaloo University and Fisk University, (with Hampton Institute, Berea College and Howard University, formerly under the care of the Association) are doing a great work in training teachers, as well as leaders in industrial pursuits and in the professions of the law and the ministry.

In all these, the fact, now so generally received in mission work, is fully recognized, that the leaders and teachers of a people must be found among themselves. They have abundantly proved their eagerness for education, their capacity for scholarship and leadership, and their ability to meet the problems resting upon the future of their race and of the nation. This is true, also, of the schools among the Indians and the Chinese.

Still, the work done by the Society and by all other agencies—State and denominational—has not kept pace with the growth of population, and official statistics in some portions of the South show that the percentage of illiteracy is steadily increasing. In Louisiana, for instance, in the last eight years—i. e., from 1880 to 1888—the number of illiterate voters increased from 102,932 to 126,988, changing the relative percentage from 52.3 per cent. who could read and write, and 47.7 per cent. who could not read and write—in 1880—to 49.2 per cent. who can read and write and 50.8 per cent. who cannot read and write in 1888. During that period, of the new white voters a majority were illiterate (7,502 : 7,609); of the new negro voters ten out of eleven were illiterate (1,588 : 16,387). Facts such as these call for great enlargement in the direction of common school education, and the number of teachers; make imperative demands upon State Governments; and lead many to appeal to the National Government for relief. They certainly justify the efforts of this Association and necessitate a great increase of the yearly contributions from churches and individuals. Measures should be taken to supplant the notion that by moderate annual contributions to ordinary schools for a few years the great task can be accomplished of lifting up a race that had been held in bondage for centuries, that started in its career of freedom in absolute destitution and that pursues its course here under many disabilities; and preparing liberators, missionaries, guides and saviours for the Dark Continent.

At the same time, it is the belief of your committee that the pressing need of the hour is the fuller development of the leading institutions already established and larger equipment for the arduous work set before the American people in our Southern States. For this end, steps should be taken towards securing their permanent endowment.

While in every way the general work of reaching the masses and saving them from their illiteracy is to be pressed, the time has come to place these leading schools upon a firmer foundation and to make them more conspicuous as centres. For this they need to be amply endowed and maintained with steadily advancing educational courses, suited to giving those who are to become the leaders of a great people a broad and comprehensive education, abreast with the best in the times in which they are to do their work.

It is time to take comprehensive views and to plan for years to come. Neither this generation nor the next is to see the end of the special work to be done to fit the freedmen successfully to meet the conditions of their freedom. It has required centuries to qualify the Anglo-Saxon people for freedom; and we must expect that generation after generation will pass, even with the benefits of our experiments, experience and methods, before this people, upon whom the duties of free men have been thrust, can successfully discharge them. There is call for great patience, for far-reaching plans, for large beneficence. This question of the training of these eight millions of people is one of the most difficult set before the American people, and is worthy of the best thought of statesmen, patriots, philanthropists and Christians.

For our encouragement is the ardor of the people themselves; their readiness to receive an education; their position in a republic now far advanced; the progress already made; the growing interest in the States where they are most numerous to provide for them the means of a common school education; the army of teachers already in the field.

Believing in a wise Providence over-ruling the present and the future, we regard the problems before us, though great, not insoluble to faithful, wise and patient Christian effort along the lines upon which this Association has wrought.

We commend the wisdom and the foresight of this Association in the planting of these institutions of learning in favorable positions, its judicious economy in their management and its great skill in steadily advancing their scope and capability with insufficient resources and equipment. Upon these foundations the work should be carried on, and large and permanent universities should be reared; and we commend these to the Christian people for increased annual gifts and larger permanent endowments that the great undertaking fail not.

REPORT ON CHURCH WORK.

BY REV. DAVID GREGG, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The report of your Executive Committee on church work submitted for our review is very brief. There is a statement or two and a few figures. It puts things in the very best light, and uses figures in the most telling way. Its very brevity should act as a call to the churches for more means, and more men, and more prayer, and more enterprise. If the churches had done more there would have been more to tabulate.

The report reads: Four new churches organized; 972 added to Christian fellowship; 2 church edifices built; 1 church edifice enlarged; 2 parsonages built; a one-year-old church the centre of four Sunday-schools filled with scholars who never before attended religious instruction, and ten churches blessed with a revival of religion.

Four new churches organized! Only four? And yet the territory awaiting churches holds twelve States, and each State is an empire. Only four? And yet the darkest spot in the republic is crying for the light of the Gospel. Only four? And yet three-fourths of the illiteracy of the whole nation must be grappled with. Four new churches versus ten millions of immortal souls! What are these among so many? This is the question which the report of the American Missionary Association for 1888 sends through the length and breadth of American Congregationalism.

To keep us in cheer the Executive Committee puts these facts by the side of the four new churches:

First—"In each school" (and there are seventy-six schools) "we have an incipient church." This predicts a golden future. "Each school is a torch of Christ in a dark place." This means advancing illumination.

Second—There are one hundred and thirty-two old churches fully organized and completely vitalized. All of these are centred at strategic points.

Third—There is a living army of 8,452 adults, and of 17,114 children carrying the banner of the Lord. These give themselves, and give their substance, to the cause of Christ, and to the good of their fellowmen, in a way worthy of emulation.

Fourth—These churches and this army are under, and are led by pastors who are for the most part the children of this Association. This means thorough equipment, and discipline, and effectiveness, and aggressive work.

When we look at what has been done in the line of church work in our vast field, and compare it with our limited resources, we are satisfied and speak the praises of the noble men and women in the field and in the office. We have garnered fruit grandly proportionated to the planting. But when we look at the work which has been done and contrast it with what remains to be done, we are far from being satisfied. Instinctively we are impelled to repeat the call of the prophet in the hearing of the Church of Christ: "Arise, shine, for thy light has come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Proportioning the means used to the products reaped, we look forward with hope, expecting a future that shall correspond with the promises of God. The statistics in this department of the Association's labors may look like "Holy Trifles;" and comparatively they are "Holy Trifles;" but so is the "handful of corn" in the Messianic psalm, which depicts the future growth of Christendom. The things tabulated in these statistics are the "handful of corn" in our Southland, but as we contemplate them, we may use the old, old song of the church and sing ourselves into an ecstasy: "There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like the cedars on Lebanon; and they of the city shall flourish like the grass of the earth. His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him and all nations shall call him blessed. Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and amen."

REPORT ON MOUNTAIN WORK.

BY REV. G. S. BURROUGHS, CHAIRMAN.

Your committee, to whom those portions of the General Survey relating to the work of the Association among the mountain whites has been referred, are strongly convinced that this work is one of great and growing importance. We rejoice in the evidence that such is also the conviction of the management of the Association.

The territory occupied by these mountain people, consisting of between three and four hundred counties, covers an area twice the size of New England. Its population is equal to that of New England, excepting Massachusetts. Its resources, in mineral deposits and in valuable timber, are varied and rich. It is being rapidly opened up to trade, and thus indirectly to civilization. Its inhabitants are ready to welcome outside influences, and they are in large degree susceptible of those that are good. These facts, we believe, cannot receive too careful attention.

We are deeply impressed with the great destitution of these people as regards intellectual, moral and spiritual things. Poor in the extreme as far as their physical wants are concerned, they are still poorer in reference to the wants of their minds and souls.

So great is their poverty in these particulars, that, in large measure, they do not, until approached in Christian kindness, realize it. They are without education, and without true religion; without schools and without churches. Practically, they do not know the Sabbath; they are in utter want and ignorance of those ordinary means of grace which are as familiar to us as the sunshine and the rain. The violence and social confusion which are to be expected under these circumstances are prevalent.

Your committee rejoice that the day of small things, in our work in this field, is already becoming the day of larger things, with a wide outlook into a permanent and brighter future. In two normal schools, two academies, five common schools and twenty churches the few loaves and fishes seem to be at hand. "But what are they among so many?" We are grateful for the enlargement which the past year has disclosed, for the new church and school building, and the rapidly advancing dormitory and boarding hall at Pleasant Hill, Tenn., and for the slightly increased accommodations in the Grand View Normal Institute, but we see clearly that enlargement only necessitates greater enlargement. The meagreness of the supply renders the destitution more manifest. The little which has been done, and well done, only gives louder voice to the demand to do.

One of the most encouraging features of the work, and one which we believe should be particularly emphasized, is the possibility of its comparatively speedy self-support, if it be pushed forward rapidly. It is a work which must be done to-day, and it can be done because these people, even in their poverty, will do their part. This is abundantly shown, not only by their disposition regarding it, but also by their deeds in its behalf.

The influence of the work among the mountain whites upon the general Southern work of the Association should be carefully recognized. Here is a vantage point which can be carried, and which must be carried for the success of our great campaign in the South. To neglect this present duty is to be culpable regarding the future of the Association's activity. Problems of caste and questions bound up with them, can, at least in part, be settled in this field. Those needed concrete illustrations, which will tend most powerfully toward their general settlement, can here be furnished. We do not believe that the conquest of the West is of more importance to our Home Mission work than is the conquest of these Southern highlands to that of the A. M. A. It is our opinion, therefore, that there should be in this department steady and rapid advance, and that it should no longer be tided along.

We fear that the facts regarding the peculiar character of this mountain work are not sufficiently known, and that its bearing upon the general work of the Association is not adequately realized.

We feel that a special examination of this field may wisely be commended to those who would devise liberal things with a view to special gifts for institutions of learning. The church and the school, the missionary and the teacher must go together into this territory. Who will place a Christian college among the mountain whites?

We give thanks for the spared life of a trusty and consecrated worker in this field. With the earnest prayer for means to send and employ them, let there be joined the petition for many workers possessed of a like spirit of earnestness and fidelity.

REPORT ON INDIAN WORK.

BY S. B. CAPEN, ESQ., CHAIRMAN.

It is not the intention of your committee to spend more than a moment of the time allotted to it in speaking of the details of the work of this Association among the Indian tribes.

It is a pleasure to note in the Executive Committee's report that it is in the fullest sympathy with the increased and increasing interest in the solution of our Indian problem. It has more scholars under its care than ever before, and is steadily increasing its buildings and its facilities for doing its work. The four new stations provided for at the Northfield gathering call especially for our gratitude. But why enlarge upon these particulars?

The work of this Association has been spread before the Christian world in so many reports that all know of its great success. Its preachers and teachers, who have given their lives to this work with such courage and devotion, are also known, and it only needs to be said in a word, that the year that has closed and whose review is now being taken, has been one of great blessing and power. We approve of what it has done and we commend it for the future without reserve.

We would rather occupy our time, if we may, in looking at this whole Indian question, hoping that we may arouse a more universal interest, and cause, thereby, to flow into the treasury of this Society the funds which shall enable it to enlarge and broaden its work and hasten the complete Christianizing of our Indian tribes.

For let it be said while I have your freshest attention, that it is the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, and not education or civilization, that is to solve this problem; and all I have to say is to lead up to this thought. Wherever modern civilization without religion has touched the barbarian it has been to curse him.

The blood of every American ought to tingle at the thought of the foul stain upon our national honor because of the treatment the Indian has received.

General Sherman has told us that we have made more than one thousand treaties with him, but the United States Government has never kept one of these treaties, if there was anything to be made by breaking it; and the Indian has never broken one, unless he has first had an excuse in some cruel wrong from the white man. No wonder that the Sioux have hesitated to sign their treaty. Do you not blush at one of the reasons for this hesitation? Because they doubt whether we can be trusted. This boasted American Republic is to them a nation of liars.

I am glad to speak for these men who have been so cruelly wronged. Here before we had any rights, they have been steadily driven back before our civilization as it has advanced from the Atlantic and Pacific shores. While our ears have ever been open to the cry of distress the world over, the silent Indian moan has passed, too often unheeded. We have made him a prisoner upon the reservation, and when we have wanted his land we have taken it and put him on some we did not want just then. His appeal, when in suffering and distress, has been stifled by those who can make the most money out of him as he is; and if hungry and in desperation he leaves his reservation, we shoot him. We have put him in the control of an agent, whose authority is as absolute as the Czar's. We have kept from him the motive to be different and he has been literally a man without a country and without a hope. Multitudes of people say, "Oh, yes, the Indian has been wronged," but it makes very little impression upon them. It is much the same feeling that the worldly man has who acknowledges, in a general way, that he is a sinner, but it does not touch him sufficiently to lead him to act. Will you bear with me in giving some facts, with the hope that all may feel that this is not a merely sentimental, indefinite sort of a subject for philanthropists and "cranks," and a few women, but one in which each of us has some personal responsibility. He is your brother and mine, in need, and we owe him a duty. Some years ago Bishop Whipple went to Washington pleading in vain for the Indians in Minnesota. After some days' delay the Secretary of War said to a friend, "What does the Bishop want? If he comes to tell us that our Indian system is a sink of iniquity, tell him we all know it. Tell him also—and this is why I recall this fact, more true than when it was first spoken—tell him also that the United States never cures a wrong until the people demand it; and when the hearts of the people are reached the Indian will be saved." Then let us try to arouse the people to demand it.

And I beg you to notice, that the wrongs are not of the past, but of the present. Those who say otherwise have either not examined the facts or else they are deceived. While there has been much progress made since General Grant's administration, the machinery of our Indian affairs in its last analysis seems to be largely yet a scheme to plunder the Indian at every point. Its mechanism is so complicated that there are comparatively few who understand the wrong, and these seem almost powerless. While there are many men in the Government employ of the best intentions, there is always a "wicked partner" who contrives, somehow, to rob the Indian.

He is wronged: (1) In his person. Let me illustrate. Go with me to Nebraska. An Indian, upon one of our reservations, injured his knee slightly. There was a physician who was paid a good salary by the Government, but when asked to visit this man he refused to go. The poor sufferer grew worse and worse, till the limb became rotten and decayed; his cries could be heard far and near in the still air, yet the physician heeded not. A friend was asked to take a hatchet and chop off the limb. In agony he died, the physician never having once visited him. That was a brother of yours in America. A short time ago, in Southern California, lived an Indian in comfort, upon a lot of ten acres upon which he had paid taxes for years. The land about him was sold, but no mention was made of his lot, as his lawyers told him it was not necessary and the purchasers promised he should never be disturbed. Within a few months, however, a suit was brought for his ejectment, and in the midst of the rainy season, this old man of 80, his wife and another woman of nearly the same age, were put out of their home. They were thrust with great cruelty into a wagon, left by the roadside without shelter and without any food, except parched corn, for eight days. The wife died of pneumonia, and the old man is a homeless wanderer. Why this cruelty? Because there was a spring of water on his land which the white man wanted. This was in America.

2. In his property. Let me illustrate again. In North Dakota one of the tribes asked that they might have some barns. The request was granted: the lumber, valued at $3,000, was bought in Minneapolis, and the freight charges, which ought to be about $1,500, were $23,000. A little clerk in Washington that belongs to the "ring" "fixed it" in this way.

In the Indian Territory an Indian worked hard all summer, and in the fall carried his grain to market, delivered it to an elevator, and than the owner turned around and refused to pay him, and the poor man had to go home without one cent. It was the worst kind of robbery. If that man had been a German, or Swede, or a howling Anarchist of any nation under the heavens, we would have protected him, but an Indian has no rights in America.

A man who has been the private clerk of one of our highest Government officials was appointed an Indian Agent. The Indians on that reservation were having their lumber taken from them at a price much less than its value, and notwithstanding their protests, it went on, the Agent refusing to listen. They complained then at Washington, and the Government appointed one of the most corrupt of men as an inspector. When he visited the reservation he asked for the witnesses at once. They asked for a reasonable time to get them together. This was refused and they asked for two days, and when this was denied they asked for one. In their dilemma and haste they got one Indian near-by to testify. The Agent himself broke down this man's testimony, because he had been at fault two or three years before, in a way which did not affect, in the slightest degree, his statement now, and the inspector at once returned to Washington and decided against the Indians! It was a fraud and a farce.

3. In the helpless condition in which we have left him, he has a new wrong now, because when he votes he is of political importance. If you will read "Lend A Hand," you will find an illustration where the Indians in North Carolina had become citizens and had votes, and because those votes were cast against the powers that be, they were willing to go all lengths, even to closing the schools, in order to accomplish their purposes.

And this is to be more and more a vital question, as more and more they are becoming citizens. We talk about "dirty politics!" Is it not a proper name, when, in order to get votes, schools are to be closed and children left in ignorance?

4. There is no earnestness of purpose in a majority of the Government officials to protect him from wrong. To show exactly what I mean; recently, in Southern California a lot of land grabbers took from the Indians their land. When private individuals ascertained the facts, complaint was made and an order was issued for their removal. The time fixed was March 1st. On July 1st inquiry was made, and the agent said the order had been carried out. But individual examination showed the settlers to be there still, and five saloons open in defiance of law.

In a similar way recently, the representative of one of our philanthropic societies had arrested an agent who had committed a crime. It was so clear a case that he was found guilty at once. Let us hear this travesty of justice. The law required a fine and imprisonment both. The fine was placed by the Judge at twenty-five cents, which the Judge paid himself. The term of the imprisonment he made one day, and told the Sheriff to allow the jail, in this case, to be the agent's own comfortable home. Shall we be obliged to constitute Law and Order Leagues to see that the laws of the United States are executed?

This is the awful background as the starting point for this discussion. Some people question whether or not there is a personal devil. If any man would study the Indian question he would be convinced there was not one only, but a whole legion of them.

But, friends, so long as these are facts, there is an Indian question, and there is going to be one until these things are settled. There is nothing ever settled in this world till it is settled right. In the progress that has been made in opening up the possibility to the Indian, of civil rights, we may be inclined to relax our efforts in his behalf. The passage of the Dawes Land in Severalty Bill was, indeed, a great day for the Indian. It opens the door by which he can have a home on land of his own and become a citizen, with all the privileges thereof. Here, at last, is solid ground upon which he can stand. But we must not forget that that bill is but the commencement of what is needed. He is but a child with new rights truly, but in his ignorance he does not know what they are. He is surrounded by enemies as before. While he has the law and the courts, the nearest Judge may be one hundred to three hundred miles away. He must be brought more under the care of the judiciary.

The Indian Bureau, as at present constituted, cannot do for him what he needs. This is a part of the political machine, and its appointees are selected because they have done good service as ward politicians. It has been well said that such a Bureau is no more fitted to lead these people aright than Pharaoh was to lead the Israelites out of their house of bondage.

To show how even some good men fail to comprehend the situation is evidenced by the proposed "Morgan Bill," which in its practical working would give the Indian Agent—already a despot—even more power than before. By that bill he is made chief Judge, with two Indians as associate Judges; and the agent is given power to select the jurors when a jury is demanded. What a travesty of justice, to make the present agent a judge and give him power to select the jury. With such a bill the friend of the Indian may well say: Oh Lord, how long! We must demand that all Indians, whether on the reservations or not, shall be given full protection of righteous laws, and that the tyrannical methods of the past shall forever cease.

But, with the solid ground of the Dawes bill beneath, and the further protection of the judiciary certain to be given at no distant day, he needs, more than all else besides, the Christian school and the Christian church. He now has "Land." If we are earnes and persistent he will soon have "Law." But, most of all, does he need "Light," and that light which is from above. All the laws we may enact the next hundred years will not change the character of a single Indian. To a considerable extent he is a superstitious pagan still. He needs Jesus Christ. He needs to learn the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. As it is a part of the Indian man's religious belief that his god does not want him to work and he will be punished if he does, it is especially necessary to touch his religious nature first. When he accepts the Christian's God, then he will be ready to go to work for himself. The taking up of the hoe and the spade is his first confession of faith. What has already been accomplished through the new laws giving him his civil rights, puts an added responsibility upon the church. It is the Indian's last chance. Our further neglect is his certain death. Shall we leave him with his "Land and Law" without God? Do we realize that we have lived with these original owners of our soil for more than two and one-half centuries, and yet, to-day, there are sixty tribes who have no knowledge of Jesus the Christ? Shall we allow longer such a stain? I know well the pressure of various claims in religious work at home and abroad, but in the light of what has been said, is not the duty of Christianizing the Indians a debt of honor, a "preferred claim," which should take precedence over others? In this way only can we partially atone for our "century of dishonor."

The history of the past few months, and the famous order with regard to the use of the vernacular, ought to arouse the church to new efforts. The probable instigators of it are known to friends of the Indian, and it shows the necessity of increased activity on our part. The order was despotism itself, and would have done credit to a Russian Czar. It was a blow aimed at the Indian's highest religious interests, and the President of the United States, instead of explaining and translating it, should have recalled it as an act unworthy of Christian civilization in the nineteenth century. Everything is still done to hamper the Protestant missionary work. The A. M. A. has a theological school, and the Government allows (?) it to teach a theological class; but, when the students are chosen and ready to come, the Government agents prohibit their coming. We have a young man who has been waiting for a year for a permit from Washington. The same obstructive policy meets us when we try to get pupils under the Government school contracts. And even after we have obtained the order from the Government to procure the pupils from a given agency, the Government will, at the same time, instruct the Agent to let no pupils go till the Government schools are full. In this way the Christian Indian parent has taken from him the right to send his child where he desires, for the Government stops his rations and annuities if he refuses to send to the Government school. The vote recently passed at the General Association of Congregational Churches in South Dakota ought to be taken up and echoed through the land, protesting against the assumption, by the Administration, of the right to control our missionary operations, dictating what pupils may attend our schools, or what language may be used in them.

In conclusion, let us gird ourselves anew for the struggle that is before us, to fight the enemies of Protestant Christianity, entrenched as they are in our Government, the Indian ring, the cattle kings, the land grabbers and the thousands whose selfish interest it is to keep the Indian ignorant. This is no holiday affair; it means earnest, determined work. We must give the Indian the Gospel of the Son of God as his only safeguard for the life that now is as well as that which is to come. Civilization, education alone can never lift the Indian to his true position. You may take a rough block of marble and chisel it never so skillfully into some matchless human form, and it is marble still, cold and lifeless. Take the rude Indian and educate him, and he is still an Indian. He must be quickened by the breath of the Almighty before he will live. It is religion alone which can lead him to the truest manhood, which will quicken his slumbering intellectual faculties and prevent him from being an easy prey to the selfishness and sinfulness of men. Let us support this society in its grand work, by our money, our sympathy and our prayers. Let us join in the fight, and by-and-by we will share in the triumph. Dr. Strieby, you can remember just before this society was formed, that it was a disgrace to be an abolitionist. It is a glory now. The day is not far distant, yea, its light is already breaking in the western sky, when it will be considered equally glorious to have helped save our Indian brother, by leading him back again to God. And while we are doing it, and as a means to this end, we must try to get this Indian ring by the throat and strangle its life. It has lived long enough on the blood of the Indian; let it die, and we will never say "the Lord have mercy on its soul," for it has none. If you have never been interested in the matter before, begin to-day; if you have never helped before, help now. Get in somewhere, get in quick, get in all over; do not stand around the edges looking on and criticising others; be sure you get your pocket book open, and send the Treasurer of the Association double what you did last year; do something, do anything. We have been playing at missions long enough. With our great wealth it is a disgrace that this work was not completed long ago. With an aroused and awakened Church the whole problem will be solved, for there will be no more Indians, but only brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus.

Let us fear nothing, God is with us and we shall triumph.
"Truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own."

REPORT ON CHINESE WORK.

BY REV. SIMEON GILBERT, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

1. Is it worth while to attempt Christian missions among the Chinese in our own country?
2. If so, of how much importance is it?
3. Who should do it?
4. If anything is to be done by us, how much should be done?
5. And is there any case of urgency about it?

To the first question we answer: Yes, verily! It is worth while. There is no form of Christian missions within the circuits of the earth more worthy of being done, and of being done with all possible alacrity and vigor, than this. The American Missionary Association is exactly the Society to do it. It is the glory of this Society to hasten to the rescue of the despised and the exceptional races and classes in our own land. It has already done grand things toward the evangelization of the Chinese among us. It has set an example, most conspicuous in the eyes of all the people, of definitely planning to make known to this peculiar people the Gospel of Redemption; a Gospel whose supreme peculiarity it is, that it is fitted to meet the inmost necessities of all men, of all men alike.

The success in winning the disciples of Confucius to the cross and the grace of Christ has been signal enough to show how completely practicable the undertaking is.

If it were not worth while to press our missionary effort among the Chinese right here in America, it would be absurd to talk of missionary effort among the Chinese in China. The importance of this work cannot be measured by its bulk. Nor is it to be estimated by any census of countable immediate results. It is a kind of work, which, according as it is done, or left undone; or as it is done with slack and nerveless hand or with vim and vigor, will test the very character of our churches; will touch the conscience and well-being of the nation; and will, without a doubt, have vital and decisive connection with the future of that most populous empire on the globe.

There is China, with its four hundred million souls, subject to a single sovereign—a heathen empire. Here is America, Christian America; the foremost republic among the nations, and soon to be the leading power among the Governments of the earth. It holds already the position of moral leadership in the far East. What shall be done with this leadership? Right here in our midst are some two hundred thousand representatives of that empire, every one of whom with hardly an exception hopes some time to return to his native Orient. What will the Christianity of America do for them?

There is an unmistakable providence of God in the presence, in the country, at such a time as this, of so many representatives of the great empire. Such providences are to be reverently heeded. They are as the banners of the Almighty, meant to lead forth His loyal people to the gracious conquest of the world. As for ourselves, what are we disposed to do about it?

This conquest of the world for Christ is not to be achieved by hap-hazard dashes. There is need of transcendent wisdom in the strategic methods of the campaign. We have not wisdom enough for this except as we have the wisdom to note which way the manifest hand of God is pointing for us. Then is the time for assurance, for obedience, and for enthusiasm in the fullest meaning of the term.

A few thousand Chinamen are here. The Chinese Empire is open to us—and more too! To doubt the practicability of the Christianization of the Chinese would be treason to the Gospel of Christ; would be blindness to the facts of Christian history, as well as to the foreshadowings of prophecy.

The success already in this department of the work of the American Missionary Association has been signal enough to amount to a demonstration. If suitably reinforced and pushed it might presently be made vastly greater than it has as yet been.

It is the glory of this Society to do precisely this kind of work. All its history and traditions, all the confidences and affection of the people in our churches toward it, favor the most resolute pushing forward of what has been undertaken.

The reactionary effect of this peculiar form of home-foreign mission work upon the Christian character and culture of our own people is of importance; of too much importance for it to be either safe or wise for us to neglect it. Suppose this work were to be neglected, this duty ignored, this clear providential summons slighted, what a mockery it would be of our professed zeal for foreign missions. The spectacle of what the Society is doing for the Chinese, especially of what it ought to have the power and the commission given it to do, isfitted to be peculiarly impressive, as an object lesson, to the nation. The radical character of a nation comes out in no other way so distinctively, as in the way it treats its weakest and most helpless subjects.

A grand part of the good done by the American Missionary Association has been in its influence, first on the conscience of the churches, and then, through this, on the moral sense and the moral sentiments of the nation itself. This has been the case as regards the nation's treatment of the emancipated negroes. It was this Society which, so promptly and gloriously, lifted up and bore aloft with something of a divine intrepidity, God's own banner of human rights and the divine sympathy. It is this Society which has done more than any other one agency, to revolutionize and harmonize the national sentiment as regards the rights of the Indian to civilization and to Christianization. If now the churches of our country will hasten to do their duty, as in sight of him who is Father of us all, towards our Chinese neighbors, it will not be long before the National Government will wake to its shame and wipe off the deep disgrace of its recent demagogy and international perfidy.

Moreover, a more complete mistake could not be made than to imagine that the Imperial Government of China is unobservant, whatever the seeming invincibility of its pride and exclusiveness. China is neither blind nor insensible. Japan has awakened; China is wakening. Its hour is at hand; the dust of ages is stirring. The Chinese wall is vanishing. The Supreme Government of the four hundred millions of the Empire is at length getting in touch with the other great and advancing Powers of the world. And the startling sublime fact of the new world sociability, if we will but see it, is giving tremendous urgency to every possible means of originating, multiplying, communicating, and sending on and around from nation to nation, the forces of the world-redeeming Gospel of Jesus Christ. We, therefore, are most earnestly agreed in the conviction that, not only is the noble work of missions among the Chinese in our country, now being done by this Society, of inestimable value, but that it ought by all means to be greatly and immediately enlarged and re-enforced.

That great missionary, St. Paul, once said—and he may have often said it—that he gloried in his own infirmities; adding that the power of Christ might rest on him. This is our glory—if we have any. Here is this American Missionary Association; and over against it, face to face, is China. What proportion is there between the two? How preposterous, one may say, the thought which we are trying to frame into actual purpose for the regeneration of this enormous part of the human family? Most true. And yet, along with Paul's thought, how infinitely inspiring this purpose should be. Just the thing for us to do is to "build better than we know." It is not our eye, but His, which sees the end from the beginning. And it is his providence—sometimes as a pillar of fire, sometimes as a pillar of cloud—which shows us the way. Then it is for us to follow close up.

When some fifteen years ago, that slender, forlorn-seeming Japanese lad landed in Boston, with the strange, vague, resistless, heaven-enkindled longing in his heart; what if there had been no kindly hand to grasp his own, no heart to discern and respond to his? How easily might young Neesima have been lost, and the fateful turn in the destiny of Japan at the moment of its supreme opportunity for regeneration been vastly, disastrously different! What Chinese Neesimas to-day God's eye may have under His gracious watch and merciful leading, we cannot know beforehand; but this is certain, that we know enough to know that we do well to walk softly all the day long as seeing things invisible, and that with these thousands of Chinese among us, walking so noiselessly, so observantly in and out beneath the very tree of life that grows beside the river of life clear as crystal, and which proceeds direct from the throne of the Lamb, there are doubtless God's hidden ones, whose lives, if we will do our part, shall yet be woven in as shining and mighty threads into the divine plan wider than any nation, larger than the world, sure and strong as the word of Him who, at the first, said, "Let there be light," and there was light.

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE.

BY DR. L. C. WARNER, CHAIRMAN.

Your Committee have made a careful examination of the books and reports of the Treasurer, with special reference to the methods of keeping the various accounts, the security of the invested funds and the economy and prudence of the expenditures.

We find the system of bookkeeping as thorough and complete as that of any business concern. Each item of receipts or expense appears in its proper place, where it can be found without delay. The different departments of the work are classified and separated so that a broad and comprehensive knowledge of the work is always before the officers and Executive Committee. All payments are made by checks, and each check requires the signature of two officers of the Association; thus reducing to a minimum the chances of error or loss in the disbursement of the funds. At the end of each quarter the disbursements of the Association are carefully examined by the Auditors, two responsible business men, who go over and verify the accounts item by item. The Treasurer and other officers of the Association are to be especially commended for the thorough and business-like methods which prevail in the conduct of their business.

The invested funds of the Association amount to $230,375.78, yielding an income last year of $10,936.46. These funds are chiefly invested in mortgages in the city and State of New York and in Government bonds. In view of the forgeries of real estate mortgages recently discovered in New York City, the mortgages of the Association in New York and Brooklyn have, at the request of the attorney of the Association, been personally examined by a member of the Finance Committee and all found to be valid and correct. An examination of the schedule of securities held by the Association shows that there is not a single poor investment among them, or one on which the interest is in default.

Besides the invested funds the Association owns real estate in various Southern States and in the Northwest to the value of $600,274. This is the working plant of the Association. The buildings, apparatus and fixtures upon this property are protected by insurance.

The expenditures of the Association during the past year have been $328,788.43. This is an increase over the expenditure of last year. The Association commenced the year with a balance of $2,193.80; it closes the year with a debt of $5,641.20. It has therefore spent $7,835.01 in excess of its receipts. This debt is to be greatly regretted, for it should be the policy of the Association to plan its work in accordance with the funds at its disposal. They are obliged, however, to make their plans partly on faith, and it is not to be expected that their faith will always exactly measure the benevolence of the people.

The increase in expenditure has been entirely in the work done upon the field; the cost of agencies and administration being less this year than last. This increase has been mostly in the Southern field, and has been imperatively demanded by the natural growth of the work. Very little new work has been undertaken, four new schools only being added during the year; but the schools already organized have grown in size and therefore in expense. Eleven hundred and twenty more pupils are in attendance than one year ago, an increase of over 12 per cent. This has required the employment of twenty additional teachers.

Friends of the Association have added new buildings at some of the schools, and these new buildings, greatly needed and greatly increasing the effectiveness of the schools, also bring increased expense. The churches and schools of the Association are doing all they can for their own support. The spirit of self-help is constantly encouraged among them, but they are too poor to bear any considerable part of the expense.

The Association must therefore meet one of the three following alternatives: First, the growth of its work must cease, and the increasing number of pupils who apply to its schools year by year be denied admittance; or second, some of the schools which have been fostered by the Association for years must be abandoned, that funds may be left to strengthen and develop the remainder; or third, the churches and Christian givers of America must largely increase their gifts to this Association to meet its increasing wants.

The work of the Association for the coming year cannot be efficiently carried on without increased appropriations; $300,000 is the smallest amount which should be expended in the South, and a much larger amount could be wisely used. The mountain work among the poor whites is full of promise; and calls loudly for our aid, and the Association only waits for the necessary funds to greatly enlarge its efforts in this field. In addition to the Southern field, the Indian work requires at least $60,000, and the Chinese work $15,000. This makes the total amount needed by the Association next year $375,000. This we believe to be a moderate and conservative estimate.

This great work for the Negro, the Indian and the Chinese has been laid upon the American Missionary Association, and upon our denomination, as it has not been laid upon any other society or denomination in this country. It is our duty, yea, rather, our great opportunity. Shall we not then meet it as the stewards of God, whose servants and disciples we are?

FORTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1888.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The field of missions is the world which lieth in darkness. We have to do with that part of it for which we are doubly responsible. It is in darkness and it is our own.

We look upon our own land, with its States equal in extent and capacity to foreign kingdoms. When we know that they hold the certainty of a future influence of which their past power has been but a prophecy, our fears press hard upon our hopes.

Nor are our work and our fears an intrusion. When the pestilence which walks in darkness brings the destruction which wastes at noonday, it is our call to feel deeply the distresses of those who are stricken. But plagues consuming human lives are less grevious than those which abide, and which, walking in the intellectual and moral darkness of a people, waste the lives of men and the hopes of souls. This is our call.

Remember that it is our own country where, in twelve great States like empires, forty per cent. of the population cannot read, where, to-day, three-fourths of the illiteracy of the whole nation exists; where the darkness is increasing more rapidly than it is being lighted up; where much which passes for religion even among those who preach it, is a travesty upon Christianity, openly divorced from relationship with truth, purity, integrity and intelligence.

Our survey takes in questions that are painful; disturbing questions that are not in the North, nor in the West. They are difficult to meet. They are near, and the troubles which the questions hold are near. They come close to the heart of Christianity. They are close to the life of the churches. They are close to the first principles of human rights. They are questions that can have only one final solution, which may be so remote that fearful dangers will culminate in terrible disasters before the only remedy can do its work. There are now nearly eight millions of a Negro population, from four millions twenty years ago. There are more than two millions of mountain people in the South, one-half of whom cannot read. These benighted people live where there has never been a public-school system even for the more highly favored race, and where this more highly favored race deliberately assigns those who are not of its color to a permanent inferiority. The laws of caste are to be inflexibly enforced against all people of color who would rise from their low-down conditions. This is our Southern mission field, which God has committed to us, according to our faith and opportunity.

Those of our own race in the South could not do this work, which is upon our consciences and hearts, if they would. They do not see what we see. They would not if they could. They do not feel what we feel.

We are sent, not as philanthropists who hear the cry of the poor and needy, nor as patriots who realize the perils that overhang the State, but as missionaries of Jesus Christ who believe that salvation takes in the whole man, including philanthropy and statesmanship, and whatever builds up man for time and for eternity.

We have, however, no other charter for our work than that of missions. We have no other errand than that of the messengers of Christ. Only as we go in his name and with his spirit do we ask the churches to listen and hear with us, and with us to look and see.

OUR SCHOOLS.

Our missionary work has been largely in schools. It was God's providence. But these were always missionary centres.

Their number at the present time is ninety-three; seventeen of these in the Southern States are Normal Schools from which a large proportion of the pupils go forth as teachers. It is computed that of the 15,000 Negro teachers in the South instructing 800,000 pupils, 13,500 became teachers from missionary schools, and that a great army of more than 7,000 of these teachers received their education in the institutions of the American Missionary Association. Thus the faith of the churches multiplies and accelerates itself.

These Normal Schools are located in WILMINGTON, N. C., CHARLESTON and GREENWOOD, S. C., ATLANTA, MACON, SAVANNAH, THOMASVILLE and MCINTOSH, GA., MOBILE, ATHENS and MARION, ALA., MEMPHIS, JONESBORO', GRAND VIEW and PLEASANT HILL, TENN., LEXINGTON and WILLIAMSBURG, KY., to which must be added the large Normal and Industrial School at Santee Agency, Nebraska, the Oahe Industrial School and the Fort Berthold Industrial School, both in Dakota, and all three for the Indians, making altogether 20. The Association provides also the entire teaching force at the Ramona Indian School at Santa Fé, New Mexico. To these Normal Schools, we may add the six normal departments in our colleges with their superior normal instruction. From nearly all of these, strong appeals for enlargement have come to meet the demands of a healthy growth. We have cut, trimmed and denied, with a resolution that has been painful both in the office and in the field, and yet the growth is upon us. Without pushing our work, it is pushing us.

While ignorant millions need the truth and knowledge which we have, and there are resources in the hands of the disciples of Christ enough for this vast and increasingly urgent work, the necessity of denying the provisions for the development of success becomes well-nigh oppressive.

AT PLEASANT HILL, TENN., an important centre in our Mountain work, we have now, in addition to the new church, a school building unequalled in that region. A second building for a dormitory and boarding hall is nearly completed.

THE GRAND VIEW ACADEMY in the Mountain region, has also increased its school accommodations, and the look forward is to a large institution with far-reaching influence in the valley of the Cumberland and on the plateau. If we are to hold this region, we must take possession now.

We have also re-assumed charge of a school at Beaufort, N. C. The people are already appealing to us in the accents of their own sacrifices for its immediate enlargement.

Providentially, and without our solicitation, a generous giver, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who had already added to many large benevolences in the South, the fine building known as Ballard Hall and the excellent shops for industrial training at Tougaloo, made a proffer of $11,500 to erect at Macon, Ga., a school building of brick, capable of accommodating six hundred pupils. This successful school had grown until it had taken possession of the church building for school purposes. This noble gift, bestowed after a personal inspection on the part of Mr. Ballard, and upon personal conviction of its immediate necessity, could not be refused, and the substantial and spacious building, with its furnishings, is now nearly ready for occupancy. It will call for increased contributions from the churches.

DORCHESTER ACADEMY, at McIntosh, Ga., is in a rice region remote from civilization and educational privileges, among thousands of Negro people very ignorant and poor. It cannot receive the pupils who beg for admission. Children are punctual at school from a distance of eight miles, lest they shall lose their privileges by tardiness or absence. Africa itself could scarcely send out a cry of greater need. We had decided to increase the capacity of this school, but are compelled to wait.

AT GREENWOOD, S. C., the interests are so great and the appeals were so reasonable, that it was voted to enlarge the facilities for the growing institution; but at the last we could not do this, and the laborers there continue their prayers and their hopes.

THE LINCOLN NORMAL INSTITUTE at Marion, Ala., was established in the year 1868, by the A. M. A. In the year 1874, the State of Alabama asked to assume the school, which had won a good name, and to increase its facilities for the education of the Negro. This was done. Last year, the work was deserted by the State and came anew into our hands. This, also, is an enlargement upon our schedule of work.

AT LEXINGTON, KY., our Normal School has grown to such a degree that even the vestibules and halls of our insufficient building were crowded with eager pupils. Teachers were teaching, and pupils were studying, in conditions that none but missionary teachers would accept. For lack of room, industrial training has been impossible. The locality, meanwhile, has been surrounded by saloons, and houses that are worse. A benevolent lady who became acquainted with these facts offered $2,000 to purchase four acres of land for school and industrial purposes, and to pledge money sufficient for a new brick edifice with eight large school-rooms and all needful appointments and furnishings; the gift amounting to $15,000.

We believe that we were not wrong in accepting this trust in your behalf, even though it means more teachers and increased expenditures. We are confident that your Christian faith would not decline this Christian benevolence. Hence the plans for Chandler School are in the hands of the builders. Could some like-minded wealthy steward of the grace of God visit Williamsburg, Ky., in our Mountain White work, we might be compelled to face another such dilemma.

AT MERIDIAN, MISS., where Christian parents have besought us for years past to open a missionary school, through which their children might be saved to morality and integrity of character during the formative periods of their lives, we have at last seen our way to answer their pathetic appeal in part. A day school with an industrial department is ready for the opening, the building having been constructed during the months of summer. For valuable aid in sympathy, counsel and influence in Meridian, we and the people to whom we are sent are greatly indebted to Rev. Wm. Hayne Leavell, of Meridian.

WHITNEY HALL, for the Indian boys at Santee Agency, is another noble gift of large Christian faith for our Normal School in Nebraska. We summoned our courage to take this, also, with what the enlargement includes.

These are the chief additions to our system of schools, though there have been less marked enlargements in other places. They are simply the growths of strong faith and strong life. They are the free and special gifts which came to us through the convictions of others who had realized the need.

The common schools, 35 in number, in eight different Southern States, are in the hands of faithful teachers.

There are six Chartered Institutions, behind which we have stood the year past.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE in Talladega, Ala., has had a year of exceptional interest. The college work is developing and the theological school was never better. The industrial departments in agriculture and the mechanic arts offer fine advantages. The institution increases in popular favor and is full of students.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY in Georgia, under the temporary presidency of Prof. Francis, who was also college preacher and pastor, has moved on in its usual course. Through the successful solicitation of Prof. Bumstead, with our cordial and constant endorsement, sufficient Christian money came into the treasury to meet the deficiency caused by the withdrawal of $8,000 from the State of Georgia. The Association was able in its grants to share in this satisfactory result. At the last meeting of the Trustees, Prof. Bumstead was elected President for the ensuing year, and Prof. Chase, in view of a removal to New Mexico, resigned the professorship which he had ably held many years.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY at New Orleans, located in the most influential city of the Southwest, draws its students from refined Creole homes and from the rude cabins of the remote plantations. An interesting report gathered from twenty-two of its students who taught school during the summer vacation, tells us that they instructed 1,398 pupils in day schools and organized thirteen Sunday-schools, in which were taught 1,574 children, most of whom were absolutely unreached before. This summer record of Straight University students is a partial illustration of what is going forth from it year by year; and not from Straight only, but from all of our higher schools. The theological work in Straight is of incalculable importance.

TILLOTSON INSTITUTE, at Austin, Texas, has invigorated its normal course and has inaugurated a hopeful college preparatory department. The recipient of a special gift, it was enabled to complete a new industrial building, in which has begun a course of industrial training. It greatly needs a second dormitory hall for young women, and were not the institution so remote, some prophetic giver would see the urgency and the strategy of such a gift, and would make it. If, without the sight, some one shall be led to do this for Tillotson, he will reap the blessing of those who do not see and yet believe.

TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY, near Jackson, Miss., is an institution of exceeding interest. It has a department of Biblical instruction added to its course of study, in which students are prepared to preach the gospel. Its industrial facilities are excellent, both for agricultural and mechanical training. The students can take the timber from the tree, and the iron in the rough, and make wagons and carriages sufficiently good to compete with the best makers in the State. The school in all of its parts is controlled by the missionary spirit. Rev. F. G. Woodworth, of Connecticut, last year assumed the Presidency.

FISK UNIVERSITY, at Nashville, Tenn., is one of the oldest and most complete of all our Southern colleges, and has no superior among all the institutions in the country devoted to the education of the Negro. Giving relatively less attention to the industries, it models itself after our Northern colleges, and emulates them in the rigor of its intellectual studies and in the thoroughness with which it seeks to make good teachers and preachers; educators in the larger way for the race. It also has a department of theology. It has made its place, which it holds with enthusiasm and fidelity. If some one would give us, or leave us, money to endow this institution, he could scarcely send his influence further down the centuries than in this way. It would tell upon the race and upon the Nation.

In this glance at our schools, we see Christian schools. But they are more, they are missionary schools. We are bearing the torch of Christ into places of darkness. We teach the industries to them because they can be made tributary to the salvation of the people. They are the leaves of the tree of life, and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the people.

We may not close this review of our school system without remembering those institutions now standing alone; great Hampton, in whose rich gifts we rejoice, and Berea, another child of the A. M. A., now grown to strength.

TO HOWARD UNIVERSITY, at Washington, also, we extend the sympathy of a common purpose, together with such financial aid as we may for the support of its theological course.

We point to these great institutions which have been planted and fostered by the A. M. A., together with those which are still upheld by us, with a feeling akin to that of the renowned Cornelia when she said, "Behold my jewels."

CHURCH WORK.

We turn now to our Church Work.

In every school we have an incipient church; in many of these are organized churches. From all of them there is a continual going forth of a predisposition towards Congregational Churches, which will make for churches in the future.

The statistics are as follows:

but it was no use; I grew worse rather than better. Once or twice I left the meeting for fear I should speak out and make known my feelings. I even prayed God to take his Spirit from me; but now I rejoice and praise God that he has brought me to himself again.'

"Another had determined not to meddle with religion. He said: 'I got on very well till one day I happened to see my Bible covered with dust. I thought, that is my Bible so neglected! My heart must be as foul with sin as my Bible is with dust. I could not drive that thought from mind, and yet I did not dare to undertake the Christian life, for fear my old temptations would get the better of me again. But I thank God I have begun, and am more and more determined to persevere. My easily besetting sin came upon me once to-day, but instead of being overthrown, I conquered and triumphed over it, and such joy as I felt in that triumph I never experienced before in my life.'

"Some have told us how strangely they were impressed on first coming here to school. They supposed they were coming simply to study and learn; but they have found on every side—in the family worship, in the Sunday exercises, in the kind and faithful words of teachers, in the very atmosphere of the place—a constant call to become learners of Christ.

"We believe that during this year more than thirty of these young men and women have become Christians. Who shall estimate the blessed results of this consecration of life and talent to the Master? Who shall tell the blessedness of working in a field whose harvests are so abundant as these?

"We thank the Master that he has placed us in this part of the vineyard.

"E. A. WARE."

First Congregational Church and Storrs School.

"ATLANTA, GA., June 10, 1872.

"MY DEAR SIR: You will be glad to hear how large and precious an ingathering we had yesterday as the 'first-fruits' of the glorious spiritual harvest God is permitting us to gather. It was the day for our monthly communion service, and we welcomed twenty-three young converts to the Lord's table, a larger number than were ever received into this church at one time. Four others were expecting to unite with them, but were detained by providential causes, and quite a large number are still waiting for a more settled experience before taking this step; so that we have occasion to say, 'The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.' Among those received yesterday were some of the most promising of our young people, for whom we have long prayed and waited, and the news of their conversion will carry gladness to many faithful teachers who have had the care of them since these schools opened. All ages were represented, from youth to full manhood; in two cases husband and wife stood together, and a reformed drunkard was not the least among the trophies of divine grace. The religious experience of most was very clear and satisfactory, evincing nearly an entire absence of extravagance and superstition, and showing how broad a foundation of scriptural truth has been laid by these few years of labor in day-school and Sabbath-school and church service. One woman was drawn to Christ by the remembrance of the dying words of a sister nine years ago; one orphan-girl had been praying a long time that she might meet her mother in heaven; she said, 'I gave up every thing at last and Jesus came on my side, and I go with him everywhere.' One little girl ten years old, who has hard trials from an ungodly sister and schoolmates, who tempt her to break the rules, came to school one morning with a bit of paper cut in the form of a circle pinned to her dress, like a breast-plate, upon which she had written, 'Please don't talk to me to-day, and I won't talk to you; do the right, God sees you all.' To this she had signed her own name, thus 'subscribing with her own hand to the Lord.' One man, many years a hardened drunkard, said that he had always thought a bar-room or billiard-room all the heaven he wanted; now the thought of liquor was distasteful to him, and the meeting was his foretaste of heaven. One woman had been addicted to smoking for thirty years—has for two years past been trying to become a Christian, and we thought she gave good evidence of a change of heart. She said that after she had tried a long time and had given up every thing she could think of, she heard one Sabbath a voice, while all alone at home, saying, 'Can not you give up your pipe for Jesus?' She arose at once and put it away, and now for three months has had no taste for tobacco. To show her caution, I need only say that for three weeks no one knew of her sacrifice, and then only by accident, and she did not tell me until after six weeks' trial had convinced her that she could stand fast. The children in school have been deeply moved, and for many days, of their own impulse, a band of thirty or more of them devoted the half-hour of recess to a prayer-meeting under their own direction, giving up the opportunity to play and eat their lunch. We have held extra meetings for two months, and the harvest is not all gathered yet, for in different parts of the city new cases of interest are daily found, and the Spirit of the Lord has evidently gone before to prepare the way for his truth. The first communion of this church was celebrated five years ago, and at its anniversary yesterday, instead of ten, the number was one hundred and sixteen, of whom ninety sat down together. These have been years of waiting and hard labor, filled with difficulties and anxieties, and not free from heavy burdens of sorrow, but the good hand of the Lord has been upon us, and we take courage, and in the name of the Lord set up our Ebenezer. Very truly yours, C. W. FRANCIS."

Chattanooga, Tenn.

Brother Tade writes:

EBENEZER.

"The First Congregational Church of Chattanooga, Tenn., was organized June 9th, 1867, with both white and colored members. We have since received additions from both classes. One specialty of our mission is to war against the demon of caste.

"The church was born in a school-house, and there nourished for four years. During this time our prayer-meetings were well attended; and we had the largest and perhaps the best Sabbath-school in the city.

"We had also a temperance society, composed mainly of the young, which has been a power for good, not only in this place, but in the adjoining States. It is known as the 'Band of Hope.' All its members are pledged against the use of tobacco, and strong drink, and profanity. This short creed has been nobly honored by a very large per cent of all the members; and has been as ballast to our little ship—the church.

THE MEETING-HOUSE, AND HOW WE GOT IT.

"Our hearts early began to long for a sanctuary. And in Brother C——'s first visit we were encouraged to move forward; 'for the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION will help you.' So we began to lay by on the first day of the week as the Lord prospered; and soon we had enough to pay for a good lot, well located; and the pennies were saved and brought in, till we had $350. Then through our friend, General Howard's mother, we received from a good widow lady of Illinois $100—a valuable 'mite'—and we said the Lord has prospered us, therefore, we, his servants, will arise and build.

HOW IT WAS DONE.

"July 25th, 1871, the first sill of a building 36x70 feet was put in place, and in just four weeks we had meeting and Sabbath-school in our new house, because the brethren and sisters had a mind to work; for while the brethren labored, the sisters brought on the well-stored baskets, and right merrily did hammers ring late and early.

HOW IT LOOKS.

"It fronts east; is eighteen feet between floor and ceiling; has a semi-gothic roof, self-supporting, and instead of a bell-tower, a heavy cross, surmounted by a large index hand pointing upward. The audience room is 36x60 feet. The pulpit is in a recess, and a door on either side opens into two small rooms, ten by twelve and a half feet; one is a library-room and the other a pastor's study.

Four new Churches have been organized during the year. These are at Decatur, Ala., Crossville, Deer Lodge and Pine Mountain, Tenn. A fine church edifice has also been erected in Ironaton, Ala., which is soon to be dedicated. The members have sacrificed nobly to secure it. The church at Meridian has united with the Association in the erection of a beautiful house of worship which, with the new school and the teachers' home, will be ready in a few weeks for occupancy. The church at Knoxville has been enlarged and is practically new. It will soon be re-dedicated. The church at Pine Mountain is a year old; is already the center of four Sunday-schools, with an attendance of 415 children, only 10 of whom had ever been in a Sunday-school before.

Revivals of religious interest have been reported from our churches in Washington, Wilmington, Charleston, Talladega, Mobile, Athens, Marion, Selma, Birmingham and New Orleans. Those of the churches which are side by side with our educational institutions are most hopeful; but wherever we have planted churches, they stand forth to represent the ethics of Christianity, the purity and truth of character which must be contained in a worthy discipleship. A large proportion of our pastors are children of the A. M. A. Parsonages have been built for our churches in Mobile, Ala., and in Dallas, Texas.

MOUNTAIN WORK.

This year has laid great emphasis on the fact that we have entered, in the Southern mountains, a missionary field of vast importance, pressing needs and unbounded hopefulness. We have in this region, where a few years ago there was nothing, two normal schools, two academies, five common schools, and twenty churches.

In a territory five hundred miles long, and more than two hundred miles broad—twice the size of all New England—are at least between three and four hundred counties with a population greater than that of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut combined, without schools worthy of the name, without Sunday-schools, without prayer meetings, without an educated, spiritual, or even moral ministry, without a weekly Sabbath religious service of any kind, or any of the institutions of the gospel which really elevate them. They have a religion which is not a pure Christianity and which does not even involve morality.

The Christian work, lately introduced and already done among them, demonstrates that they are capable of a rapid and radical change, when once the vivifying touch of the gospel has reached their hearts.

Instead of twenty Congregational churches among them, there is room for a thousand, and instead of nine Christian schools, if there were twenty-five normal schools, it would be only one to each hundred thousand people; and if there were a hundred common schools, there would be one to each three or four counties for models. There should be one good college. If there were Congregational churches in this region in the same proportion as in New England there would be a full thousand. If they were in the same proportion as Connecticut, there would be twelve hundred churches; as New Hampshire, thirteen hundred; as Vermont, sixteen hundred.

Congregationalism goes to these people as the representative of pure, intelligent and progressive Christianity. We can gather them into schools, Sunday-schools and churches, anywhere where we can put a Christian worker. Our only limit is consecrated workers and the support for them. The field is as ripe this very day for a thousand as for a score. But the school and the church must go together.

This is one of the richest of the mineral regions of the world. Great forests of black walnut, poplar, and other valuable timber, are awaiting the woodman's ax and the lumberman's mill. Railroads are either built, building or planned for every part, to carry away its wonderful natural resources. The people are poor, but the land is rich, and a few years hence will see wealth in the place of poverty, in the hands of either the natives, or those who will have displaced them. All the motives which urge the establishment of the church and the school for the incoming population of the West, press us to build them in this great empire of the South; and they become doubly imperative when we take into account the fact that a population of between two and three millions is already in the land and needs to be saved now. The motives for home and foreign missions are thus combined, and impelling us for Christ's sake, for humanity's sake, and for our country's sake, to give the gospel to this people.

We are not building pauper institutions in this mountain country to be forever a dead weight for the Northern churches to carry, but institutions which will very speedily take care of themselves, and give to others as they have received.

This is a portion of the South where slavery scarcely existed. When war came, it was loyal to the Union almost to a man. This fact shows that they have a natural affiliation with "Northern ideas." The caste spirit is among them—as it is indeed in the North to some extent—but it much more readily yields to reason and loving teaching than in other portions of the South. Vigorous and extensive missionary work can and will mould the ideas and sentiments of this whole region, and thus establish no-caste churches and schools, where they would demonstrate to the South that they do not carry with them social disorder and every baleful influence.

Amid the success, joy and hopefulness of the year's work, came the affliction of the shooting of Prof. George Lawrence, while about his duties in our school in Jellico, Tenn. It was the work of a miserable creature whose brain was fired with whiskey, and who was urged on by the saloon element as a retaliation for earnest temperance work. After long and anxious weeks of intense suffering, a brave fight against death proved successful, and we now hope that our missionary's life is spared for many years of usefulness. Nearly a hundred men have been shot already in this one place, and the place itself is not more than six years old. Is it strange that these mountain people who have a glimpse of better things, are appealing to us every week of the year to plant institutions among them?

Is it not the voice of Christ clearly commanding us to possess and subdue this land, and to transform it into a part of his peaceful and beneficent Kingdom, which shall join hands with us to pass on the torch of Christ to others yet in darkness?

THE INDIANS.

The people of America are determined to press the Indian problem to a speedy solution. Provision has been made for giving lands in severalty, and the next great movement should be to induce the Government to provide secular education, and the churches to furnish religious instruction to all the Indians. The American Missionary Association, during the year, has responded to this new impulse by enlarging its work—in the opening of new stations, in the erection of new buildings, and in the appointment of more missionaries and teachers.

At the Santee Agency, Nebraska, our oldest mission station and school has had marked prosperity in its normal, theological and industrial departments, and, better than all, in a deep and wide-spread religious interest that has pervaded the school and the church. The new building, named Whitney Hall—from its giver—has been erected, affording accommodations for twenty-two of the larger and more advanced pupils, and furnishing rooms for the treasurer's family. A liberal gift from Mrs. Henry Perkins, of Hartford, Conn., provides, for the present at least, for the running expenses of the Boys' Hall, and, in appreciation of the gift, and of the interest in the school which the gift implies, the building will hereafter be called Perkins Hall.

At Oahe, Dakota, on the beautiful Peoria Bottom, both the school and church have prospered. The school is crowded to its utmost capacity and a greater number of pupils has been granted in the contract with the Government. A new building is urgently called for. The closing exercises of the school were attended by a picturesque group of three or four hundred Indians, who were encamped around the station. Some of these came a hundred and twenty-five miles to attend the exercises.

One marked feature in the enlargement of the work has been the opening of two more Central Stations: one at Rosebud Agency, the other located at Fort Yates, near the junction of the Grand River with the Missouri. The new mission house has been built, and by the aid of special gifts from benevolent friends at the East, a commodious building has been erected for a hospital.

A peculiar and very interesting feature of our Indian work is the out-stations, located remote from the Central Stations. These stations, numbering twenty-one, have been hindered and also enlarged during the past year. The hindrance came from the interference of the Government. In its well-intended zeal for the introduction of the English language, it surpassed the limits which experience had fixed, by requiring that the vernacular should not be taught, nor even spoken, in any Indian schools on the Reservation, including these mission stations, which were wholly sustained by benevolent funds. Under this ruling, thirteen stations were closed from September to January. But the remonstrances coming from almost every denomination of Christians in the land induced the Government to modify its orders, and the schools have all been re-opened.

Some new buildings have been erected on this part of the field—a new house for dwelling and school on the Grand River, and a cheap structure at the Cheyenne River Agency, in which religious services are held at the times for the disbursement of the rations, when large numbers of the Indians assemble and remain for many days. A new impulse has been given to this out-station work by contributions received at one of the missionary meetings in Northfield, Mass. Four new stations were provided for at that time by the contribution of $400 for a building at each station, and $300 for the support of the teacher. One was the gift of Mr. Moody, another of Mr. Sankey, whose names these two stations will bear.

Fort Berthold, in the northern part of Dakota, has authorization from the Government for a larger number of pupils under contract than last year. But our exigencies require for this only a few and inexpensive repairs and additions to be made on the buildings.

The Skokomish mission continues its stable progress. The missionary, Rev. Myron Eells, has been tempted during the past year by several calls to enter more lucrative fields of service, but his attachment to the work, begun by his most honored father, and continued by himself, is so great that he prefers to remain with his people, and to aid them in their progress in civil and Christian life.

The Indian school at Santa Fé, New Mexico, has had some changes, but the arrangement between the Association and the trustees is continued, and the school, under the charge of Prof. Elmore Chase, maintains its useful service in the training of the children of the Apaches, one of the most hopeful and promising tribes of Indians on the continent.

THE CHINESE.

The special interest of the year centres in the evangelistic work that was commenced early in the winter. Of our 39 workers reported, fourteen are Chinamen, who have been converted in our schools. Two of these brethren were set apart last December as special evangelists, one going to our missions in Southern California, and the other to our more Northern missions. Subsequently another one entered the field. The intention was to give one month of service at each mission, and the gratifying experience has been that at no point has this one month been deemed sufficient. At the end of five months the harvest reported was forty souls brought to repentance.

Three new missions are upon our list this year; those at Los Angeles, San Buenaventura, and Tucson. At Los Angeles no less than 75 pupils were enrolled the first month, and at all these places Christian Associations have been formed.

A minister on the Pacific Coast not in connection with our schools, after giving a sketch of work accomplished which could not be tabulated, says: "Socially, intellectually, spiritually, the Chinese mission school does its beneficent work. But everything is made but the means to the spiritual end. The whole drift of the teaching, the songs, the pictures, the Scripture text, is to make known Christ. Every evening's lesson ends with worship. In no year, may I add, have there been so many conversions among the Chinese on this coast as in the one just passed."

WOMAN'S BUREAU.

There are thirteen Woman's State Organizations which co-operate with us in our missionary work. These are in Maine, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Alabama, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas and South Dakota. Other States, also, not yet organized, are assisting in definite lines, as Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Our Bureau of Woman's Work has for many years proved its wisdom. The state of black womanhood and girlhood taken together is pitiful. The permanent and uplifting Christianization and civilization to be engrafted on the Negro race in this land, can come only as the womanhood of that people is imbued with right principles and led to right practices. Unless the life of the woman is reached and saved, there can be no true religion, family life, or social status. Hence our industrial and boarding schools for the training of girls in domestic work, in the trades of dressmaking and such like, in the art of cooking, the cultivation of small fruits and flowers, so that the sacred influences of Christianity shall circle around the thousand firesides where now everything is coarse, and ignorant, and senseless. With our large corps of lady teachers, the Woman's Bureau, as an intermediary between the Woman's State Association and their sisters who are teaching in the field, and the women and girls to whom they are sent, has proved during the year its increasing efficiency.

FINANCES.

The receipts have been, $320,953.42, which with the balance on hand, September 30th, 1887, of $2,193.80, makes a total of $323,147.22. We have received in addition to this $1,000 for an Endownment Fund. The total disbursements for the year have been $328,788.43. The churches through the National Council have asked us to keep abreast with the providence of God. "It is our duty," said the Ohio State Association, "to see that this great work in which we have borne so large and honorable a part, halt not, nor slacken in its energy because of our failure to keep its treasury replenished and its faithful laborers re-enforced and supported by our gifts and our prayers."

Said our good friend, the Congregationalist, in an editorial after our inspiring meeting at Portland in October last: "Never did the magnitude of the field, and the complex character of its labors, appear in such startling lines. Either of the four departments of labor demands the money and the force which is distributed among all. But, in the providence of God, this society is called upon to prosecute this fourfold work. It cannot abandon a single field and must not be asked to. It can do in the next five years a work for Christianity and for Congregationalism in the South and West which will tell on the coming century. As Christians, and as Congregational Christians, we must see to it that it be not obliged to pinch its workers and to turn away from promising openings in order to keep free from debt the coming year."

Thus charged, we have yet gone within our instructions. We have made every dollar do more than its work. We have gathered up the fragments that nothing be lost; and yet to-day our payments anticipate our receipts by the sum of $5,641.21. We do not regret the anxiety and pain which it has cost us to effect what we have. The generous words of sympathy and confidence that have come to us of late, with noble gifts, large and small, repay the solicitude and incessant care. We thank God and his people, and hold firmly our faith in Him who said, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." He opened the door. Our faith is in Him who also said, "Ask, and ye shall receive."

The year opened with the Association bereft of its honored President. We come to this new year happy in our choice of the Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D.D., of New York, to fill this most important position. In his acceptance we congratulate the Association.

Since the year began, the churches have missed the stirring appeals of our beloved Secretary Powell, who had the especial oversight and burden of the collecting fields. Such a live as that of James Powell is not common. It was a grand sacrifice of undeviating love for those whose poverty made him a debtor to them. His consecration will not be forgotten.

His sudden departure—our great bereavement—made necessary the transfer of the Rev. C. J. Ryder from the field to the District Secretaryship of the Eastern District in New England, who has brought with his energy and zeal such an experience, and personal knowledge of the entire field, as to insure him the most hearty welcome and co-operation on the part of our pastors and churches.

The Rev. F. E. Jenkins, a graduate of Williams College and of Hartford Theological Seminary, for some time earnestly engaged in our Southern work, has been appointed a field superintendent for personal examination and supervision of our churches and schools, and has already entered upon his duties.

The Association, with its Superintendents continually in the field, who report every fact to the Secretaries at the office, who in turn submit the entire work to the churches, is thus continually made better prepared to direct the sacrifices of the benevolent in ways that shall not be irresponsible or unwise, than those which are subject to no such scrutiny or supervision, and are held to no responsibility. Much less money would be diverted from this authorized and recognized servant of the Congregational Churches, and far greater efficiency would be secured, if our friends would remember that their own ordained agency can open as many missions as they will make possible, which shall have, at least, one advantage over independent and unsupervised work, in that, through us, they shall be under your own constant Christian watch and care.

We may not close this review of our year's work and attendant suggestions without remembrance of our indebtedness to the American Bible Society, for its grant of Bibles; to the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society for the help given to our struggling churches and Sunday-schools in its grant of books and lesson helps. We rejoice in the unity of our societies, which make all one in the blending of the parts for the great common purpose of redeeming the lost and gathering them into the family of Christ.

MEMENTOS OF OUR DEAD.

Rev. James Powell, D.D., died on the morning of December 27, 1887, after a short illness. The day of his death was thus near the forty-fifth anniversary of his birth, which was on the Christmas day of 1842. The most joyful festival in the Christian annals aptly typified his cheerful life, his bright hope in Christ and his warm devotion to his service. Dr. Powell was a native of Wales. He came to this country at an early age, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1866 and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1869, was installed pastor of the church in Newburyport, Mass., in the same year, and remained there till 1873. In the latter part of that year he entered the service of the Association as District Secretary for Connecticut and New York; a year later he was appointed District Secretary for the Western Department, remaining there nearly ten years, until he came to New York as a Corresponding Secretary, holding this office when he died. Thus nearly all his active life was spent in the service of the Association, rising steadily step by step in his position, and adorning each by his marvelous eloquence, his social magnetism and his abundant labors.

Rev. William H. Ellis died Nov. 28, 1887, aged thirty-five years and six months. He entered the service of the Association in 1878, and at the time of his death he was pastor of the church and teacher of the school in Troy, N. C. He was a graduate of Williams College, and his work for the Association was characterised by self-denial, patience and faithfulness.

Mr. William L. Clark, who passed away in November, 1878, was one of the early, self-denying and efficient workers of the A. M. A. in the South. He entered the service in 1868 as a teacher in Bainbridge, Ga., and was subsequently at Thomasville and Atlanta. Afterwards he was for a time editor and publisher of a paper devoted to the interests of the colored people.

Hon. Alfred S. Barnes, after an illness extending over five months at his residence in Brooklyn, N. Y., finished his earthly life Feb. 17, 1888, at the age of 71 years. Mr. Barnes was a member of the Executive Committee of the A. M. A. for nineteen years. He was a wise counsellor, large minded, and in deep sympathy with every form of philanthropic and Christian work. He was the founder of one of the prominent publishing houses in this country.

Mrs. L. A. Orr passed suddenly from earth, July 15th, as the result of an accident while riding out the day before. Mrs. Orr came into the work of the Association with her husband at Talladega, Ala., and was a valued assistant by her social gifts and her services in the institution, and by her mission school labors outside.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

REPORT OF SECRETARY.

It is fitting that woman should have a part in a work that finds its centre of operations in Christian schools and homes for the training of the exceptional classes reached by the American Missionary Association.

Let us not forget that the Indians for whom we work have been excluded from our civilized communities, until it is difficult to win them to our customs, our language and our religion; that until only about twenty-five years ago, generation after generation of our colored people had been born to bondage, and had groaned its hopeless life away in far greater misery than the same conditions brought in uncivilized Africa—misery made deeper and keener by contrasts in civilized America. Is it a wonder that the women of a slave race lost their womanly instincts; that the moral nature was blunted and marred; that the mind became impoverished, the heart a waste place for poisonous weeds to grow?

Let us not forget that the mountain people have been passed by, until shrinking farther and farther into the seclusion of their hills and ravines, and living unto themselves, they have lost the sturdy qualities of their ancestors.

What kind of homes do we find among these people, where the children with their impressible minds are receiving their first instruction?

Our teacher is invited to visit the home of a Kentucky girl, one somewhat above the average. Beautiful for situation, up a winding road, past cascades and mountain waterfalls, upon a high plateau the home is found—a box house, one room, no windows, two beds, four chairs, a table, a few dishes, father, mother, seven children, dogs, cats, and chickens. At retiring hour the teacher is pointed to the corner and is told she is to sleep there. A pile of dirty, ragged quilts are pulled out from under the beds, some bags and rags rolled for pillows, and the family dispose of themselves for the night, with no change of clothing, scarcely the removal of shoes. Change the box house to a tent, put the fire in the centre, and with less furniture, but no more smoke or dirt, you have the tepee home of the Indian. Match the dilapidation and the dirt, the narrow quarters and the large family, and you have the cabin home in the Georgia swamps and the lowlands of Louisiana. The conditions in the main are the same—an untutored father and mother, no books, no pictures, no newspapers, no clean clothes, no Sunday, no God.

At first sight our sympathies are aroused by the lack of all ordinary comforts and conveniences of home life, but transplant the family into a neat cottage, suitably furnished for a home, explaining to them its advantages and uses, and let us see if thus we have met the need. What a disappointment! Their old habits still cling to them. They do not know the names or use of the kitchen utensils; they have no proper knowledge of cooking, no orderly habits; there is no family or personal reserve. There are books and newspapers, but they cannot read them, or cannot read intelligently because of their meagre vocabulary. Evidently the real degradation of these people does not lie wholly in the poor cabins or tents, the scant furniture, the ragged clothing, the shiftlessness and poverty. It is deep in the nature, and far harder to overcome than any outward conditions.

We want to help them: we ought to help them. For what were we nurtured and shielded in Christian homes; why taught self-restraint, self-reliance, the law of God as applied to our duty to ourselves and our neighbors? Why have our hands been trained to skillful work, our minds opened to knowledge, if not to make these our talents ten more by their exercise in behalf of such needy ones? But how shall we convey to them the blessings of intelligent, Christian home life? I am sure every womanly heart gives the same response: through the children.

That is our way—the foundation of the broad work of this Association. We cannot expect the mothers to teach their children what they do not know themselves, have never seen and cannot understand. So we bring the youth out of these homes, cut off as far as possible from their low surroundings, into our missionary schools, where they are lifted into a purer atmosphere and are brought into daily contact with refined Christian womanhood. Here mind and heart and hand are trained. Not only do they learn habits of forethought and industry, but by the blessing of the Holy Spirit very many of them learn the saving power there is in Jesus Christ. Ten thousand youth we have thus reached within the last year. Is it not a grand work, worthy your heartiest support? There is encouragement in all our fields, but especially now in what is accomplished for the girls of the colored race. Their perils are peculiar. Your hearts would ache could you know all the dangers that encompass them. They are beset on every hand. Not a girl in our schools is safe. They, of all others, are the ones that are tried, tempted, allured. Do they go out to teach, they are watched, written to, harassed, and only as strong in God's strength and deliverance can they escape. When you think of the snares set for these girls, and that no father or brother may even yet dare defend them, and when you know that there are those—yes, very many—who, guided by Christian teachers stand firm in the purity of their womanhood, clinging to the Everlasting Arm, how plain it is that God has a plan, a purpose for this race, when we shall have fulfilled our duty to them, and when their fiery furnace of trial shall have done its work!

And these people are not in Asia, or Africa, or the Islands of the Sea. They are within our own domain—ten millions of them—a constant reminder of our duty, a threat of danger if duty is neglected. You may say, what are ten thousand youth among ten millions? They are the leaven, which, if a woman take and properly direct shall leaven the whole mass. The American Missionary Association has these youth, and through these, access to larger numbers. It has been no easy matter to win the alienated Indian until he would give up his boys and girls to our care; nor to break through the ignorant pride and reserve of the mountaineers; or even to wisely direct the impulsive, selfishly ambitious, undisciplined colored people. But it has been done. Our school homes are there, upon the sure foundation of gospel, no-caste principles, and we need the help of every Christian woman in the land to sustain what has been established at such painstaking and cost, and to meet the demand for the new phases of help that can now be given.

That some of our church woman in the North are interested, is shown by the twenty-eight thousand dollars of contributions received from them during the past year. That they are alive to the advantage of reaching this field through the American Missionary Association and thus keeping in sympathy with the work of the churches in their annual contributions, is shown in the formation of State Unions, for direct co-operation with us. We consider it especially favorable that the purpose of these State organizations is to increase the flow of money and other forms of helpfulness through the regular channels to this part of the home field; that thus the young people and strangers who are gathered into the church auxiliaries are being interested in the history and work of the American Missionary Association and that the children—the future church members—also are learning to give to it, for the sake of the people to whom it ministers.

It has been a great help to us, that in the past year the Woman's Aid of Maine sustained four teachers, that the Woman's Aid of Vermont contributed so faithfully to their adopted school at McIntosh, Ga., and Connecticut ladies to the Industrial School for colored girls in Thomasville. We cannot speak too highly of the efficiency of the New York Woman's Union, which pledges us a definite sum, increasing the amount annually, and keeping its pledge. The Ohio Union has sustained Miss Collins' mission in Dakota and a teacher in the South. The Minnesota Union met nearly two-thirds the cost of our school at Jonesboro', Tenn., and the Iowa Union more than one-third the expense of Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga. The ladies of other States have helped in the girls' department of our school at Tougaloo, Miss., the schools at Athens and Mobile, Ala., Austin, Tex., Williamsburg, Ky. and Santee Agency, Neb. These friends have been in communication with the schools they have aided, learning of the needs and economical measures of help. They have been permitted to know for themselves the hopeful results of patient Christian endeavor. For many of our scholars are beginning quietly and persistently to do noble Christian work in the locality in which they live, relieving the destitute, reading, singing, praying with the sick and infirm and themselves growing stronger and wiser in religious work every day. There are many who appreciate and long for a better and purer life for their own people, and they are doing much to elevate the tone of society. They are the leaven. They can transform the home life—to some extent the old homes—but in much larger degree the new, in giving intelligent parentage to the little ones of their own households.

In order to make the work so well begun tell most for the future, the woman's skill is required in its every phase. The homes must have their visitors, schools their teachers; pastors urgently call for the special missionary. There are those who are willing to go. Will the ladies of the churches provide the means? Will you Christian women—the women of our churches, come to the aid of the American Missionary Association, in support of your sisters in the field? If you will do this, we shall have no more debt. If you will do this, there will be far less of heart-aching denial to those who plead with us year by year to send them just one—only one Christian woman to guide and teach.

It costs but four hundred dollar a missionary. Yet of those who have been appointed for the new year—some already at work, others now on the way—there are one hundred whose support is not yet provided; and only four hundred dollars a missionary! What a glow would enter the hearts of these noble, self-denying women, if from the Woman's Bureau word might go that the ladies of such churches have provided for you, and you, and you! Weary with the constant drain upon mind and heart, as they come in contact with the warped, barren lives of the people whom they would help, how it would refresh them to feel that because they are your missionaries you are working for, thinking of and praying for them. One hundred woman missionaries unprovided for!

At the word of the Lord we put out into the deep and let down the nets. The draught is great, our nets are breaking, and we beckon unto you, our partners in the other boat to come and help us—to share in the work and the reward.

FIGURES, AND WHO MADE US GLAD.

"We had when we began $350, and the widow's 'mite,' above referred to, $100. Next came in the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION with $300; then Father Hathaway of Bristol, R. I., $100 for the roof; and then AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION again with $200; next the First Congregational Church of Atlanta, Ga., a loan, without interest, till they are ready to build, $50; and then Father Hathaway again, for the young men who were away at school, and to whom the church were indebted, another $100; Washington, D. C., per Mrs. Cook and a few friends, $22.50; also by a former teacher, Miss Beecher, of Livonia, N. Y., $42; then West-Brookfield cheered us with $26.50, and a strange friend in Penn Yan, N. Y., C. A. Hamlin, his stock, $10; so also Rev. J. A. Thome, pastor of Chattanooga Congregational Church, $50; and Rev. C. P. H. Bancroft, of Lookout Mountain, $25, making a total from others of $1026. This was our cash stock; the balance has been raised almost entirely among ourselves—all poor, only three or four families with homes paid for. Our chapel is considered well worth $2500 by good judges. We have gone as far as we can, we are a little in debt, and our meeting-house needs painting inside and out; but our greatest need is a good bell—we are somewhat scattered, and the poor seldom have clock or watches—and there is a power and a joy in the clear and well-known tones of a church bell. Who will lend unto the Lord a bell for this little flock in Chattanooga? We promise to take good care of it, and to use it well.

PROSPECTS.

"Our prospects were never better or more hopeful for accomplishing good in this field. We are now divided up into working committees: stranger committee, prayer-meeting committee, Sabbath-school, temperance, young people, finance, family paper, etc., etc., in all twenty committees; and these are to make reports the first Wednesday evening of each month.

"We had two weeks of prayer at the beginning of the year, and then two weeks of preaching, aided by some of the city pastors and Bro. Bennett, of Nashville. The first Sabbath in March, eight united with us by profession. The attendance at Sabbath-school, prayer-meetings, and at preaching is steadily increasing. E. O. T.

"CHATTANOOGA, March 7, 1872."

Alabama.

The following extracts will give a glimpse of the progress of the church work in this State:

Talladega.

Rev. Mr. Strong says:

"There was no special interest in the church until the week of prayer. Rev. I. Mattison came here in December, and we began a protracted meeting with the week of prayer, Bro. M. preaching nearly every evening. The meeting continued about three weeks, and resulted in the hopeful conversion of about twenty-five persons, mostly young people. Fifteen of these united with our church, and most of them give promise of useful lives. Several students from abroad declined to unite with churches at their homes. The revival made a deep impression upon the whole community from the quiet and solemn manner in which the Spirit was manifested. Often as many as forty would come forward for prayers. Up to that time there seemed to have been a settled belief that a revival must necessarily be accompanied by great noise and excitement. Now it is the general opinion, not only of our church, but also of the better members of other churches, that such accompaniments are not necessary, but rather injurious. A daily prayer-meeting begun at this time was sustained by a few earnest young men, until the close of the school year. Seven weekly neighborhood prayer-meetings have been maintained by the aid of the teachers.

"The students have encouraged and kept in operation several country Sunday-schools. As a present result of this outside work, we have about thirty colored Sunday-schools in this county, and probably from fifteen to twenty in counties around us.

"The State Sunday-school Association, which was an outgrowth of the work around Talladega, is winning its way against the prejudices of the people, and promises to become a great engine for promoting Christian education. It held its second annual convention last April. There are now about eighty schools connected with it."

Marion.

"The work accomplished by the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION at this point, during the year ending July 1st, has mostly been of such a nature that some of the immediate results are very noticeable and easily enumerated. A house of worship for the use of the Congregational church has been erected. Full particulars of its construction, cost, etc., were given in the February number of the American Missionary. The church has been steadily growing in Christian strength and intelligence. Preaching has been supplied during nearly eight months of the year. The great desire of the church is for a settled pastor. The people are agreeable, intelligent, and ready to receive the truth; the field a pleasant and promising one, and the good that might be done here by a faithful Christian minister, who would consent to make it his home, can not be estimated. The time may come when colored churches at the South will be supplied with pastors from their own number, but there must be years of patient study and preparation first; meanwhile, these little flocks ought not to be left shepherdless. Only the best, most practical, and truly-refined men and women, are wanted for this work of teaching and preaching in the South. After the new chapel was completed and dedicated, November 26th, the Sabbath-school was reorganized, and has since met there before service, Sabbath morning. As was expected, naming the Sabbath-school Congregational, and its meeting in new quarters, caused quite a decrease in numbers, but the course has proved a wise one. The school has greatly increased in value to the church, and in interest. The advancement made in Bible knowledge has been marked.

"The Union Series of Lesson Papers has been a great help. Both teachers and pupils have been very punctual in attendance. The contributions during the year amounted to over $130, a part of which finished paying for a cabinet organ, and the remainder has furnished the entire school with the National Teacher, Lesson and Sabbath-school papers. The attendance in the day-schools was large and regular. Four good efficient teachers were furnished, and they did their work well. The school began October 16th, and closed May 15th. Several of the young ladies were given a good start in music through the faithful labors of Miss B., who, in addition to her duties in the school-room, volunteered to teach them, which she did without compensation. The young people met in the church one night every week, for instruction in singing. Mrs. A., during her three years' connection with the work here, did much—in addition to other duties—to develop the musical talent of the pupils. A night-school was taught several months by Misses C. and L., for the benefit of those who could not attend their day-schools.

"A little more than a year ago the Association bought 80 acres of land for the purpose of selling it out in small lots to colored people, for homes, after reserving the house and a few acres for a parsonage and teachers' home. Several of the best citizens—a number of them members of the Congregational Church—have availed themselves of this rare opportunity. So that in the immediate vicinity of the church and parsonage an enterprising little colony has sprung up. It does one's heart good to see how much energy these families have shown in building houses, fencing in, and laying out grounds for gardens, setting out fruit-trees, and making for themselves comfortable and pleasant homes. And they are so happy about it! This is a meagre account of what the Association has done for the people of Marion during the past year. The results have certainly been most satisfactory, and there is much encouragement for the future.

"MRS. T. C. STEWARD."

REVIVAL WORK IN THE CHURCHES.

Some interesting revival scenes are sketched below by Rev. James Wharton, who has done successful evangelistic work among our churches in the South.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

From the very commencement of the meetings a good spirit was manifest, which deepened day by day until forty or more persons professed faith in Christ, young and old being reached by the power of the gospel. One man sixty-one years of age surrendered to the overtures of God's love and received Christ as his Saviour. Another of seventy-five years was pointed out to me as a hardened sinner. When approached he was full of self and reason, "I don't believe in mourners' benches and such like; do you think my going there will make me a Christian or do me any good?" "No, but it will show the people you are intending to make a start for Heaven, and it will enlist their sympathy and prayers," I replied.

Finally he knelt with me in the aisle with his head bowed on the end of the seat while I prayed. Soon the big tears were dropping from his eyes and he went home that night under conviction. The following night he returned. He was again prayed for, but went away undecided. The next night as soon as inquirers were given an opportunity to present themselves for prayers he was the first to respond, and the sinful man of seventy-five years had yielded his heart to Christ, and could sing from his heart "Happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away." His wife, who was present, rushed forward, and tears of joy ran down their cheeks. Scarcely a dry eye was to be seen, while above all there was joy in Heaven over another sinner saved.

Ten persons made profession of their faith in January. Two of these were teachers in the public schools. There were four conversions in one family. Since these meetings, many extra services have been held, with fruitful results.

SELMA, ALA.,

I entered full of hopes as to successful meetings, and was not disappointed. During my stay there, lasting three weeks, sixty professed to be converted. Most of these, through the efforts of Rev. C. B. Curtis and his wife, were formed into a "Children's Band," while others joined the churches. This is a most important feature in pastoral work, where the majority of the converts are children. They need to have something that will help them in their spiritual and new life and which may be instrumental in preserving them from temptations, snares and pitfalls, laid to entrap them by the enemy of their souls.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE

was the next place visited. Beginning the New Year, which is usually the "week of prayer," for two weeks the "old, old story" was told on every night among the resident students and scholars. At other times, services would be held in the Cassedy school in the morning, or in the afternoon, as school duties would permit. The Theological class, as well as the teachers and faculty, interested themselves greatly in seeking to win the unsaved to Jesus. Following out the teaching of the New Testament, the students went out two and two in the surrounding neighborhood, calling at the homes of the people, conversing and praying in the family. They often returned with great joy to tell of the success and kindness they had met wherever they went. I am thankful to our blessed Lord to be able to report that not only forty or more of the young people were converted, but also that professing Christians were strengthened in faith, all promising to go to their respective homes, some of them hundreds of miles away, to make known a Saviour's love. While here the Macedonian cry was heard from

JENIFER.

I went there for a brief service. The first night the church was full, although the weather was stormy. The spirit of God brooded over the meeting and five came forward for prayer. The next night still was unpleasant, yet some of the congregation came several miles, and at the close eleven inquirers asked for prayers. A brother in the congregation rose, and, in pleading terms, his voice faltering, begged, "Oh, brodder, please do stop wid us; see de mourners; see de work de Lord is doing; please you brodder don't go away and leab us." After such heartfelt words I could but stay all the week, when sixteen professed to have accepted Christ, or, as they put it, to have "found religion."

MARION, ALA.

I went to Marion with some doubts upon my mind as to the results. The first evening after my arrival I was very sick and threatened with a severe attack of chills and fever, but I was helped to strength enough to preach with difficulty. Twenty-five inquirers asked for prayers. Some that night became "new creatures in Christ Jesus," and every night as the meetings progressed the interest deepened and spread, until other churches were reached by the influence and their services given up that their members might come to our church and share in the work and blessing. Every night large numbers of seekers came to Christ. On one night twelve expressed their faith in a new life. Among the many inquirers was one who for twelve years had been an anxiety to her friends on account of her state of mind, and her conversion caused great joy in the church.

Short morning meetings were held in the various schools in the town, and in a town-school seventeen seekers found the Lord Jesus precious to their souls. Up to this time, during two weeks, more than one hundred profess to have been converted.

I am happy to report that now, with the exception of two or three of the students, all in the new A. M. A. school have been reached by the gospel. This blessing can be traced in a great measure to the faithful Scriptural teaching which Rev. A. W. Curtis and his devoted wife had been giving previous to my coming among them, prayer meetings having been held in the church for some time beforehand, and women's meetings at the pastor's home, thus preparing the way for the nightly preaching of the gospel.

OLD TIME PREACHING.

Rev. Mr. Ryder gives the following graphic sketch of the old-time methods of religious work in the South.

As illustrating the need of intelligent and decent church services in the South, I record the following facts, which were related to me by those who knew of them personally. A colored preacher of the "old-time" sort preached on the Judgment Day. He held the meeting from evening till well into the night. He arranged with a worthless fellow to hide himself in the woods just outside the church, with a tremendously big dinner-horn, with instructions to blow upon it at a certain signal. At the awful hour of midnight, when, by entreaty and appeal and frightful figures of speech, the preacher had worked the people up into a frenzy of excitement and terror, he exclaimed, "Listen, I reckon I hear Gabriel getting ready to blow now. De last day am on us, de judgment am right here, whar you sinners now? Listen." And with bated breath they listened. Just then there came a fearful blast on the stillness of the midnight air, and the scene that followed can better be imagined than described. Helter-skelter over the benches and over each other, the terrified people scrambled for the mourners' bench. The preacher boastfully told afterward, that "dar want scarsely one sinner but what wah effected."

The quiet forms of worship in our Congregational churches, and the intelligent preaching of the A. M. A. ministers, are fast bringing about a state of things which will drive out such church circuses, with their ministerial clowns. God speed the day!

FORT YATES, DAKOTA.

FROM MISS M. C. COLLINS.

What are we going to do? This is a question coming to us continually. The A. M. A. doubtless is in a happy mood and smiling condition, now that it has strengthened our forces by two new men—one, Rev. Mr. Cross, three hundred miles below here, and one, Rev. Mr. Reed, thirty-two miles from here at the Agency. It is a good thing—a great deal better than not to have sent anyone. But now, think of it: An Agency containing six thousand souls, scattered in villages of from twenty to fifty families in a village, and the settlements from five to ten miles apart.

I have now given twelve years to this work. I have seen wonderful changes. I have seen men with painted faces and feathers following the leader on to darkness and death. I have seen the same men, clothed and in their right minds, standing before a heathen audience of their own people and I heard one say, only last week: "Men and brethren, you know me as a man fierce in war—a man whose hands are stained with blood—a man bearing many wounds. My body still bears the marks, but Christ has made me whole. I am another man. My body is the same, but my heart is new. My soul is clean; my will has changed; I think differently. The Gospel has renewed me." It was one of the grandest pleas for the Gospel I ever heard. O! will you not empty your gold and your silver into the treasury? Will you not advance and take every post as fast as ready to surrender? Let us guard these people with a great army of the Lord. Send on the advance guard and bring up your reinforcements. I do not want to fall till I see Dakota taken for the Lord!

SPEECH OF AN INDIAN CHIEF.

"This land which lies about us was once the property of my people; you have now possession of it and have made yourselves homes and are rearing your families on the land which formerly belonged to my forefathers. I have no complaint to make of this fact, for it is perhaps better as it is. Our desire is to become like the white man; to learn to cultivate the land and to make a living from it; to learn to read and to write and to transact business; to learn the principles of government and become citizens; to acquire title to 160 acres for each member of our tribe. We have faith in the Great Spirit and in the Great Father at Washington, and believe that in time your people will teach my people to be like you; the Negro's skin is darker than ours, and you have made a man of him; we ask the Government to do us the same justice."

FROM OAHE, DAKOTA.

We are in the midst of the closing exercises of school for the year past. Some three or four hundred Indians, chiefly relatives of pupils, are now encamped about us. These have come some as far as ninety miles, and some few a hundred and twenty-five miles, to attend the exercises and take their children home.

REVIEW OF THE YEAR.

The fiscal year of our Chinese missions closed Aug. 31. We give below a statement of the year's work, made as complete as the space will allow:

1. Seventeen missions have been sustained during a part or the whole of the year. Ten of these have had no intermission whatever, except for a day or two at the holidays, and in one instance a fortnight's vacation. Of the remaining seven, three are new missions, viz: Los Angeles, San Buenaventura and Tuscon. The work at these points is full of interest and hope, and has indeed already begun to yield what seem to us saving results.

2. Thirty-nine workers have been engaged. Of these, fourteen are Chinese brethren, converted in connection with our missions, and trained to the work in the work itself. The aggregate number of months of service is 295.

3. In comparison with the record of the previous year, but little change can be noted. The total number enrolled is 1,131, being larger by 87, but on the whole one record is about the equivalent of the other. Indeed, it seems to me that in both years we reached very near to the outmost limit of what is possible with the means at our command. The special interest of this year's history centers in the attempt to do, and to learn better how to do, evangelistic work. Three of our brethren have been set apart to this, and have been followed from place to place by the prayers of many. They had much to learn when they started forth and have much yet to learn. It is by no means clear to me that we have hit upon the wisest methods, and I know we have not yet entered into the fullness of power, either with God or man. Yet I can see that these brethren are stronger and braver and more eager in this work than they were a year ago. And the blessing of God on their labors has been such as enables us to believe that at least sixty of their countrymen have been led to Christ. This carries the whole number concerning whom this hope has been cherished, since the beginning of our work, above 700.

4. THE FINANCES. Our expenditures have been: For salaries of workers, $6,403.00; for rents of mission houses, $2,066.00; for incidental expenses, $1,150.15; total, $9,619.15. Our resources have been: From the parent society, $6,100; balance from previous year, $45.50; offerings made through the treasury of this auxiliary, $2,590.80; total, $8,736.30. This leaves a deficit of $882.85, a part of which can be met from our Permanent Property Account, but fully $500.00 needs yet to be secured if we are to provide things honest in the sight of all men. Thus far in the history of our mission, the account of no year has closed with the blot of a deficit upon it. The account of the year just ended is held open for awhile in the hope that the good precedent of the past may still be maintained. And, oh, if we might be a little less hampered by poverty;—if we might be set free to enter opened doors, and to make the most possible of our opportunities, how great would be the privilege and joy of showing in blessed experiment that the truest economy is a wise and careful generosity.

THE DANIEL HAND EDUCATIONAL FUND FOR COLORED PEOPLE.

At the Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association held in Providence, R. I., October 23d-25th, the announcement was made that the Association had received during the week the largest gift ever made in this country by a living donor to a benevolent society. Daniel Hand, of Guilford, Conn., formerly a merchant in the South, had given to the Association $1,000,894.25, in interest-bearing securities, to be held in trust, and to be known as the Daniel Hand Educational Fund for Colored People.

This gift, large and munificent as it is, has its limitations, and will be held and administered on the following conditions :

1. It is a trust and is to be permanently invested. The income, therefore, is all that can be used and its benefit to the Association will be only the amount of that annual income.

2. It is to be used exclusively for the primary, industrial and normal education of the colored people in the Southern States. It will not, therefore, aid the Association in the collegiate or theological education of the colored people, nor in its Church work, nor in its efforts among the Mountain Whites, the Indians or the Chinese.

3. It will be devoted entirely to new work, making it thus distinctively additional to that which the Association, as the representative of the churches, has now undertaken in all departments of its work. Any falling off, therefore, in the ordinary receipts of the Association cannot be made good out of the Daniel Hand Fund.

4. It will be applied only to scholars and schools under the care and control of the Association, which, in this case, will adhere to its established rule, that appropriations, responsibility and supervision must go together.

5. It will be appropriated to scholarships, support of teachers, to buildings and to furnishing tools and materials for industrial training. No extensive outlay will be made for the present in buildings.

This great gift is alike patriotic, philanthropic and Christian, and is worthy of the highest praise in the distinctive features of its bestowment. It was made after mature deliberation ; it was during the life-time of the donor, thus avoiding the possibility of future litigation; and it is a permanent fund, thus securing its perpetual usefulness ; its conditions are simple, easily applicable, practical, and not tied down by limitations that would render it inoperative in a change of circumstances. It is bestowed upon a race whose wants the donor well understood, and it is entrusted to a society that from the first, amid obloquy and danger, had been true to the colored man.

This gift is not intended to relieve the patrons of the Association or the friends of the Negro from their responsibility to him ; nor is it intended to pauperize the Negro himself, but rather to encourage him to more earnest efforts to make a man of himself by knowledge, by the industries of life, by acquiring property and by becoming a useful citizen.

OUT OF DEBT.

"We had a jubilee meeting at the church last night, but none of the ul..ee Singers to assist us. Still we managed to sing some.

"Our church is out of debt. No man or woman has a dollar's claim upon it. Why, we were just as happy as possible over it. Some who brought money, expecting to give it, were told it was not needed. There were those who had already given generously. Marion Congregational church don't believe in stingy Christians. When they gave their hearts to Jesus, they also gave their pocket-books and contents. Next Sabbath morning, every stroke of the bell will proclaim 'out of debt.' H. M. L."

Selma.

"February 12th, went to Selma, preaching every night for several weeks, except Saturday.

"The meetings in Selma were blessed. I can not tell the number of hopeful conversions, the congregation changed so from night to night; I should judge near two hundred in all.

"The Baptist minister told me that over sixty joined his church. Little Zion, I was told, received as many or more, and the Episcopal Methodist I think more than either.

"We organized the church the 12th of May. Forty-one had given me their names, and most of them were examined; but the day when the church was organized some were away, some were sick, so only twenty-six united. The next Sabbath five more of them united, making thirty-one. I think if they have a good minister, the church will grow rapidly.

"I found numbers that had joined the other churches, regretted they did not know we were to organize a Congregational church; they would have preferred that. Several young men will take letters and join the new church, and study for the ministry. I found ten, the day before I left, who said they were expecting to offer themselves soon to the church.

"I consider it a very promising field.

"Three of the colored ministers wished to place themselves under my care in theology, to direct and assist in study. One was under my care a few weeks, and, as he expressed it, 'it helped him mightily.'

FRATERNAL FEELING.

'There is more fraternal feeling among white Christians and business men here than other places South. The white ministers treated me with great kindness. The Presbyterian, especially, said he was rejoiced to see the work I was doing among the colored people. His field was large, he could not do it; but he would assist me in any way possible. He found himself in the midst of a revival, as my meeting was progressing; invited me to attend his as often as I could and take a part.

"They also took an interest in the schools, spoke of them in high terms, and the teachers under your care. They felt they were devoted to their work.

"Several business men engaged in manufacturing, who have colored men in their employ, spoke of the change they could see in some of them, and the pleasure they felt in view of the fact that they were to have ministers that could instruct and watch over them.

"There are in Selma, I am told, five thousand colored persons, and not one half of them members of any church, and but a little more than half of the children in Sabbath-schools.

"The region near Selma is all open. I held an evening service four miles north of the city; a large company were gathered in the grove; they desire preaching every Sabbath, and wish to be organized into a church as we have in Selma. (Some of them were present when we organized there.)

"Those living near the city wished to unite at Selma, but I advised them to wait and all go together and form a branch church. There are over thirty, they told me, that are ready now to go into such a church, and there is a large settlement of them. I think with some labor a church of sixty members could be gathered. They want a school; said they would build a house.

"On the New-Orleans Railroad there is a good opening for meetings, some ten miles from the city. Also on the Gulf Railroad there are three points where they want meetings. All these points could be supplied with colored men who could spend a part of their time through the week with the white minister at Selma, and receive such assistance as would render them successful preachers among their people, and would need but little aid from the society, the colored people supporting them mostly.

"I think there can be three more Congregational churches gathered near Selma, in different directions, that will grow to be efficient churches if they can have a little help.

"Yours fraternally, D. R. MILLER."

Montgomery.

"The AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION has just completed the erection of a beautiful house of worship for the Congregational church, near the Swayne school-house. Mr. T. C. Steward, agent of the Association, purchased 3½ acres of land near the place indicated, some time ago, and, under the auspices of the Association, Mr. Steward has succeeded in having this beautiful church built, at a cost of only $3200, all told. The church is built entirely of Alabama pine, has a seating capacity of about 350, is well ventilated, and presents a very commanding appearance. The pulpit of the church is a beautiful piece of work; the pine is beautifully self-grained, equal to curled maple. Beneath the building will be placed the heating apparatus.

"Mr. Steward has already sold to industrious families several lots from the body of the tract purchased by him, and a little town is being built up around the church, of steady, sober, industrious people. One of the conditions exacted of every person who makes application to purchase a lot from the Association, is that he be an industrious and sober citizen. The locality has been settled so rapidly since the commencement of the church, that it is now known as 'New-Montgomery.' We understand that the Association has built quite a large number of churches and school-houses throughout the South, and that great success has been met with in every locality. Mr. Steward will go to Nashville, in a few days, and superintend the erection of the buildings there of the Fisk University. The new church here has, at present, but few members, having had no place of worship before. But the prospects are flattering for a large congregation, and in a few weeks a minister will arrive and take charge of the church.

"The carpenter who contracted for, and superintended the construction of, this church is Samuel Phillips, a colored man, well known in this community as an industrious and successful mechanic. We are glad at all times to note every evidence of the steady growth of our city, and those of our citizens who have not visited that portion of the city where the Congregational church is built, for some time, will be surprised to see the many evidences of prosperity exhibited in the new buildings already completed and others in process of construction."—State Journal, Montgomery, Ala., August 18, 1872.

BRIEF HISTORY.

The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846, its distinctive characteristic being freedom from all complicity with slavery and caste.

The object as stated in its constitution is, "To conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort."

It began its work in Foreign Missions in Africa, Siam, Sandwich Islands, West Indies; and its work in our own country, in the Western States and among the Indians.

In 1848 it began work in the South among whites and blacks, although attended with great opposition and danger.

In 1852 it undertook to reach the Chinese in California, the plans ripening in 1870 to successful work.

In 1861, during the civil war, it began the enlargement of work in the South, which has been marked by steady progress and success.

In 1882 it transferred its Foreign Missions and enlarged its Indian work by receiving the Indian Missions of the American Board.

The work of the American Missionary Association is therefore at present among the Chinese in California, the North American Indians and the needy classes of our Southern States.

BY REV. ARTHUR LITTLE, D.D.

"In the year that King Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

"Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

"And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the LORD of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.

"And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

"Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts.

"Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

"And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

"Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me." ISAIAH VI., 1-8.

The biography of Isaiah is very brief. "Isaiah the son of Amoz." This, with the date of his appearance and the names of two sons, is all, excepting a single reference to him in the Book of Chronicles. Glad indeed should we be to know more of the history of this opulent life.

Fortunately there is a little bit of autobiography recorded in the sixth chapter of his prophecy. For this we are grateful, as we always are for personal experiences—glimpses into the inner life, the soul history of those we honor.

Isaiah had probably been exercising the prophetic function prior to this time; how long cannot be known. In any event, a critical juncture has now been reached in his spiritual history, where his future career is largely to be determined. It is possible that he is disheartened by the meagreness of his success, and is sharing for the moment the despondency of Elijah under the juniper tree. Be this as it may, a crisis in his history has come, when he is to be equipped for a larger, gladder, sublimer service. So much of meaning does it hold for him that he has thought it worth while to make this permanent record of it. Its personal character invests it with a peculiar interest for us. We like to be taken into the confidences of great men, to get glimpses into their inner life, to study their words and methods, the working of their minds in the decisive hours, to discover the forces that inform, inspire, and empower them for a lofty mission, to acquaint ourselves with the tuitional agencies that have schooled them for memorable service.

Isaiah has lifted the veil and disclosed to us the secret of his unrivalled distinction among the prophets. We are permitted to see him in that supreme moment when he is laying hold on that for which he was laid hold on by Him who called him to the prophetic office. What his native endowments and acquired gifts may have been, we can never know. Whether or not he ever studied in the schools of the prophets is not told us. Living in Jerusalem, he must have come into contact with the best culture of the day. This, however, would quite likely disqualify rather than equip him for any heroic service. The key to his life-work may be discovered in the incident before us this evening.

It is the record of special preparation for special service in a time of special need. Indeed, it was the prophet's mission to meet exigencies. There are in this chapter of God's dealing with a human soul, lessons of value to us who live in these critical times. May the Divine Spirit assist us in the application of some of these lessons to-night. "The Transforming power of Visions of God," is the theme to which your attention is invited. In the unfolding of this subject let us consider some details of the vision and its effects.

To dwell particularly upon the details of this sublime vision would be a waste of time. It transcends human comprehension and defies human analysis. This mode of procedure, however, accords fully with what is elsewhere revealed to us of the divine economy in dealing with men. At intervals of time, more or less remote, all through the preceding centuries memorable theophanies appear. God walks in the garden in the cool of the day, talks with Abraham, makes blessed disclosures of himself to the slumbering Jacob, reveals himself to Moses in the burning bush, descends in awful majesty and holds converse with him amid the thunderings and lightnings of Mount Sinai, speaks to Samuel, whispers to Elijah in "the still, small voice," and appears in all his spotless purity to Job.

We are awed into silence as we read these inspired accounts of the holy God down among sinning men—the Creator condescending to hold converse with the creature. But the vision vouchsafed Isaiah seems to exceed all previous theophanies in certain elements of awfulness and grandeur, and reminds the reader of the majestic apocalyptic vision of the Apostle John on the isle of Patmos. The throne, the train of the King filling the temple, the seraphim with faces and feet covered, chanting the sublime Trisagion, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord God of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory," the posts of the doors trembling at the voice of him who cried, the house filled with smoke—these are the fitting and imposing concomitants attending this majestic display of royalty. How overwhelming to mortal eyes must this awful Epiphany have appeared. Imagination's utmost flight will fail to grasp its surpassing glory.

1. The first effect a profounder view of God.

The significant fact of practical import to us is this, that Isaiah now found himself face to face with Jehovah, the second person in the adorable Trinity, as we learn from the Gospel of John, (xii)—in a far more real and personal way than ever before. His eyes saw the King, the Lord of hosts. No matter how. The ecstacy we may never comprehend. It is to be expected that "He who dwelleth in light which no man can approach unto," will make disclosures of his dazzling brightness to mortal vision in ways that transcend human knowledge. The truth which this incident holds for us can be appropriated without such knowledge.

Certainly the vision was congruous with existing conditions of time and circumstance. Somehow in upon his wondering view were flashed such vivid manifestations of God's majesty and might, excellence and holiness, that the prophet felt himself to be in the very immediate presence of the high and holy One who inhabiteth eternity, whose name is holy. And in order to deepen the impression upon his mind, the ear as well as the eye becomes enlisted in the glorious Epiphany, and the seraphim, those fiery ones, for once and only once in all the inspired record of God's redeeming work on earth, drop their harps, and, swift of wing, hastening to the scene, chant in exalted measure one strain of heaven's unending song, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory," the joyful prelude—shall we think?—of that angelic anthem whose glad notes thrilled the hearts of the shepherds upon the plains of Bethlehem, on that memorable night, when in a lowly stall, this same resplendent being laid aside his glory and became incarnate in the person of the Son of Man.

The supreme abiding impression made by this imposing theophany upon the mind of the prophet is that of the holiness of God. This is indeed His essential attribute. This is the name by which he calls Himself. When Jacob awaked out of his sleep he exclaimed, "Surely God was in this place and I knew it not." And he was afraid and said, "How dreadful is this place: this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

To Moses, God said, "Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." And Moses hid his face, for he was afraid to look upon God. The whole Jewish cultus was designed to impress upon the mind of the worshiper the thought of God's holiness.

This is the essence of the vision to Isaiah. Jehovah sits before him clothed in a garment of holiness. This is the key to his whole character. In this all his other attributes, of necessity, inhere. This guarantees his righteousness, justice, goodness, love, mercy, truth. In this august character as a God of Holiness, he aimed always to keep himself before his people. On their remembrance or forgetfulness of this turned, as upon a pivot, their personal and National weal or woe. It was the chief mission of prophets, those meteor-like messengers of Jehovah, to make and keep real, living, and potential in the minds of the people, the comprehensive truth of God's holiness. On everything must be written "Holiness to the Lord." "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

"Holiness" is the key-word of the Bible, the epitome of heaven. This thought Isaiah got burnt into his soul that day. "God is holiness." It quite took possession of his being, so that for the moment it unmanned him. Visions of God interpreted into articulate speech mean holiness in a way much more vivid and real than can be read in the strata of the earth or among the stars.

Brethren, for us something akin to this vision is sorely needed. It is not for prophets and apostles only, or rather, are not all God's people prophets and apostles now? It was a sad time in the days of Samuel when it was declared that there were no open visions. The ministry and membership of our churches, and through their agency, the world, would find themselves quickened and helped by profounder, ampler views of God. The quality and permanence of our work will depend largely upon the place He holds in our habitual thoughts. There is a tendency now to minimize, almost humanize, God, as if He were altogether an easy-going, good-natured Being, ready to play himself into all our moods and humors, not very particular about his government, or law, or sin, or the enforcement of penalty. God is love. There is not a more comprehensive and precious truth in the Bible than this; but even this truth may be so interpreted as to rob Him of the correlated attribute of justice which is, of necessity, the other hemisphere of any full-orbed love. No small part of the pulpit utterance of the day finds its inspiration in the thought of the Fatherhood of God. This commanding truth permeates the Bible through and through, and ought to be made salient in all Christian teaching; and yet it is misleading to make the impression that the paternal heart makes no distinction between a rebellious and an obedient child. It is not uncommon to hear the affirmation that God is under the obligation of love to save sinners. Men, sinful men, need to speak with great caution when they venture the assertion that God ought to save them; for salvation is of grace, else the Gospel is of none effect. God's compassion is as boundless as his holiness, but it does not therefore follow that he will not punish sin, or limit the provisions of grace. Such exalted visions of Jehovah as came to the prophet are suited to make a human mind, a creature of a day, hesitate about the construction of a complete theodicy, affirming when a sinfnl man or a race has or has not had a fair chance.

Something equivalent to Isaiah's vision of Jehovah is needed now. For now there is a most determined effort to eliminate the so-called supernatural from the realm of thought, as an anachronism, or old superstition. Many, in this Christian land, claim to be seriously asking the question, "Is there a God?" Some answer, "No." Some "We don't know." Some name him, or it, "Force." Some rhapsodize over a divine immanence without personality. Some declare that whatever he may be, he is helplessly enmeshed in a network of inexorable laws, while some sickly sentimental souls are enamored with the dreams, vagaries, subtleties and deceit of oriental theosophy. And more dangerous than all, the old worn out theories of Hume and Strauss are received and popularized in fascinating works of fiction—one of the most congenial avenues of approach to unsuspecting souls.

At such a time there is need of a freshened sense of the living, eternal God, some authentication of the divine personality and presence, so powerful, so surcharged with celestial fire as to startle these self-complacent dreamers into wakefulness and burn to ashes their speculations and conceits. God has a right to be known and heard and understood. He is not asleep, or off on a journey, or holding himself aloof from active participation in this world's affairs. He still lives, and we still live and move and have our being in Him.

Surer, fuller, clearer manifestations of Him are possible to us who live in this favored hour, when the "day has dawned and the day star appeared in our hearts," than could have greeted the eyes and sustained the souls of patriarchs and prophets. Not, indeed, in ecstatic vision, but in ways more real and vital. Those were but faint adumbrations of more real and vital things to come. Never were men so culpable for dedicating altars to unknown gods as those who live in the full-orbed light that shines upon this favored land. Never did the heavens so illustriously declare the glory of God, and the firmanent show His handiwork as to-day. Never did His holy word stand so fully vindicated before the world, and utter its voice with such commanding authority as now. Never was the Christ of history so central in the world's thought and so conspicuous in the world's attention as to-day. They had a flickering lamp. We have the inextinguishable sun. How intimately ought we to know God! For Christ, who is the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person, the fullness of the Godhead bodily, has come to show us the Father, and he that hath seen Christ hath seen the Father.

The Shekinah, incarnated and dwelling among men, ought to be something far more real and near than was possible with all its resplendent glory as it brooded over the mercy seat. Not in the wind, or earthquake, or fire, but in the still small voice to us he speaks. The experience described by the apostle in his second epistle to the Corinthians may be ours. "We all with unveiled face, reflecting in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the Lord, the spirit." Blessed transformation this indeed!

(2.) The second effect of the vision was a profounder view of sin.

"Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips." His own condition first arrests his attention. It is intensely personal—

"Me," "I." This deep experience is not inconsistent with a previous choice of God and His service. The apostles were transformed by their experience in that upper chamber and on the day of Pentecost. The profoundest views of sin are to be expected, not at the beginning, but at the end, of the believer's life. It is in the latest of Paul's epistles that he calls himself the "chief of sinners." One's views of sin are likely to be very closely correlated to one's views of God's holiness. The more holy He seems to us, the more unholy we seem to ourselves. Low views of God and low views of sin belong together. And low views of God and low views of sin are likewise found in the same group with low views of man.

He who has the most exalted thought of God, the most discerning sense of sin, has likewise and because of this, the most adequate conception of man as he was originally created in the divine image, and as he may be re-created and fashioned anew in the likeness of God through Jesus Christ.

Under the inflashing and penetrating light that fell upon Isaiah, while in that ecstatic mood, with dismay and horror, deep down in the hitherto unexplored recesses of his heart—fathomless to man—he discovered subtle forms and forces of sin and uncleanness never detected before. It was like throwing a calcium light into a sunless cavern. So overwhelmed was he by the sight that from his quivering lips was wrung the agonizing cry, "Woe is me for I am undone, I am a man of unclean lips." Those secret faults, never before seen, or long since forgotten, rose like mountains before him and filled him with a sense of utter helplessness. It was as if the prayer of the Psalmist had been offered and answered: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me; lead me in the way everlasting."

That is an awful moment when, under the white light of eternity, a man looks clear down into the bottom of his soul and sees himself even for a little, as God sees him all the time. Isaiah's experience recalls that of Job when he exclaims, "I have heard of thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee, wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes," and that of Peter who fell down at Jesus' knees saying, "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." When sinful man comes face to face with Him who is of purer eyes than to behold evil and who cannot look upon iniquity, he cannot help being smitten with an overwhelming sense of personal unworthiness. God's holiness is the sinner's wretchedness. If one has no consciousness of sin, one has no consciousness of God.

With this vivid sense of personal uncleanness there came instantly a fresh glimpse of the uncleanness of his people. It was kind in him to identify himself with his people in a common charge of uncleanness. "I dwell among a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the king, the Lord of hosts." Possibly close contact with such a people had lowered the quality of his own spiritual life; for it is not easy for the best men to escape the influence of their environment. With this clearer discernment of God's character and his own character, the prophet is prepared to make a more just estimate of his people. With freshly anointed vision he can more clearly discern their real condition. He now has a new standard of measurement. He has seen how men look close to God. And this is his terse characterization of them—"a people of unclean lips." It may be said that this people was apparently very prosperous now. The reign of Uzziah had been long and successful. He had strengthened the defences of Jerusalem, encouraged agricultural pursuits, increased the army, been a good man and wise king. Upon the surface the prospect for continued prosperity to the kingdom seemed good. But the visible tokens were misleading, as they often are. A tree may be blossoming and even bearing some fruit at the very moment it is dying at the root.

With clarified vision Isaiah looked below the surface and saw the nation dying at the root, because of its uncleanness—drunkenness, Sabbath desecration, robbery, bribery, commercial greed, oppression of the poor, blasphemy, idolatry, luxury, externalism in worship—sins like scarlet and crimson of deepest dye—how horrified and burdened in heart the prophet was as he got this fresh glimpse of the uncleanness of his people. Truly "their hands were full of blood."

With new meaning and power to the mind of the awe-stricken seer must have come home such eternal truths as these: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people;" "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God;" so that we do not wonder that into the very centre of one of his most glowing prophecies concerning the conversion of the Gentiles he interjects these solemn words, "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; Yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Alas! "I dwell among a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the king, the Lord of hosts." How blind I was before! With what painful distinctness I see it now! "Oh! Sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters! They have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward." What an awful monochromatic—black—the picture is.

A deepened sense of sin would be of great value to us. Prof. Fisher remarks, "How well it has been said that sin is the one mystery that makes everything else plain. Superficial views on the subject of sin, where the views are not absolutely false and anti-christian lie at the foundation of most of the infidel theories. A truly profound and just view of this subject is the one grand correction." Says Dr. Hopkins, "Christianity differs from other religions in being a remedial system wholly conditioned on the fact of sin. The import and reach of the fact of sin must be understood if we would understand the Bible; for according to that, the whole history of the world, both natural and moral, turns upon it. Without attempting to explain the fact itself of sin, the Bible explains by that all that is perplexing in our present state, whether in man or in nature." In his criticism upon Robert Elsmere, Mr. Gladstone writes, "One feature almost uniformly marks the class of negative writers who do not absolutely exclude religion, but reject Christian dogma and the authority of Scripture. They appear to have a very low estimate both of the quality and quantity of sin, of its amount, spread like a deluge over the world, and of the subtlety, intensity and virulence of its nature. I am bound to believe that the reason why the doctrines of grace are dispensed with by so many writers of the day, is because they have never realized their importance through the sense of sin."

Weighty testimonies these, and well worthy of consideration. The radical trouble with society to-day is sin. Very much is now said about the unfortunate classes—those badly born, badly environed, badly reared, the victims of a bad inheritance of appetites and passions. Intemperance is called disease, and crime is largely the result of circumstances. And while there is a side of truth in this, the tendency is to lighten or quite remove the sense of personal accountability and guilt, and to bestow only pity where there should be blame. For when a large charity has made fullest allowance to bad circumstances of birth and environment, it still remains true that sin—the deliberate choice of evil—is the underlying cause of nearly all our woes. Men can help sinning—all men—else the gospel is a failure. Anarchy has its tangled, ugly roots in godlessness. A man who reverences the divine government will not despise human government. But a man who tramples on divine government may be expected, a fortiori, to defy human. Socialism in its offensive manifestations is a war against the divine wisdom and sovereignty which bestows one talent upon one man, two talents upon another, or five upon another, and makes one star differ from another in glory, without consulting either the man or the star.

A very large proportion of those who complain, perhaps with some reason, of their hard, unequal lot in life, are seeking to improve their condition without improving their character; "A mistake," says Dr. Hopkins, "which is at the root of all formalism and of most superstitions." There are multitudes who would be glad to have the rewards and emoluments of virtue while living in the habitual practice of sin. If they were to receive them, it would be a reversal of the divine order and a premium on wrong doing. Our special menace now is in the domain of the public conscience. This needs careful inspection. It would be in the line of progress for us to recognize the fact that we are, to a considerable extent, a people of unclean lips. A freshened, vivid sense of our real moral attitude as a nation would be helpful and wholesome. It seems hard to say that we, who are the heirs of all the ages, the consummate flower of all past civilizations, with the very best that Christianity has ever yet produced in our possession, in the high noon of a magnificent career, are still a people of unclean lips. Yet there is too much truth in the assertion.

3. A third noticeable effect of this vision is the proffer of instant help—a profounder work of grace.

The prophet is not allowed to remain a moment under the chilling shadow of this conscious helplessness and sin. Swift as light, eager as love, flew one of those seraphic messengers to him, bearing a live coal from off the altar. The full significance of this symbolic action we may never know, yet its real meaning may be inferred from the subsequent effects.

Fire is a symbol of Jehovah. "Our God is a consuming fire." From heaven came the original spark which burned in a perpetual flame upon the temple altar. In flaming fire God shall come at last to judge the world. Fire is a most suggestive emblem of the Holy Spirit. "Quench not the Spirit." Only fire can be quenched. Tongues of fire were among the startling phenomena on the day of Pentecost. Fire fuses and purifies and refines and sets pent-up forces free and capacitates them for service. Fire is the very synonym of energy, devotion, zeal, unwearied sacrifice that burns out the life. Flame, almost as much as breath or wind, stands for pure spirit. And so it is substantially true that in the live coal from off the altar, Jehovah is represented as putting himself into chastening, inspiring, energizing contact with his servant, the prophet—the self-enkindled, unwasting flame kissing into purity, hopefulness and testifying power lips but a moment ago tremulous with words of penitence and despair. A purifier and refiner Jehovah sits while this austere baptism—this fiery chrism—enswathes his sin-smitten soul, and his iniquity is taken away and his sin is purged.

What a memorable hour in the history of an immortal soul when it thus feels the touch of God in vivifying, transforming power—a spark of the divine setting on fire a human spirit. The dross consumed, the vision clarified, the heart enlarged, the will empowered, the lips tipped with flame, so that they become the recognized mouth-piece of Jehovah. This is, indeed, the baptism of fire. One is reminded of that profound utterance of the Lord Jesus, "I am come to send fire on the earth: and what will I if it be already kindled? But I have a baptism to be baptized with: and how am I straightened till it be accomplished."

A consuming zeal for God.

There is something akin to Isaiah's experience possible to all of God's children. The Holy Spirit, the tongue of fire, waits, oh! how longingly, to do this work of cleansing, purifying, elevating and empowering the souls of believers and setting them on fire with love and holy enthusiasm in the Master's service. The live coal from off God's altar is the one supreme need of the ministry and the church to-day. The chariot wheels of the conqueror are retarded in their coming quite as much by the inertia of friends as the opposition of foes. The world is waiting to see Christianity christianized. Wealth, numbers, talent, organization, equipment, what are all these but dead weight, without the fire and the indwelling presence and enkindling, vitalizing power of the Holy Spirit? Inert machinery, lifeless, motionless, powerless, valueless. Upon the altar of many a heart and many a church, it is to be feared, that the fire of an early devotion is now smouldering under the ashes of a decaying faith and an easy-going, self-indulgent life—no warmth, no fervor, no zeal, no expectancy, no high enthusiasm, no lofty inspirations, no constraining love whose holy flame burns self-indulgence out of the soul, but the dead calm, the nauseating lukewarmness that conceal themselves under the attractive livery of a self-complacent, outward prosperity, the ominous precursors of spiritual death. The resources of the church to-day are sufficient for the world's speedy conquest to Christ. But they are not at the disposal of Him who accepts only a spontaneous and willing service. If the lips and heart of the ministry and membership of the church could feel the touch of the Pentecostal flame, would it not be the dawn of a new era in aggressive Christian enterprise? Duty would then be a constant delight, and sacrifice a continual joy. Better things than were witnessed on the day of Pentecost ought to be the normal experience of the church now.

4. In the call and answer are seen a fourth effect of the vision, in a profounder sense of personal responsibility.

The prophet's spiritual nature is now aroused. His moral faculties are now alert. His hitherto dull ear is now attent to hear, and his hesitant lips eager to make response. Not now in vain shall Jehovah speak. Not now will the faintest whisper of his voice be lost. Isaiah is now in an attitude of self-surrender, willing to accept any service, anywhere. The purpose of the resplendent vision has been realized. It was not spectacular, but ministrant, not for display, but for empowerment. It was not that he might have a good time, but be prepared for a good service.

A new view of God, a new view of himself, a new view of his people, a new view of the divineness of his call, a new view of the meaning of self-surrender—all this has come to him while under the spell of this ecstatic experience. Indeed, all the great facts that enter into the economy of redemption have been freshened in his thought and rendered vital in his life. The Shekinah has been revealed to him before. It is revealed in him now. Under this focalized light from the throne of Jehovah, upon his highly sensitized soul has been photographed in distinct outline, with suitable perspective, a picture of the exact condition of the imperiled kingdom and the work to be done. He occupies a new point of view and stands with Ariel in the sun. The enchantments, allurements, entanglements of place, wealth, pleasure, power, which so color the picture, blur and bewilder the vision and subsidize in their own interests an unspiritual soul, now vanish. He sees things now under the white light of eternal truth. His eye being single, his whole body is full of light. And so, when the divine call comes, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" instantly an answering voice is heard, "Here am I. Send me." Dear brethren, the very air is tremulous with the voice of God to-day as he asks this question to us. "Whom shall we send and who will go for us?" Trumpet-tongued it utters itself everywhere. It has in it the pathos and tenderness of the crucified one as "he saw the multitudes and was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd; and said unto his disciples, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" This is the question everywhere.

"Whom shall I send and who will go for us into the heart of Africa, to the islands of the sea, to the colored people, the Indians and the Chinese?" Who, if he cannot go in person, will respond in gifts of thought and time and prayer and money? Shall God call in vain? Shall Christ entreat only to be refused? Shall the Holy Spirit whisper only to be grieved? Shall Mr. Fairbanks of India go all the way from New England to Minnesota and not find one young man upon whom he can let fall a mantle soon to be exchanged for garments pure and white? Isaiah was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Swift as his flame-touched lips could frame response, came the answering voice, "Here am I. Send me." Five telling monosyllables make up the ringing answer.

In those crisp words Isaiah disposes of himself forever. How personal! "I," "Me." How spontaneous and eager it seems to be! My friends, we need more consecrated egotism—a finer, deeper, more tremendous sense of personal responsibility in the prosecution of the Lord's work. The pitiful, unanswered call for men is intensely personal in its character. It means exactly you and me. The most significant word in the English language, excepting the name of Deity, is spelled with one letter, and that letter stands near the centre of the alphabet as it does near the centre of being. It is the letter "I." How heavily freighted it is with meaning. It stands for all we shall take with us beyond the grave. This call individualizes us. I can neither hear nor answer for anybody else. Every member of every church is obligated by a Christian profession to answer in spirit this call of God. In intent we are all obliged to hold ourselves ready to be sent. This is apostleship. Nothing else is. "As thou hast sent me into the world even so have I also sent them into the world." "Here am I, send me," is the word that ought to leap spontaneously from the lips of every true disciple of Christ. Send me among black or white, to the home or foreign field.

The King shall command my services for any portion of his realm. What a beautiful chorus it would make if the 450,000 Christian voices in our denomination could be heard catching up and echoing gladly, joyfully, this grand response of the newly consecrated prophet, "Here am I, send me." Such a chorus would make heaven rejoice, and the needy millions of earth shout for joy. All things are now ready, excepting the messengers to carry the good tidings. Yonder is the cry of the starving. Here is the bread, but we can't get it to them. Of course they must die, but in whose skirts will their blood, poor helpless souls, be found.? "Send me." We are in danger of getting lost in organizations, and suffering our personality to be absorbed in corporate bodies and institutions. I must remember that even if my part is very small, nobody else can do it for me. This grand society can't do my work for the colored people and Indian. It can be my servant while I do it. "All at it and always at it," is the perfect description of a working church. O, the tired few and the lazy many in our churches! O, the giving few and the withholding many! O, that a live coal might be brought into contact with the mighty magazine of latent power in our churches, and create an instant explosion, thus releasing this unused energy which wastes by slumbering, and bringing it into action for the honor of God and the service of humanity. For the descent of this kind of fire upon us it is right to pray. We ought to covet the spirit, the clear vision, the lofty enthusiasm of the old prophet. With more of eagerness than he, ought our hearts to say, "Here am I, send me."

The great thoughts, too, which fired his heart and leaped like flaming two-edged swords from his heaven-touched lips, are well suited to our times. His message, at least in part, may well become ours. No words more pertinent and wholesome could be found in which to rebuke Sabbath desecration, intemperance, profanity, impiety, greed for place and gold, political corruption, luxury, extortion, land monopoly, oppression of the poor, religious formalism, than those which came with such directness and incisiveness from his inspired lips. While, on the other hand, no words more full of hope and cheer and courage and tenderness and exultation can be found than those that shine out, like bursts of sunlight, all through his magnificent gospel prophecy. For it is, after all, an evangel of hope. If he felt that he dwelt among a people of unclean lips, he likewise felt with all the vehemence of his freshly endued soul, that he was sent to a people who were to walk in the highway of holiness, the ransomed of the Lord. The only genuine optimism is that which faces the fact of sin in all its awfulness and evil consequences, without paliation or apology for it, and then turns, hopefully, confidently to the cross. Any other is moonshine, a utopian dream, and must end in despair.

Our business this week is with the so-called depressed races. The most powerful and alluring motives that can be urged for their elevation, cluster around the great primal facts of God, law, sin, guilt, immortality and redemption through Jesus Christ. These set in right connections and presented in right proportion are the great informing and propulsive forces for the renovation of society to-day, as truly as when Christ lived on earth and Paul preached. No humanitarian appeals, however eloquent and pathetic, can equal these in permanence and power. There isn't a sinning man in the land to-night so meanly clad, that he doesn't need a new heart more than a new coat and a decrease of the wages of his sins more than an increase in the wages of daily toil, or who wouldn't find the shortest cut to a good coat and good wages through the simple way of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The cross is still the irresistibly attracting power in the world to-day, and the cross signifies what Isaiah experienced, cleansing and empowering. The perpetual miracle of the ages is seen in the sacrifices and denials men and women are willing to make under its inspiration, and in the lives which have been rescued and transformed by its invisible power. "Without God and without hope in the world," is the melancholy epitaph written in the buried ruins of all the ancient empires of earth. Modern civilization without God is just as weak and perishable as the ancient.

Railroads, telegraphs, newspapers, electric light, wheat fields, mines, forests, mammoth corporations, secular education, democratic form of Government, contain in themselves no conserving power for a Nation. They may precipitate its doom. The same sins and vices that destroyed Jerusalem will destroy Chicago, Boston and New York. The same obedience to God and his law that would have saved Jerusalem, will save Chicago, Boston and New York. Doubtless Isaiah's preaching was the principal factor in Hezekiah's successful reign and the work of reformation accomplished by him. The essential conditions of weal or woe have not changed one whit since Abraham's mighty plea was made for sinful Sodom. Righteous men would have been invaluable then. They are not less so now. God is eternal. His laws are eternal. Righteousness is always safe. Unrighteousness is always dangerous. "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord," is a sweet refrain which may be sung in all time and of all people. In dealing with these depressed races it is not a question of color, of origin, of superiority or inferiority, of governing class or governed class, of a few more or a few less foreigners, but a question of righteousness. In proportion as Jehovah is lifted up and magnified, and sin appears in all its personal enormity and guilt, men will be less inclined to dwell upon any supposed superiority by reason of color or birth, or place of nativity, and more inclined to magnify the grace of God that has made them in any sort to differ. How quickly prerogative, prescriptive rights, and caste, fade away under the clear light of the divine sovereignty. This mighty truth became a thunderbolt in the hand of the Genevan reformer, in the masterly wielding of which he made kings and hierarchs to tremble and to feel that in God's sight the most exalted as well as the most humble are only sinful men, thus paving the way for future commonwealths. God is in the problem that vexes us, a near and interested Spectator and Actor. His law is concerned in its solution. It is an unspeakable comfort and inspiration to realize that he is so totally in it that it is, after all, His problem and not ours. We are at most only co-laborers with him in his mighty movement across the centuries of human history. Almost our only solicitude should be how to so keep in touch with Him that He can use us. The hidings of his power we need to find. The secret place of his habitation should be with us a familiar resort. That upper chamber we ought to know the way to. So constantly, steadily, intently, ought we to gaze upon his image as reflected in his word and in his movements among men, that we shall be changed into the same image, from glory to glory. When God seems great and real to us because he created us, man seems great and real to us becausc he is made in the image of God, and sin seems great and real to us because it has defiled this divinely created image, and Christ seems great and real to us because his grace and love can save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him, we shall have before us the most thrilling and abiding incentives to service, and the factitious and fictitious distinctions as to race and color will disappear. Isaiah's widened and clarified vision took in the Gentile nations, and his flame-touched lips uttered glowing words of comfort and hope for all the world. Ho! every one. During these days of Christian conference and fellowship, may we not hope that this consecrated place may be filled—signally filled—with the divine presence, the Shekinah, the great facts of our faith be made more vivid and real to us, the strenuous calls to labor more cogent and distinct, our lips touched with the live coal from off God's altar, the Pentecostal flame fall upon us, and all our hearts be cleansed and anointed for a higher, holier and more faithful service?

The Lord help us, and through us the churches, in this huor of open doors and exigent demands, to see, to hear, to realize, and, with cheerful hearts, to make response. "O Thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth. Before Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Manasseh, stir up thy strength and come and save us," and thy name shall have the praise forever. Amen.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. I. This Society shall be called the American Missionary Association.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own country and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Members of evangelical churches may be constituted members of this Association for life by the payment of thirty dollars into its treasury, with the written declaration at the time or times of payment that the sum is to be applied to constitute a designated person a life member; and such membership shall begin sixty days after the payment shall have been completed. Other persons, by the payment of the same sum, may be made life members, without the privilege of voting.

Every evangelical church which has within a year contributed to the funds of the Association, and every State Conference or Association of such churches, may appoint two delegates to the Annual Meeting of the Association; such delegates, duly attested by credentials, shall be members of the Association for the year for which they were thus appointed.

ART. IV. The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be held in the month of October or November, at such time and place as may be designated by the Association, or, in case of its failure to act, by the Executive Committee, by notice printed in the official publication of the Association for the preceding month.

ART. V. The officers of the Association shall be a President, five Vice-Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, Auditors, and an Executive Committee of fifteen members, all of whom shall be elected by ballot.

At the first Annual Meeting after the adoption of this Constitution, five members of the Executive Committee shall be elected for the term of one year, five for two years and five for three years, and at each subsequent Annual Meeting five members shall be elected for the full term of three years, and such others as shall be required to fill vacancies.

ART. VI. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds, the appointing, counseling, sustaining and dismissing of missionaries and agents, and the selection of missionary fields. They shall have authority to fill all vacancies in office occurring between the Annual Meetings; to apply to any Legislature for acts of incorporation, or conferring corporate powers; to make provision when necessary for disabled missionaries and for the widows and children of deceased missionaries, and in general to transact all such business as usually appertains to the Executive Committees of missionary and other benevolent societies. The acts of the Committee shall be subject to the revision of the Annual Meeting.

Five members of the Committee constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VII. No person shall be made an officer of this Association who is not a member of some evangelical church.

ART. VIII. Missionary bodies and churches or individuals may appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. IX. No amendment shall be made to this Constitution except by the vote of two-thirds of the members present at an Annual Meeting and voting, the amendment having been approved by the vote of a majority at the previous Annual Meeting.

CHARTER OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION,

Being Chapter Three Hundred and Fifty-Eight of the Laws of 1862, as Amended by Chapter Seven Hundred and Ninety-Six of the Laws of 1871, Chapter Fifty-Two of the Laws of 1886, and Chapter Three Hundred and Ninety-Five of the Laws of 1889, of the State of New York.

The people of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SEC. I. William E. Whiting, Thomas Ritter, Henry Belden, James O. Bennett, Anthony Lane, Thomas C. Fanning, Samuel Wilde, C. B. Wilder, John Lowry, Josiah Brewer, William B. Brown, Alonzo S. Ball, Lewis Tappan, S. S. Jocelyn and George Whipple, and others now acting as officers and members of the American Missionary Association, located in the city of New York, together with such others as may be hereafter associated with, or succeed them, shall be and are hereby constituted a body corporate, by the name of "THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION," for the purpose of conducting missionary and educational operations, and diffusing a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, in the United States, and in other countries.

SEC. 2. The said corporation shall possess the general powers and be subjected to the provisions contained in the third title of chapter eighteen of the first part of the Revised Statutes, so far as the same are applicable, and have not been repealed or modified, and is hereby authorized to hold its meetings in any State or Territory of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. The management of the affairs and concerns of the said corporation shall be conducted by an Executive Committee, to be from time to time appointed or elected by the said Association, and to consist of not less than twelve members, any five of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of its business; and all persons now holding office in said Association shall be like officers in said corporation, and with like functions until the next annual meeting of the Association.

SEC. 4. The said corporation shall have power to receive and disburse funds, and to purchase, receive, hold and take by donation, deed, devise or bequest, any real or personal estate which has been or may hereafter be given, granted, devised or bequeathed to it for the purpose stated in section first, or which may accrue from the use of the same; subject, however, to the provisions of chapter three hundred and sixty of the laws of eighteen hundred and sixty, entitled "An Act Relating to Wills;" but it shall at no time hold property the annual income of which shall exceed one hundred thousand dollars, and shall always have full power to grant, bargain, lease, or otherwise dispose of the same, provided, that the proceeds from such grant, bargain, lease, or disposal shall never, in any manner, be diverted to any other purpose than that for which the property was originally donated.

BY-LAWS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

ART. I.—MEETINGS.

The Committee shall hold its regular meetings on the second Monday of each month, at four o'clock, P. M. Special meetings may be called at the written request of any two members of the Committee; the call for any such special meeting and the notices sent out shall state the business to be considered.

Only members of the Executive Committee shall attend its meetings, but the Committee may by vote invite the presence of any other person on special occasions.

Notices of the regular and special meetings of the Committee shall be sent by mail to its members, or otherwise communicated in writing, at least one day previous to the time of meeting.

ART. II.—OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES.

At the first regular meeting of the Committee after the Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, a Chairman, a Vice-Chairman and Recording Secretary shall be chosen by ballot, who shall hold office for one year, or until their successors are elected. At the same meeting, the following Standing Committees for the year shall be appointed, to consist of five members each:

1. A Committee on Finance, one of whom shall be the Chairman of the Executive Committee.
2. A Committee on Southern Work.
3. A Committee on Indian and Chinese Work.

A Committee on Appropriations, of four members, shall also be formed each year in the manner hereafter designated.

ART. III.—DUTIES OF OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES.

CHAIRMAN.—It shall be the duty of the Chairman to preside at all meetings of the Committee, to facilitate the transaction of its business, to sign, when necessary, checks upon the bank accounts of the Association, and to appoint all standing and special committees not otherwise provided for, subject to the approval of the Executive Committee.

VICE-CHAIRMAN.—In the absence of the Chairman, or in his inability to act, the Vice-Chairman shall perform his duties.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN.—In the absence or inability of both, a temporary Chairman may be appointed by the Executive Committee.

RECORDING SECRETARY.—The Recording Secretary shall keep the minutes of the Committee, and read them at its regular meetings. He shall cause all Committees to be notified, in writing, of their appointment within twenty-four hours thereafter, and shall inform them of the business referred to them. In his absence or inability to act the Chairman shall appoint a substitute.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee, before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with his statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statement when approved by them. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. This book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the members of the Executive Committee, and the record shall be so added to and amended, from time to time, under the direction of the Finance Committee, as to show at all times a correct statement of the property of the Association, and of any special trusts in its hands. All title deeds to real estate and certificates of stocks and bonds owned by the Association shall be in the charge of this Committee, who shall provide a proper place for their safe keeping. This Committee shall, when occasion requires, direct the sale and transfer of stocks, invest any funds of the Association not required or designed for current expenses, and in general shall have the oversight of the financial concerns of the Association, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

OTHER STANDING COMMITTEES.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Southern Work and of that on Indian and Chinese Work to report to the Executive Committee, at its regular meeting every month, such suggestions or proposed action as shall seem to them desirable for furthering the efficiency and economy of the Missionary and Educational Work of the Association in their respective departments. They shall also have power to manage the current work of the Association assigned to them, subject to the general supervision and direction of the Executive Committee.

Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee), and may consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Chairmen of the first three Standing Committees.

Each of these Standing Committees shall elect a Chairman and a Secretary from their own number.

Special Committees may be appointed from time to time, as required.

Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee.

All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them, with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

ART. IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various standing committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient working of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of the Chairman of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all money contributed or intrusted to the Association, and to give receipts therefor; to deposit it to the credit of the Association in such bank or institution as may be designated by the Finance Committee; to keep clear and accurate accounts of all sums received and expended by the Association; to make payments and remittances in accordance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to indorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purposes of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them.

His books of account and vouchers for payments shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

It shall be his duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee such financial business as needs their action.

ART. VI.—DISTRICT SECRETARIES AND OTHER AGENTS.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries and other Agents as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches, collect funds, and perform such other duties as may be assigned them, and who shall also prepare and present through the Corresponding Secretaries to the Executive Committee each month reports of the work done by them for the previous month.

ART. VII.—CHECKS AND PAYMENTS.

All checks upon the bank accounts of the Association shall have space provided for three signatures—viz: those (1) of the Chairman (or Vice-Chairman) of the Executive Committee, (2) of a Corresponding Secretary, and (3) of the Treasurer. Any two of these signatures shall render a check valid, but no check shall be valid with one signature only. All transfers of stock, conveyances of real estate and other instruments requiring the seal of the Association shall be signed in the same manner.

All payments of the Association shall be made by check payable to order, except petty cash expenditures, which shall be paid by the Treasurer and at convenient times be aggregated, and a check shall be drawn to his order therefor.

No disbursements shall be made without authority of the Executive Committee.

ART. VIII.—CLAIMS FOR DISBURSEMENTS BY OFFICERS ANE EMPLOYEES.

All claims for disbursements by any officer or employee shall be accompanied by vouchers, except for telegrams, postage and traveling expenses, and charges below twenty dollars in amount, all of which shall be certified by the claimant to the Treasurer, with the items.

ART. IX.—ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The following shall be the order of business of the Committee at its regular meetings:

1. Prayer.
2. Reading of the minutes of the last regular meeting, and of intervening meetings.
3. Report of the Treasurer.
4. Reports of Corresponding Secretaries.
5. Reading of the minutes of the Standing Committees and action thereon, in the following order: (1) Finance. (2) Southern Work. (3) Indian and Chinese Work. (4) Appropriations.
6. Reports of Special Committees.
7. Unfinished business.
8. New business.

The business of each special meeting shall be limited to the items mentioned in the call for such meeting.

ART. X.—AMENDMENTS.

These By-Laws may be amended at any time by a vote of the majority of the members present at any regular meeting, notice of such amendment having been given, in writing, at the previous regular meeting, and in the notices sent out for such meeting.

II.—CHARTERED INSTITUTIONS.

No system of education devised for the uplifting of a people is complete unless it provides colleges and professional schools. Especially is this true of any system designed for a race forming part of a nation possessed of such institutions. The American Missionary Association was called of God to lead in the great educational movement in behalf of the Freedmen. It found them ignorant and helpless, being still excluded from the schools in the States in which they were living.

At the outset, it decided upon establishing a system of education which should be complete. Thus, before other than elementary books were in the hands of the pupils in its schools, the Association, through its workers and friends, secured charters, selected favorable locations, purchased lands, and established, on broad and deeply laid foundations, chartered institutions, vested with power to become all that the interests of the race should demand for generations to come.

Its educational system culminates in these schools for liberal culture, and its great growth lies in the line of their development.

It seemed to some of our friends that we began to provide for this higher education too much in advance of the demand, but every year demonstrates more and more satisfactorily that the plan was the right one.

We ask careful attention to the report of these institutions—their present condition, their great success, the demands for enlargement, and their relations to the highest interests of the colored people at the South. We shall give this report in some detail, endeavoring to represent each institution, and its condition and interests, as far as possible in the language of those connected with them.

General Armstrong furnishes the following encouraging report:

"The work at Hampton has extended rapidly during the past year. Your readers are probably acquainted with the outlines of our history. The school was opened in April, 1868, the American Missionary Association having purchased a farm of one hundred and twenty-five acres, close to the mouth of Hampton Creek, and fitted up buildings already standing on the place for our temporary use.

"The many advantages of this beautiful and historic spot, attracted attention during the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau among the thousands of 'contrabands' who from the early days of the war crowded to the neighborhood of Fort Monroe. Here, close to the place where the first negroes imported into this country were landed, the first Freedmen's school was opened, and hundreds of children received instruction in it while the war was yet raging.

"At that time the grounds we now occupy were covered with Hospital Barracks, which contained at one time fifteen thousand sick and wounded soldiers; many of whom sleep in the National Cemetery close at hand, around the chapel in which we worship.

"Twenty pupils only were in attendance when the institute first opened—this fall we begin with two hundred and four, of whom one hundred and seventy are boarders.

"Our organization was completed in June, 1870, by an act of incorporation from the General Assembly of Virginia. By this act the property of the school was vested in a Board of Trustees, seventeen in number, a large part of whom are members of the American Missionary Association. This property, at first consisting of the farm and buildings before mentioned, was soon increased by a commodious school-house, erected by the contributions of Northern friends, which we began to use in October, 1870.

"Our policy of providing students with means of helping themselves, and at the same time acquiring arts of practical value, was in successful operation from the first. Farm-work of all kinds was taught the boys, and the girls learned sewing and a variety of household business. This year, by the liberality of some of our friends, a printing-office has been added to our former resources, in which five of our boys have been learning press-work and type-setting. They have been paid at the regular rate of wages for such work, and have earned nearly the whole of their school expenses. Our experienced foreman, W. J. Butterfield, of the Riverside Press, Cambridge, reports very favorably on their capacity, as compared with that of ordinary apprentices.

"In January, 1872, we published the first number of the Southern Workman, an illustrated monthly paper, devoted to the industrial classes of the South, which we hope to make the means of greatly extending our usefulness. Its success thus far has been encouraging. We have now (November 1st) 1071 subscribers, a number which, in addition to the receipts from job-work, has made the printing-office in this its first year almost self-sustaining. The quantity of work sent to our press is increasing, and we may hope for a moderate profit hereafter.

"Our farm is steadily improving in productiveness; and our stock, especially of milch cows, has been much increased during the past year. The farm not only diminishes the cost of our boarding department, but gives each boy the opportunity of becoming familiar during his stay here with nearly every kind of practical farming and gardening. In most cases these opportunities are improved with observations and questionings which show intelligent interest in their work. As many of them have never worked on a farm before coming here, there is of course much room for improvement; but in most cases there is a steady change for the better from month to month, both in disposition and efficiency. In order to fulfill our promises to them, work is sometimes furnished at a disadvantage; and, for this reason as well as on account of their inexperience, their labor costs us about one fourth more than that of hired hands. In spite of this drawback, the farm has been able to meet its own expenses. The share it takes in the education of our boys is such that we should feel it indispensable, even if it could not do so.

"To our girls the opportunities they have for sewing and household labor are equally valuable. Our arrangements do not permit us to instruct them in cooking, but they be-

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

On being introduced by Secretary Strieby as representing the American Board, Mr. Blatchford said:

"I have no authority from the American Board to convey to you any special message; and yet I know that they will be glad to have me express to you their sentiments of sympathy with you in your work. The work is one. In carrying forward the work of the American Board and the American Missionary Association we are obeying the same command of our Lord: Go ye into all the world and disciple all. We are inspired by the same prophetic promises, that the time will come when this world shall obey the command of God as it is obeyed in heaven. In fact, this gatheriug is in itself a type of the unity of this work; for as I look around me I see brethren and sisters representing the different societies in which we are all interested. I see them here from the New West Commission; I see the workers and representatives of our Home Missionary Society; I see, of course, many representatives of the American Missionary Association, and those deeply interested in the work of our American Board. So that we have here in this very meeting an illustration of these words of the Apostle: 'One Lord, one faith, one baptism.'"

Mrs. J. J. M. Angear, in charge of a Chinese Sunday-school in the First Congregational Church, Chicago, spoke of her work, her Chinese choir singing "Stand up for Jesus," and later a verse of "Sweet By and By," in both English and Chinese.

Representative addresses then followed, Mr. Chin Kue speaking for the Chinese, Mrs. Elizabeth Winyan for the Indians, Rev. T. L. Riggs interpreting, and Rev. Mr. McClellan for the Negro. A verse of "Shall we whose souls are lighted," was sung, after which Rev. W. E. Barton spoke of the Mountain Whites.

President Eaton's paper was deferred, owing to the lateness of the hour.

After Secretary Strieby had led the Association in prayer and pronounced the benediction, recess was taken until Thursday morning at 8:30 A.M.

Emerson, after which addresses were made by the missionaries: On the mountain work, by Miss Hayes, of Tennessee; on the colored people, by Mrs. Shaw, of Georgia, and Miss Plant, of Mississippi; and on the Indians, by Miss Barnaby, a native teacher.

The Association was called to order by President Taylor. "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," was sung, after which Rev. Simeon Gilbert, D.D., led in prayer.

The records of the previous sessions of the day were read and approved, and the Secretary was instructed to complete the minutes.

The invitation to hold the next Annual Meeting in Northampton, Massachusetts, was accepted.

President George A. Gates, of Iowa College, addressed the Association, and was followed by an address by President Cyrus Northrop, D.D., of Minnesota, and also by President E. D. Eaton, D.D., of Wisconsin.

The closing address of the Association was made by President Taylor.

The following minute read by Secretary Roy was then adopted:

When, just eighteen years ago, this city was smoldering in the ruins of the great fire, which had consumed the holy and beautiful house of this New England Church and the homes of every family in it, the pastor, searching among the ashes within these walls for some memento, found a charred leaf of the pulpit hymn-book on which he was able to decipher these words:

"Daughter of Zion, awake from the dust,
Exalt thy fallen head:
Rebuild thy walls, thy bounds enlarge,
And send thy heralds forth."

That hymn was sung at the first service in the rough board tabernacle erected upon this spot.

We give thanks to God this day for the faith and courage by which this people did awake from the dust and rebuild these walls, and by which they have gone on building up their spiritual temple and participating largely in the whole round of service for extending the Redeemer's kingdom, a part of which has been the inviting and the welcoming of this missionary convocation to their sanctuary and to their homes, and for which, to them, along with all others in the sister churches who have joined them on this occasion in exercising this grace of hospitality, we express our heartiest thanks.

We here call to mind with grateful emotion one of the manliest of men, one of the truest disciples of Christ, Dea. C. G. Hammond, who counted it an honor to have ministered at this altar from the day of its setting up to the day of his translation, and who for many years had served as one of the Vice-Presidents of this Association, and had been giving largely of his substance to its treasury.

At this closing hour, we are also thankfully reminded that the First Congregational Church of this city was ready thirty years ago to entertain this Association in the days of its weakness and of its cross-bearing witness for Christ and for his lowly poor; and likewise, ten years ago, to open its doors to receive the same body then brought along by the providence of God to a position of honor and extended usefulness.

And so we gratefully name the Union Park Church, which is now lending us its pastor as one of our Vice-Presidents, and which, with the other two churches mentioned, has furnished us with the three grand annual sermons of Drs. Goodwin, Noble, and Little, and the Plymouth Church, which, from the day of its organization, with its testimony and its offerings, has stood by this Association, and all the other churches of this vicinage, grown now to be such a comely sisterhood, which have shared with these others in the support of our work.

To the four great railway passenger associations, which have extended to us their courtesies; to the city press, which has so immensely broadened the influence of this missionary convocation; to the gentlemen who, at no small sacrifice of time and labor, have honored this occasion by their addresses, reports, and clerical service; and to our honored and beloved President, who has guided our deliberations with such skill and grace, we express our obligations of thanks.

Rev. Norman Seaver, D.D., responded for the New England Church. He said there was a saying that lightning never struck the same place twice, yet, though it fell to him to welcome the Association, it had also fallen to him to respond to this vote of thanks. He had asked Secretary Beard what he would say on this occasion, and was answered, in his witty way, "Tell us Godspeed, and we are glad to get rid of you." Dr. Seaver felt that the local people were the recipients, and the visitors the benefactors in what had been done. The President had inspired them with his spirit; he had not withdrawn his presence, and very late might he return to the heavens. Students and young ministers had been benefited by listening to those many learned men and devoted servants of God, and were inspired for future usefulness. "We are not the benefactors, we are the recipients, and we wish you Godspeed."

After having sung the doxology, with the benediction by President Taylor, the Association adjourned, to meet at Northampton, Massachusetts, for its next Annual Meeting.

Reports of Committees.

REPORT ON EDUCATIONAL WORK SOUTH.

BY REV. WM. BURNET WRIGHT, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

It is an ominous fact that in the South illiteracy is steadily increasing. It is an encouraging fact that in the region surrounding our chartered and normal schools illiteracy is steadily diminishing. The colored people are multiplyiug more rapidly than the means of educating them. If the supply of school accommodations to-day exactly equalled the demand, so that every colored child of suitable age was provided for in some school, there would be at the time of our next annual meeting 255,500 children asking to be taught their letters to whom we should have to say, We cannot teach you. But the supply does not yet nearly equal the demand.

In respect to education, the South is a dark sky rapidly growing darker, but flecked with patches of lighter shade, which are gradually growing brighter and larger. Such a bright space frames each of our chartered and normal schools. Fisk University, Talladega College, Tougaloo University, Straight University, in New Orleans, and Tillotson Institute, at Austin, Texas, are doing work which vindicates each year more distinctly the strategic sagacity which located them. In these institutions alone nearly two thousand students of both sexes are being trained to be light-bearers to their race. Besides these, each of which is essentially a normal school, and includes a normal department, eighteen distinctively normal schools are sustained at different points of strategic importance. Two new schools have been established during the year. Good work has also been done among the mountain whites. The income from the gift of Mr. Daniel Hand has enabled the Association to enlarge its school accommodations, and to assist more than three hundred students, who, without it, would have been unable to attend schools of any kind.

The committee would emphasize among special needs of the work, funds for a girls' hall at Tillotson Institute, and for the endowment of a theological school for training colored pastors. Two facts are pre-eminently gratifying. The first is that in nearly all the schools of the Association some kind of industrial training is provided, and that the influence of such training is conspicuously shown in improved ideas of home life and comfort among those connected by family or other ties with our students. The second fact is, that in all our schools the students are taught that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and that consequently the separation between religion and morality, which is the supreme danger of the Southern black churches, is perceptibly diminishing.

REPORT ON CHURCH WORK.

BY PROFESSOR GRAHAM TAYLOR, CHAIRMAN.

The mission of the American Missionary Association is shown to be a specialty and a unit by its church work. It is the work of a specialist among Christian organizations that alone could have produced these churches. To meet the demands of an exigency which could not be met by the pre-existent ordinary agencies, this child of Providence was born of God and the times. For the accomplishment of ends for which no means had been found, its methods were providentially chosen by a process of spiritual selection. Its agencies are the accretions of the Divine purpose in its progress toward the salvation of the undermost, and the edifying of the whole body of Christ. To the production of its unique Christian institutions the exclusive devotion to the study of the peculiar conditions of these entirely distinct communities was necessary. There have been generated by this devotion and acquired through the experience of nearly half a century a knowledge and skill which claim for this Association the recognition of the world as its foremost expert in the successful application of Christianity to the solution of the most difficult race problems of modern civilization.

And yet in the accomplishment of this great achievement, loyalty to the common faith and to our own polity, as well as to the teachings of experience, demanded only the new application of the old prime factors of God's own choice, the local church with its evangelism and Christian nurture.

In the work of this Association these two great agencies are uniquely one. The pastor is often teacher and evangelist. The sanctuary is school-house and mission station. At twenty-three points on the field God has made of these twain—the church and the school—one. The church is the unit of this unity. For while the church is generally the offspring of the school, the school finds both its profoundest reasons for existence and its highest consummation in the needs and ends of the church. In it the work both of the teacher and evangelist co-ordinates and culminates.

It will not be so very long before these schools and colleges will find their chief sources of supply in these churches, which although now so dependent, must ultimately be depended upon to maintain and develop their own institutions. Even now it is to be remembered that the appeal of this evangelizing church work meets with the wider and more popular response from the giving constituency of the Association, while the educational institutions are more dependent upon the larger gifts of interested individuals.

Moreover, it is the church which opens the springs of the family life from which the schools must draw their scholars. And it is the church which creates the environment necessary to the Christian homes, to which the graduates are sent back again to live their lives, and from which, as the heart's fulcrum, their saved lives can best lift up the lost.

These little church groups of evangelized and educated families are at once the prime sources and the constituent elements of the new Christian civilization which already heralds the coming of the kingdom to those neglected, outcast peoples, to secure whose human rights, Christian privileges and church fellowship is the first, loudest, longest call upon the Congregational Churches of America.

Therefore, in the name of this Association, whose heroic type of missionary and teaching service makes our whole membership and ministry the more attractive and ennobling; in the name of its schools which became churches, and its churches which are schools; in the name of their 8,400 professing Christians, and their 15,000 Sunday-school scholars, and the 1,000 converts of the year; in the name of the races of three continents to whom the Father is sending these our brethren as we are sent to them, we pledge the fidelity of the American Missionary Association to the two-fold agency of its one work, the discipling of these races by the evangelizing church, and the Christian nurture of its schools. And we re-echo the call which the National Council makes upon our churches for the $500,000 required by the exigencies and opportunities of this year's work for the neediest and most helpless of all our fellow-countrymen.

REPORT ON MOUNTAIN WORK.

BY REV. D. M. FISK, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The formal report of your committee can without injustice be brief; not because the field considered is narrow, or the work unimportant as a missionary movement, but from the fact that a certain unity pervades both, making it possible to comprehend in one view even the diversities of a population of over two millions, and an area of above one hundred thousand square miles.

The official summary of the year's work, on which we report, once again sets before this Association the situation and its involved problem; a situation full of contradictions, a problem at once serious but not hopeless.

Here is the amazing spectacle of a self-isolated people, begirt with the active life and thought of our eager times, yet sharing neither. Here is an empire that is content to live in the past: having rich resources it neglects to develop them; a productive soil but niggard crops. Amidst a veritable Lebanon of forestry it has shanties for homes; with coal deposits that are the envy of the world, its shivering women in stoveless hovels attempt to defend themselves about their domestic toil with coarse homespun shawls and slat-bonnets. In an age that has harnessed mechanism, beast, and steam to the plow, scythe, sickle and flail, these owners of mountains of iron and mines of power still indolently vex a grudging soil with tools of such barbaric simplicity that their intrusion is scarcely more than a provocation to weeds.

Here is needless poverty in the lap of potential wealth, thriftlessness in the face of every seeming stimulus to diligence. Here is a diversified landscape that should inspire and a climate that should invigorate, but in place of vivacity and health we find apathetic endurance and intrenched disease. Scrofula and its parasite kin are domesticated in the debilitated blood, and pills, calomel, and death jointly contend for the prolific cradle, and even when temporarily defeated succeed in transforming childhood into unlovely age, without the long interval of intermediate active, zestful manhood.

And yet, pitiful as is this exhibit of deficiency, these Highland dwellers are none the less men and our brethren. Slavery robbed them of their lands half a century ago, and roughly shouldered them off into the mountain wilderness dowered with the pauperizing maxims of oppression, notably the indignity of toil, and their shrewd native mother-wit has been left to rust to dullard loss in the absence of schools worthy the name; worse still, their natural devoutness has been warped by unworthy shepherds, till superstition, bigotry, and gross immorality have taken fierce possession of many a society, hearthstone and heart. If to-day the schools are inefficient and some of the preaching blasphemous; if self-satisfied idleness has turned over this mountain realm to want and the slavery of low living, and (as ever) made woman at once the servant and the victim of its barbarism, it is but another historic count in the awful indictment of human selfishness. And all these crying deficiencies are but make-weights with our conviction of responsibility to this mountain flock of God, that often has been misled and unworthily sacrificed.

The only problematical element in this matter is the measure of our faith in God and man and all-prevailing truth. Wherever the ground has been broken by faithful men there is a crop to show as returns for invested toil. More than a thousand children are now under Christian instruction in our schools. Our pupils are in hungry demand as teachers, even to a minimum of years that to us would seem absurd (15 and 16 years). Over twenty churches are holding up a reasonable religion, as a life rather than merely a profession. New fields plead for mission work. Our already planted churches and schools are stimulating other denominations to redoubled diligence in church planting. Courage is in the tone and look of our frontier workers. The officers of this Association feel in an aggressive mood. The question resolves itself into one of faith and contributions. What, my brethren, shall be our answer?

REPORT ON INDIAN WORK.

BY REV. ADDISON P. FOSTER, D D., CHAIRMAN.

The committee on the work of the American Missionary Association among the Indians respectfully report that they gratefully recognize the good hand of God in the work already done.

Since the American Missionary Association took the work, the expenditures have increased from $11,000 to $52,000, the out-stations for direct evangelistic effort from seven to twenty-one, and the churches from two to six. This last year, the Association has established three new out-stations: the Moody station among the Mandans, fifty miles north of Fort Berthold; the Moody Station No. 2 among the Gros Ventres, twenty-five miles north of Fort Berthold; the Sankey Station among the Dakotas at Cherry Creek. It has just put up a mission house, with a room for church worship, at Rosebud Agency. It has organized a new church at Bazille Creek, some distance out from Santee; a branch church at Cherry Creek, on the Sioux Reservation, and is just forming a church at Standing Rock, for which a building is now completed.

This record is certainly gratifying and shows that the Association appreciates the emergency, and is striving to meet it, so far as the means put in its hands allow. But your committee feel also that never before was there so great an opportunity as now brought before the Christians of this land, and especially our own denomination, for work among the Indians.

The relations of the Government and of the churches in Indian work are now unusually harmonious and kindly. The present Administration is thoroughly in sympathy with missionary operations, and will do nothing to impair their efficiency. We believe it to be sincerely actuated by a desire to promote the best welfare of the Indians, and ready to co-operate with all good people in efforts in this direction. It aims to educate every Indian child. We desire to see this done, and believe that when the Government assumes, as it should, the primary education of all Indians of school age, we shall be called on to turn our efforts to a much larger work for direct evangelization.

Our opportunity is enlarging further by the breaking down of the old pagan prejudices of the Indians. The testimony of all the workers on the field is to this effect. The Indians are desirous of living as white men. They are rapidly losing their distinctive Indian ideas and are imbibing the notions of their white neighbors. This is seen in their burials, which now are not uniformly, as of old, on scaffolds, but are more and more interments. It is shown in their feeling and behavior when death comes into their households. They no longer fill their houses with hideous outcries, but instead seek the missionaries to inquire about the life in the other world.

A further opportunity is to be noted in the fact that the Dakota Indians have specially fallen into our care. Our chief missions are located among them, at Santee, Rosebud, Oahe, Standing Rock, and outlying stations. But the Dakota Indians number 40,000 in all, or about one-sixth of all the Indians in the country. We have mastered the Dakota language; and a Bible, hymn-book, dictionary and other books are printed in that tongue. We have, then, special ability to carry on mission work among them, and are bound to utilize it to the full. The time is ripe for immediate action. It must be taken without delay if taken at all. The opening up to white settlement of a large strip of land though the center of the great Sioux reservations is to bring the Indian into contact with the influence of white men as never before. It is impossible that that influence shall be altogether good. The contact of the Indian with the frontiersmen of our own people has resulted most deplorably in the past, and we cannot hope for much better results now. Rum and licentiousness are sure to work untold harm to the Indian unless they are met by the gospel. This opening up of Indian territory to white settlement lays, therefore, a most imperative and immediate obligation on Christian people to protect the Indian from ruin by giving them the gospel.

We are satisfied that nothing but the gospel will suffice. Education alone can not save, and may simply give new strength to evil habits and influences. It must be a Christian education; schools should be simply preliminary and altogether subsidiary to the most energetic and wise presentation of the gospel. The uniform policy of the American Missionary Association in all departments of its work has been in this direction, and we gladly recognize the fact that its Indian work has steadily progressed with the idea of evangelizing the Indian.

We know very well that the Association is laboring for 8,000,000 Negroes and for 2,000,000 Mountain White people and for 125,000 Chinese, as well as 262,000 Indians. We know that the proportion of the Indians is comparatively small. At the same time we urge that this disproportion is to a large degree counterbalanced by the special opportunities we have considered. The Indian problem is before us for immediate settlement. It admits of no delay. Care for these few Indians now, Christianize them now, as we may, and the Indian becomes as the white man, and our missionary efforts will then be released for other fields.

In this special emergency we feel strongly the necessity laid on the Association for an enlargement of its administrative force. Since the death of our lamented brother, Secretary Powell, the force at the New York office of the Association has been short-handed. We hope that the earnest efforts which are being made by the Executive Committee to find a suitable person to become another Secretary of the Association may be at once successful. An emergency is upon us, and we say this with the conviction that the demands of the Indian work are now so imperative as to require a large portion of the time and thought of such a Secretary. It is a necessity that such a Secretary should frequently visit the field and be in constant communication with the workers.

REPORT ON CHINESE WORK.

BY REV. H. A. STIMSON, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

This is the smallest and least conspicuous department of the work of the American Missionary Association, but the one that stands in the closest relation to ourselves, and the one also that can show the largest returns. The Chinese in America are few in number, but they are scattered everywhere, as if God intended in them to put the spirit of our churches to a crucial test, and, where that test is endured, to give to his servants a prompt reward and an unanswerable confirmation of his promises and of their faith.

These strange little men from "the land of Sinim," mysterious, silent, capable, incredibly industrious, money-making, with their pig-tails and their felt shoes, their "pidgin English" and their unintelligible "turkey tracks," their wooden countenance and their "bias eyes," their opium, and their "ways that are dark," who, in spite of restrictive laws and brutal personal treatment, are filtering in everywhere, until they may be seen crouched in the corner of any street car, and are a familiar object in the village street—why are they here? here just now and here so persistently? It is no mighty immigration of men, such as De Tocqueville liked to dwell upon. It is no conquering host, no familiar immigration. Whatever may once have been the attractive force of the California gold fields, washing soiled linen can hardly be regarded as satisfying a national instinct, or thumping through the long hours of the night upon an ironing table a soul-filling amusement. Much may be said of "the golden fleece," but these are no modern Argonauts. They are money-making as our friends the Jews, but no "high emprise" or "grand endeavor" fires their calm pulse, and much as has been written of the coolie system and the "Six Companies," nothing has been adduced which seems adequate to explain the movement.

The fact is, God is in it. He is crowding these heathen upon our churches in these missionary days of an opening world, first of all to prove our Christianity. Do we believe that all men are brothers? Do we believe that the Holy Ghost who renewed our hearts can renew these? Do we believe that the Lord who died for us, died for the world? Do we believe—not that the world—but that this particular heathen as he stands before us in his blue blouse, or sits at our side with his reading-book, is as dear to our heavenly Father as you and I are? Do we believe that we are to go to him with the gospel to find a way for the truth into his heart, to bear his burdens, to win him by love, and that without him we ourselves can not be made perfect? Do we believe, in short, that God has brought him here to our door that we might learn that if we have not a religion that will save, and will make us eager to have it save a Chinaman, we have not a religion that will save ourselves?

Seven hundred and fifty of these men already members of the churches connected with our mission on the Pacific Coast! and who will say how many more on the rolls of our churches from St. Louis to Boston! What are these Chinese converts, the fruitage of our Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings, our personal labor, but God's blessed seal set upon our Christian faith! Here is the evidence. Ours is the conquering faith of the world. It will save every man, for it has saved these men, no less than you and me.

But this is not all. China's day has come. We hear from beyond the sea of the new railway, the awful floods, the burning of the "Altar of Heaven," and the strange stirrings of the mind of that mighty people, the oldest, and judged by its persistent life, the strongest now on the globe. Merchants tell us of its limitless trade: diplomatists speak of its astuteness and of its new navy, second only to that of England; scholars wonder at a nation of heathen with whom learning determines rank, and where the "boss" and the fixer of elections are unknown. Missionaries write of the throngs that gather in strange cities to hear them preach, of the new gentleness and courtesy everywhere shown them, and of the increasing number of young people pressing into the mission schools.

In the midst of all this, when the Lord's voice is heard calling us to lift up our eyes and look on the fields now white for the harvest, comes word from our solitary watchman upon the watch-tower in Hong-Kong that when he returned to his post, as he did last year, perplexed and down-hearted, because not one Christian in all America heeded his call and went with him to his field, to his surprise and joy the Lord has been preparing his own servants in the person of Chinese emigrants coming home from America, bringing with them not money only and knowledge of the wide world, but the new-found faith; graduates of laundries, but also of our Sunday-schools, members of our churches, filled with an eager spirit to tell their parents, their brethren, their neighbors, of Jesus Christ. Ah, dear friends, God's ways are not as our ways. Let us not be slow to catch his thought and walk where he leads.

Here, then, is the call to us. Begin with the Chinaman at your door. Recognize that the Lord Jesus stands before you in him. You prove your own faith; you "do it unto" your Lord; you forward the plan of God when you take him by the hand and gently entreat him for Christ.

For the same reason you will give your money to support the work of this Association. No work has been more devoted, more upheld by prayer, more Christlike, or, we may add, more deservedly successful than that under the lead of our representative, Dr. Pond, on the Pacific Coast. He has already surrounded himself with a band of trained Christian converts, who would be a joy in any field, and who are making themselves felt for good far and wide. Their influence reaches to Chicago, St. Louis, and even Boston and New York. It is ours to see that the Christian city they find here is not less Christlike than that which met them when they landed on our shores, and that the hoodlum of our Eastern cities no more represents the spirit of our churches than does he of San Francisco and of Oakland. Let us be careful to show that our hand will be as promptly raised to protect the helpless Chinaman from insult on the street as it will be to lead his soul to Christ. Let us insist upon it, as Americans and as Christians, that no distinction of race or of color shall stand between any man and his rights, either in the State or in the Church. Then may we hope that all—white and black, Chinaman and American—will care less for rights and more for duties, and, in the joy of a true brotherhood, will labor together to bring in the day of the Lord. In any case, let us, with all our multiform machinery, our conventions, our societies, our churches, be not so busy "saving souls" that we have not care to save men and women.

REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

BY F. J. LAMB, ESQ., CHAIRMAN.

Your committee beg leave to report that they have had under consideration the matters committed to them. They have been attended by your Treasurer, and they have examined his reports submitted, particularly the detailed statement of receipts and expenditures for the year closed; also statement of trust funds of the Association; also statement of resources and liabilities, and of the income of the Daniel Hand Educational Fund for the same period. These statements come to us duly vouched for by the standing committee of auditors elected by the Association. A summarized statement of receipts and expenditures has been printed and distributed at this meeting, which accords with the detailed report. Other reports show that the invested funds of the Association, aside from the Daniel Hand Fund, are $230,875.78, being $500 more than in the previous year. From the statement of resources and liabilities, we find that the various colleges, schools, stations, buildings, and property constituting what may be termed the plant of the Association, amount, at their estimated value, to $745,849

This is a large sum, but the investment yields no pecuniary return to the Association. It represents the fixed property with which the Association carries on its work, and the figures may serve in some measure to apprise us of the magnitude of the work being carried on by the Association.

The Daniel Hand Fund is a separate and distinct trust, and its income cannot be used for the general work of the Association, and may demand some further notice before this report is closed. The general condition of the fund is found on the printed abstract already mentioned.

We find the system of keeping the accounts clear, convenient, and well adapted to exhibit from month to month the exact pecuniary condition of the Association, and the restrictions upon drawing money from the treasury well calculated to insure safety in that respect, and we find the management of the Treasurer's accounts and office in all details satisfactory and deserving our commendation. Comparing the gifts and work of the Association for the last year just closed with the previous year, and the recommendations of the Finance Committee a year ago, we find that the year 1888 closed with a deficit of over $5,000, that the amount of receipts for that year had been $320,-953.42; that the Finance Committee then recommended that the friends of the Association should raise for the year $375,000 for its current expenditures. It is a source of great gratification to find that this recommendation has been nobly met, and $376,216.88 have been received during the year just closed, an increase of over $55,000; that the deficit of the former year has been supplied, and that the Association commences the current year with a fund in the treasury of $4,471.67. This we deem substantial indorsement of the Association and its work, by the churches, Sunday-schools, missionary societies and its individual friends. This report might stop here with congratulations for the prosperous year just closed, but the duties so well done, and work so well performed, must simply furnish the Association a standing place and vantage ground for a greater work on its part, and grounds for greater sacrifices and gifts by its friends for the year to come.

The National Council, representing the Congregational churches of the whole nation, lately in session at Worcester, by a unanimous vote recommended that the churches and friends of the work of this Association raise for it for current expenditures for the year now commenced the sum of $500,000. Is this magnificent sum too much to ask for the year now auspiciously begun? Happily for your committee, we are saved the necessity of elaborate or studied examination of the needs of the work that has been done by the papers read and to be printed and addresses delivered from the platform during the meetings up to this time. You are thus informed more fully than we could hope to inform you what these needs are and their urgency. But we may say that of the 8,000,000 Negroes in the South it is estimated only 2,000,000 can read and write. Add to these the millions of poor whites in the mountains and the red men of the West and the Chinese in our land, and we are fully justified in asserting that the work of this Association equals in magnitude any work of the church, and involves issues of Christianity and patriotism touched by no other work of our age. It is estimated by the officers of the Association that through its schools and colleges and the teachers furnished by them, who are instructing the children in the South more or less every year, perhaps 175,000 are being reached and instructed. Assuming that as many are reached by other missionary and benevolent societies, we see the tremendous need that can not be ignored. This burden is laid peculiarly and urgently on this society and its contributing friends. Can we meet this duty with less than $500,000 for the current year? Your committee say, No. Perhaps you will be ready to acquiesce. But let us see what this means. It means that every living donor who contributed last year must increase his contribution 50 per cent., or the number of donors must be largely increased. A large amount was received last year from estates and legacies, namely, $114,020.41. This resource is a variable quantity. The Association can not depend on any increase from this source. Its confidence must be in the living, who can give if they will.

Your Committee deem it proper to call more particular attention to the magnificent gift of Daniel Hand to the Association. It is quite likely that some may suppose, and some may have measured their gifts last year in the belief, that the income of this fund was applicable to pay current expenses of the Association. But this is not so. The Daniel Hand Fund is appropriated to special work, which, although connected generally with the work of the Association, is yet not a part of that ordinary work for which this fund we recommend to be raised is to be expended. Hence all friends of the Association must make and measure their gifts to it understanding that the sum we propose must be raised without any aid from the income from that million dollars constituting one of the grandest gifts of our time. Shall this $500,000 for the current work of the Association for 1889 be furnished to it? This is God's work. The churches here represented and the friends of the Association have the money. It can not be put to any nobler Christian use; the needs demand it, and we recommend that $500,000 be raised for the Association for its current work for the year now begun.

REPORT ON SECRETARY STRIEBY'S PAPER.

BY REV. G. B. WILLCOX, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The paper by Dr. Strieby impresses your committee as an admirably comprehensive and discriminating statement of the policy and work of the Association. As to the reconstruction of our educational and missionary societies, to the suggestion of which much of the paper calls attention, and from which he dissents, we should do well to make haste slowly. Some time in the future it may become practicable. But we discover no finger of Providence pointing toward it at present.

If the thought were to reduce our societies to which these interests are intrusted to two, calling for but two annual collections where we now have three or four, it needs no prophet to foresee the effect of that on the amounts collected. If the suggestion is of the reconstruction, not of the societies, but only of the work—if it proposes that our educational and missionary enterprises be so divided that no one society shall to any extent conduct both—it has certainly an attractive look.

But is it more than a look? The educational institutions of several of our societies were born out of the inmost life of those organizations and lie on their bosom for nourishment to-day. To ask the American Board, for example, to turn over its colleges and schools to some other society, for that, of course, is involved in the plan suggested —would be like asking one of our Christian mothers to send her babe to the foundlings' home. Some of us are old enough to remember that the venerable and now sainted Dr. Anderson was at first vehemently opposed to the schools planted by the missionaries in India. It was confounding things that differ. The work of a missionary society was not to manage schools. The schools were discontinued. But the Board soon discovered that it was doing its work with but one hand. The schools came back and came to stay. Now we conservatives are rather jealous of our progressive brethren calling for a reconstruction of the American Board. We know not whereto this thing may grow.

If the colleges and schools of the American Missionary Association were secular, if they had no vital oneness of life with its churches, there might be room for the plan suggested. But they are as thoroughly Christian in their aim as the churches. The churches are as indispensably educational as the schools. As Dr. Strieby remarks, the teacher is often the pastor. The pastor finds a great part of his flock in the school. The teachers teach in his Sunday-school. The prayer-meeting depends on them for its success. The unseen shuttles of mutual sympathy, flying back and forth incessantly, are weaving the two together, and working out the one pattern of the Divine life in souls, that covers both. The plan proposed would, at least to the eye, disentangle all complications. It would lay out the work in the Year-Book with clean-cut precision. But vital things are not always improved by vivisection. It would doubtless simplify our apprehension of the organs of a man to lay the lungs on one side of the table, the heart on another, the liver on a third, and the brains on a fourth. But how far it would enhance the vitality and usefulness of the man is another question. There is an organism which is often, and without harm, in that fashion distributed. But it is a mannikin—not a man.

The one most formidable evil among our colored countrymen is their deplorable ignorance of the connection between religion and morality—or rather the fact that religion, on its outward side, is morality. The sable deacon who, when confronted with a list of his sins as dark as his countenance, replied triumphantly: "Well, bredren, I'se broke ebery commandment ob de ten—but bress de Lord, I'se nebber los' my 'ligion," was no monster of iniquity. He was only saturated and sodden with the delusion which submerges Pagan, Mohammedan, and Papist alike, and throws no little of its froth over Protestant, too often, that duties toward God and toward man are not blended, or even dove-tailed together. But they are weights in opposite scales. Be only devout in your penances or your hallelujahs, and your life among men is of little account. Now, that notion can not be corrected in such a people as that one with which we have to do in the South by an occasional Sunday sermon. In the day-school it must be reiterated morning, noon, and night in various applications, line upon line and precept upon precept. And so, on the other hand, teachers, as well as scholars, must be reminded by pastors, with a little Puritan iron in their blood, of their Christian, as well as educational obligations. One member of your committee who has had practical experience in the Southern work reports that some teachers, occasionally even now, need to be reminded of the Christian service that the Association, as well as the Master, expects from them. But divide these different functions, put the churches and Sunday-schools under other auspices, and, self-evidently, that temptation would be so much the worse. We must have groped out of the morning twilight toward the millennial day much further than we have before any such plan can be reduced to fact.

Dr. Strieby speaks in the paper of his clerical friend of twenty-five years ago, who thought the work of the Association would be transient. It reminds us of Mr. Seward's remark that three months would end the civil war. We are in for a long campaign. The sad fact is not to be blinked that, with the enormous increase of the colored population, the illiteracy among them is greater to-day than at the close of the rebellion. We have need to sing at times:

> O, learn to scorn the praise of men:
> O, learn to lose with God.

As Dr. Goodwin grandly told us yesterday, our work is under the Master's order. Success is no concern of ours. But success, because it is His concern, is sure. Every losing battle in His service turns in time to victory. We remember in Count Agenor de Gasparin's "Uprising of a Great People," how spell-bound, awe-struck, he appeared to be before that magnificent ground swell of the loyal nation, rolling on, as a traveling mountain range, to sweep the rebellion as drift-wood before it. The eight millions of the freedmen and their children are rising. If, for the present, there are refluent waves that sadden us it is God who brings in the tide. "And when I begin," saith the Lord, "I will also make an end."

REPORT ON SECRETARY BEARD'S PAPER.

BY REV. H. M. TENNEY, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The committee to which was referred the paper of Secretary Beard respectfully report that the "Missionary View of the Southern Situation" therein presented impresses us profoundly with the fact that the sincerest piety is the most exalted patriotism. It commends itself to us as worthy of the most serious attention of the thoughtful of both races in the North and in the South. The gravity of the Southern problem, as set before us, is little less than appalling. The colored race now looks back over a quarter of a century of freedom and recognized rights. The traditions and customs and conservative ties of slavery are broken with its chains. The ideas, aspirations and manly instincts of liberty have taken hold upon the colored people and are becoming controlling. The intellectual progress of the many, the political and national prominence of the few, the acquisition of wealth, and the marvelously disproportionate increase in their numbers, serve to awaken the colored race to self-consciousness and a sense of power. It is beginning to demand its rights and to be impatient of their resistance and suppression. The Samson of the past, bound, shorn and blinded, stands to-day with fetters broken, with locks grown long, and with eyes yet dim, but with the dimness of returning vision, as one who sees men as trees walking. And whether he shall be carried on to complete emancipation, intellectual and spiritual, a true manhood, or goaded to madness, and driven to bow himself against the pillars of our national and social temple, and pull it down to the common ruin of us all, is the question of the hour. A race so situated, were there no other factors in the problem, would be a peril to any people, and would call for the most helpful effort and self-sacrificing zeal and Christ-like patience.

But the white man in the Southern situation is as serious a factor in the problem as the black man. In a different way, the incubus of slavery has rested as heavily upon him as upon his black brother. The illiteracy is not all on one side. If we put ourselves in the place of our Southern white brothers, and remember what human nature is, apart from the grace of God, we may not greatly wonder, in view of the heritage of the past and the real difficulties and perils of the present, that there is an intensity of race prejudice, and a bitterness of caste spirit, and an increasing hostility to the rising colored population which registers itself in outbreaks of violence and bloodshed, in the defiance of law, and in crimes against the ballot-box. We may not be greatly surprised that there should be intelligent men who regard the education of the colored man as a calamity, and deny his rights, and call for his disfranchisement. The white man of the South needs emancipation and Christian elevation as well as the black. We are the debtors of Christ to both races. Leave these two races to themselves without the gospel of Christ, and the conflict between them is inevitable, and it can be but terrific and protracted, and a dark blot upon the Christian name and civilization. Dr. Beard has well said that the problem can not be solved by historic precedents. All talk of slavery or peonage for the inferior race, or migration, or extermination, or amalgamation, is idle and morally repugnant and politically dangerous.

The problem set for our solution by Almighty God is just this—as stated in this missionary view of it: How, being free, two races as dissimilar as are the white and black races, now equal before the law, can live side by side under the same government and live in prosperity and peace. This problem must be solved, and it must be solved aright. And we may be sure that the ultimate solution of blessing for both races does not, and can not, lie in any retrograde movement toward the old darkness and bondage, but forward in the direction of the larger light and truer liberty of Christ. If the colored race, as a race, seems to have reached a point when "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," its hope and ours lie not in a return to ignorance and degradation, but in pressing on to that larger knowledge and truer wisdom, the beginning of which is the fear of God, and the fullness of which is a hearty recognition and cordial acceptance and discharge of the obligations and trusts of a Christian manhood and Christian citizenship. The condition of the colored race, indeed, is but a necessary stage in its upward and onward march. It is no other than we have always had reason to expect would be reached. That the mile-stone of to-day marks so great progress is cause for profound gratitude. The new features of the situation and the fresh difficulties are those, and those only, which are incident to progress.

There is but one solution for the Southern problem, and that is the solution for which this Association has labored from the beginning, and which this paper urges. Christianity in its highest forms, an intelligent Christian manhood, is that solution. It is an impressive thought that it is the mission of this Association, more than all other institutions and agencies, to develop that Christian sentiment among the colored people, and indirectly among the whites, which shall create a balance of power which shall save the races and the nation from that conflict which without it seems inevitable. This fact is a trumpet call to us to press the work of the Association in its schools and colleges and churches with renewed vigor and devotion.

And we would especially emphasize the necessity of preserving the unity of the educational and religious work of the Association to this end. Every teacher must be a missionary as truly as every preacher. And this unity of purpose and effort must be felt. Church and school, as in the past, must continue to stand together in the minds and labors of the people that there may be no exaltation of education at the expense of religion. In the dark days of slavery, it was faith in God that sustained the Negro, that inspired his songs, and that made him strong to endure and patient to wait. And it was by the power of God that he was at last set free. Never did the colored man need that faith in God, and in an overruling and guiding Providence, more than now, when the goal of liberty and equality is so nearly attained, and yet strangely delayed. Nobly do the leaders of the race realize that faith, and seek to lead their brethren into it.

It belongs to this Association, by all the agencies at its command, to teach this people to be patient and to wait upon the Lord, to endure hardship, to leave vengeance with the Lord, and, accepting the responsibilities of liberty and citizenship, to gird themselves to meet them in the spirit and in the strength of a grand Christian manhood. This the history of this people warrants us in expecting from them. To this manhood, struggle and work we welcome them, and in it we pledge them our Christian support.

Let this be the temper of those who hold the balance of power between the races in the South, and in no long time the slumbering conscience of the Southern white will respond. The noble utterances of the Southerners, who already demand that the Golden Rule shall be applied to the race problem, prove that it is already waking to life and power. It will be felt then that it cannot be safe to sin against God, to despise even the least of his children; that it must be safe to follow in the way where he leads, to do his bidding, and to give equal rights to all, and to treat all men as brethren. And thus the missionary view prevailing, and the missionary solution accepted, the perils and conflicts of to-day will disappear as the storm-cloud passes, and the difficulties of race relations now anticipated will adjust themselves in God's way, and in God's time—the way of Christian manhood and brotherhood, of righteousness and of peace.

FORTY-THIRD ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1889.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The American Missionary Association finds its commission in the words of the Master, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

It does not choose its fields of labor because the people in them are black, or red, or yellow, or white; but because they are those for whom Christ died and to whom he commanded the glad tidings of salvation to be preached. In the fields to which it providentially has been called, it seeks to bring the gospel to every human being who has it not in its purity as an uplifting power.

In nineteen States and Territories we are laboring—six in the West and thirteen in the South. In ninety-four schools and one hundred and forty-two churches we have been directly teaching and preaching the gospel during the past year. In them have 456 missionaries wrought with holy purpose. 12,132 pupils have been taught in our schools; more than seventeen thousand have received instruction in Bible truth in our Sunday-schools; 822 conversions have been reported. $3,160.14 have been reported as given in our mission churches for benevolence, and $21,658.57 for their own expenses—a gain over last year of $660.03 in benevolence and $2,322.62 in church expenses. Besides all this and all that in various ways has failed to be reported to us, have been the vacation work of our students, the large work of our previous graduates, the indirect results of many kinds, and the unknown results and influences of great power and far-reaching importance which have gone forth from our institutions and missionaries whose only possible record is in God's Book of Remembrance.

THE SOUTH.

In the South, we are directly reaching three classes—the colored people, the mountain whites, and the new settlers from the North and from the old countries. Indirectly we are reaching many more. The schools we plant often incite others to plant schools; the houses of worship we aid in erecting cause others to be erected. A single neat, but inexpensive building for a country church of colored people has been known to occasion the building or repairing of at least nine church buildings of neighboring white people. The incontestably good results of our work among the colored people are slowly but surely undermining race prejudice. In spite of all the race trouble during the past year and the increasingly bitter utterances of some papers and some public speakers, during no other year in the history of our country have so many manly words in favor of the Negro been printed in Southern papers, and sounded from the pulpits and platforms of the South. It was in a Southern University and before a Southern audience that a Southern man, a Bishop of a Southern church which took the name Southern when it declared for slavery, this year uttered these words:

"It is a travesty on religion, this disposition to canonize missionaries who go to the Dark Continent, while we have nothing but social ostracism for the white teacher who is doing a work no less noble at home. The solution to the race problem rests with the white people who live among the blacks, and who are willing to become their teachers in a missionary spirit."

Cruel and unreasoning is prejudice, but when the public platforms, and especially the pulpits, begin to yield in their utterances to the sway of logic and humanity, by and by public opinion will feel their force. Our institutions and our missionaries have compelled the respect of the Southern people. This year many expressions of it have been heard.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

CHARTERED INSTITUTIONS.

During the past year we have directly sustained five chartered institutions in the South—Fisk University, Talladega College, Tougaloo University, Straight University and Tillotson Institute. Every year that passes emphasizes anew that these are most wisely located, so that each is a center of far-reaching power, and supplements the work of all the others.

Fisk University at Nashville, Tenn., with its 503 students, has had a year of great prosperity, and solid, telling work. Its buildings have been full, the quality of the work done has been excellent. A graduate of Fisk recently took his diploma from an Eastern school of medicine, with a rank two per cent. higher than any other man in his class. Another graduate of Fisk is a missionary in Africa under the American Board, and is not only declared by the Secretaries to be one of its best missionaries, but has shown such business capacity that he has been chosen treasurer of his mission. His wife, a worthy helpmeet, is also a graduate of this institution. Fisk has high ideals—few institutions in the South have higher ones, or come nearer reaching them.

Talladega College, in Talladega, Ala., has had 427 students in all departments. Its year's work has shown most satisfactory results. Talladega is closely connected with the church work of the State. All the pastors in the Congregational State Association but four are from its theological department and several other States have found pastors there. The last State Association, with its fine body of young men, educated, dignified and earnest, was a most emphatic demonstration of the good work done in this institution. The students of Talladega have carried forward during the past year, under direction of a member of the Faculty, a systematic mission work in the surrounding neighborhoods, which has yielded large results, both in the good done in the neighborhoods and in the training received by the workers for future usefulness.

Tougaloo University has been filled to overflowing with 343 students, and after the last inch of room had been filled, scores had to be turned away. This school is situated almost in the center of the State, and reaches a far larger region not limited by State lines. It is near the border of the Yazoo country, which has begun to be so wondrously developed, and is so rapidly filling with colored people. The evangelization and enlightenment of this new Africa must largely come through Tougaloo. Here must be trained preachers, teachers and other leaders of character for this new region, as well as for the older portions of the State. Good, solid work has been done here all through the year, and preparation has been made for even better results in the future.

Straight University, in New Orleans, La., is peculiarly situated for an important and far-reaching work. It draws its students not only from the States, but also from Mexico and the West Indies—484 last year. With the enlarged accommodations for the primary and intermediate work which have been planned, this institution will be better prepared to meet the demands of higher education.

Tillotson Institute, at Austin, Texas, the youngest of our chartered institutions, has had a prosperous year with 230 students, in the Primary, Intermediate, Grammar, Normal, College Preparatory and College departments. Situated at the capital of the great empire of Texas, it is destined to be an educational, religious and evangelistic centre, a power for the building up of the kingdom of Christ. It greatly needs enlarged accommodations. Where is the Lord's steward who is ready to give it at once the imperatively needed Girls' Hall?

NORMAL AND GRADED SCHOOLS.

Next to our chartered institutions come our normal schools. These have the same course of study up to the college department as the chartered institutions have. These normal schools are eighteen in number, and are situated at Lexington and Williamsburg, Ky.; Memphis, Jonesboro, Grand View and Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Wilmington and Beaufort, N. C.; Charleston and Greenwood, S. C.; Atlanta, Macon, Savannah, Thomascome acquainted with almost every other branch of household labor. In the Industrial Room, where clothing is made for customers from without, as well as for the boys, twenty-six girls last year learned the use of the sewing-machine, and several were taught to manage more than one.

"The students are paid by the hour for most of the labor they perform, receiving from five to ten cents, according to their ability and the kind of work done. Some work, however, is paid for by contract, or by the piece. At the end of every month a time-table, or account of students' work, is furnished to the treasurer by the heads of the various departments; and the students are required to make out bills for all work done for other persons, and hand them to the treasurer, indorsed by the teacher or officer for whom the work was done. An account is then made up by the treasurer with each student, showing his debits and credits for the month, and the balance due. A copy of this is handed to him, and he is required to examine it critically, and point out any errors. Seniors are required to make out their own monthly accounts, and hand them to the treasurer before receiving his statement. This rule compels them to keep an accurate account of all work done, cash paid, and bills incurred. The results of this system are very satisfactory; and by it the students acquire a more thorough and practical knowledge of accounts than is possessed by many of the graduates of our Northern schools.

"Without the work we provide, very few of our pupils could pay the expenses of a residence here, though our whole charge is but ten dollars a month. By its aid they meet, on an average, more than half of their indebtedness; but many of our best scholars can not pay the remainder, and are trusted for a part of it till after leaving school.

"The fact that they are exerting themselves to pay for the privileges they enjoy, not passively receiving them from the hand of charity, greatly strengthens the character and promotes the self-respect of our students; but the tax upon our resources is almost as great as if we simply gave them what we offer them a chance of earning. Experience, however, has so fully convinced us of the value of this industrial training as a part of the education of our pupils, that we do not permit even those who could afford it to be without their share of work.

"Of the whole number of our scholars during the past year twenty-three were in the graduating class. Added to the class of '71, they make our whole number of graduates forty-three. Thirty-three of them are now teaching, or will open schools in a short time; five are at present continuing their studies; there are three of whose intentions we are uncertain, but who have taught at some time during the past year, leaving only two from whom we do not expect such service. This, however, does not represent the number of teachers we have sent out; for many under graduates, prevented by various circumstances from completing their course, are doing good work in this and the neighboring States. Those who have passed through our first year with credit are able to obtain schools readily, and are probably better fitted to teach than a large proportion of those who are in charge of colored schools in this State.

"The scarcity of good primary schools compels us to set our standard of admission low, and make our course less complete than we should be glad to do, if we could start from a higher point; but we try to give our pupils such glimpses of that which lies beyond as may send them away dissatisfied, and eager to enter wider fields of knowledge. When they leave us, they become centres of intellectual, moral, and religious influence to a greater extent than our friends at the North can easily realize. The change which passes over them, even in the course of a short residence here, is so plain, that the scholars themselves notice and remark upon it. Not their increased knowledge only, but the alteration in their whole manner and tone of thought, attracts attention wherever they go. We send them out with their new habits in some degree confirmed, to be examples in every thing to those among whom they labor; and we endeavor by all means within our reach to retain our influence over them, and help them to keep and even mount above the level to which they have risen. Everywhere they become superintendents, or at least teachers of Sunday-schools, and usually gather into them a much greater number of pupils than are found in the common schools. Thus the influence of our Bible classes, and of the labors of our earnest chaplain, is extended almost beyond calculation. Help for their Sunday-schools they often ask; and if we had the means, we could through them distribute papers, tracts, etc., far and wide among the neglected children of the State.

"We have received during the past year a grant from the State of Virginia of one third of the Agricultural College Land Scrip assigned to that State by Congress. It amounts to $95,000, and the interest, expended under the control of State curators, will enable us to increase the number of our industries, and provide for good scientific instruction. This money, however, can not be used for new buildings, of which we are in great need; nor will it diminish the burden of our current expenses.

"Our dining-room is now excessively crowded, our laundry-room insufficient; we have no convenient place in which to assemble for daily prayers, lectures, etc.; our girls have not proper lodgings, most of our boys occupy rooms which were intended for recitations, and a part of them are now encamped in tents. Two new dormitories, that for the girls including also a dining-room, kitchen, laundry, teachers' apartments, and chapel, have become real necessities. An endowment fund, yielding an income sufficient to meet the large difference there must always be between our receipts and expenses, is also essential to the permanence and progress of the school. Shall these wants be met? Shall the hundreds who are looking to Hampton for light be kept away because there is no room for them? Shall the thousands of little children growing up in idleness for want of teachers be left in ignorance?

"Where ex-rebels beg us for teachers, shall we answer, 'We are unable to supply them?'

"No work can be more directly in the line of God's providence than this.

"It needs strong supporters, large endowment, and for these we look to the North."

ville and McIntosh, Ga.; Athens, Mobile and Marion, Ala. Adding to these the normal departments of our five chartered institutions, gives us twenty-three normal schools in the South.

Besides these, we have in the South thirty-seven which we class as common schools. Eight of these are graded, with two or three teachers each. Nearly all are parochial schools. The teachers are in both the day schools and the Sunday-schools, and are not only school teachers, but church missionaries. They train the young of our congregations for greater usefulness, encourage many of the most promising to go to higher institutions, teach the parents better ideas of home life, and lead all ages to a more intelligent and spiritual worship.

INDUSTRIAL WORK.

Nearly all our schools—chartered, normal and even common—give some industrial training?

At Fisk, the young men are taught wood-working and printing; the young women, nursing, cooking, dress-making and house-keeping.

At Talladega, the young men learn farming, carpentry, painting, glazing, tinning, blacksmithing and printing; the young women, cooking, house-keeping, plain sewing and other needle-work.

At Tougaloo, the young men learn farming, carpentry, blacksmithing, wheelwrighting, painting, turning and tinning; the young women, sewing, dressmaking, cooking and housekeeping.

At Straight, the young men receive instruction in printing, carpentry, and floriculture; the young women, needlework, cooking and housekeeping.

At Tillotson, carpentry is taught the young men; needlework, cooking and housekeeping, the young women.

Our normal schools at Memphis, Tenn., Macon, Ga., and Williamsburg, Ky., have carpentry, printing, and other industrial training for the young men, and training in the various arts of home life for the young women.

At Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Macon, Thomasville, Athens, Ala., Marion, Mobile, Pleasant Hill, Sherwood, and other normal, graded and common schools, the young women are trained in the things which they will most need in making comfortable and pleasant homes. Indeed, we make it our special care that the girls shall everywhere in our work be taught these things, so essential to the uplifting of a people. In many places where we have no schools, the pastor's wife, or our special lady missionary, is doing this same kind of work.

THEOLOGICAL SCHOOLS.

At Fisk, Talladega, Tougaloo and Straight, there have been during the year theological classes. The Theological Department of Howard University, at Washington, has been supported by this Association. Even in some of our normal schools Biblical instruction has been given to some who are now preachers and some who intend to preach. But the number trained has not been sufficient to supply our pastorless churches. The need of a general theological seminary for our churches in the South is becoming imperative. The extensive enlargement of our church work, which ought to begin at once, can scarcely be made successful without this. Who is the one to seize this opportunity to establish an institution of untold possibilities in advancing the Kingdom of Christ on earth—a place where ministers shall be prepared for the work in the South and for foreign missions in Africa?

CHURCH WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Our church work has necessarily been of slow growth. Churches might have been multiplied, had we thought it best to lower the standard near the level of the old churches, and acknowledge wild ravings as belonging in the worship of God. We have believed that our churches should mean new ideas and intelligent worship. We have knowingly lent our aid to nothing else.

These churches are gathered into Associations, and the fine bodies of pastors and delegates which come together in these, present a most emphatic testimony to the value of the work done in the past, and are an earnest of what the future will show.

Revivals—some of them of great power—have been reported to us from the Plymouth Church, Washington, D. C., Fisk University, Memphis, Jonesboro, Sherwood, Glen Mary, Oakdale, Athens and Pine Mountain, Tenn.; Montgomery and Florence, Ala.; Tougaloo and Jackson, Miss.; Straight University, New Orleans, and Corpus Christi, Texas. Many others of our churches have had a quiet work of grace, by which additions have been made to them.

We report new churches at Glen Mary and Athens, Tenn.; Roseland, La; Fort Payne and Alco, Ala. This makes the whole number of our churches in the South 136.

Besides these churches, there are our churches among the Indians and the work of gathering the Chinese into churches in California.

We are praying and laboring for the eternal salvation of millions, the establishment through the grace of God, the atoning blood of Christ, and the work of the Holy Spirit, of character which shall meet the tests of the Judgment Day and the needs of eternal association with purity. In aiming at this ultimate result, our missionaries are doing a work of inestimable importance for the nation and the world. They are successfully working upon some of the great problems of this country, which armies and millions of money have failed, and of necessity must fail, to solve. Nothing but the "glorious gospel of the blessed God," taught from the pulpit and the teacher's desk, and illustrated in the eloquent lives of consecrated missionaries, can change the idol worshiper from heathen China, the wild-man of the West, the half-heathen Negro so recently in the cruel degradation of slavery, those of our own race in the bonds of ignorance and immorality—so that they shall have and manifest an intelligent and worthy manhood and womanhood. Nothing else can meet cruel prejudice, which would forever deny full manhood or womanhood to those called to it by God himself, and pour oil upon its angry waves until they shall be still.

Our plan of work in the South is often misunderstood and often misrepresented. It is not our plan to force the races together. It is not our plan to agitate questions which arouse the prejudices of the Southern people. We do not agitate. Quietly, steadily, patiently, lovingly, our missionaries seek to lift up the degraded, enlighten the ignorant, and bring them all to Christ, well knowing that bitter prejudice cannot forever stand opposed to an enlightened, cultivated, Christian people, whatever may be their color or their past condition. We have nothing to do with the question of social equality in the South any more than we have in the North. We are not even trying to force the races together in the churches. We have no principles which would prevent our aiding two churches in the same town—one with a membership of white, the other of colored people. We have done it. In our church work, we simply maintain that a Christian church should stand ready to fellowship any one whom Christ fellowships, that it should turn no one away because of his color, or because he, his father or his mother was a slave. We maintain that there is no Christian reason why there should be either State or local organizations of churches which will not fellowship churches whose memberships differ in race. We seek to establish churches and other institutions which dare interpret Christianity as Christ taught it, and which will not yield a Christian principle for enlarged statistics. There are caste churches enough in the South. No more are needed. If Congregationalism can go there true to its history, true to its real convictions, true to that gospel which successfully faced the bitter prejudices of Jew and Gentile with the broad invitation, "Whosoever will, may come," then it goes to become a mighty power and to win both a place for itself and other churches, in time, to accept the same broad interpretation of Christianity.

This Association has faith in the power of the gospel, and, under the reign of God, of the final triumph of the right. It is willing to enter the doors now so wide open for missionary work, and to wait, if need be, for that glory of the denomination, which is better than long tables of statistics, the glory of adhering to the right.

The time has now come when our church work can be greatly enlarged. Our schools have been doing their work, and scattering all through the South those who have learned what pure religion and spiritual worship mean, and they are ready and longing for something better than they find within their reach. We can now push our work as fast as the churches of the North will furnish the money. We most earnestly appeal for the means to enable us to greatly develop, during the coming year, this department of the work.

CHURCH WORK AMONG NEW SETTLERS IN THE SOUTH.

Wonderful and more wonderful tales are now reaching the world of the unlimited resources of the South. They are a new discovery even to the South itself. These stories of lumber and mineral wealth are turning the tide thitherward. Towns and cities are beginning to spring up as they have in the West, and both great need and rich opportunity call for immediate missionary work. This new population is mostly, as yet, from the North, though many from Wales, especially miners, and from other countries of the old world are beginning to come in. In the new towns they find no churches, in the old towns few whose ideas and customs can satisfy their minds and hearts. Here is a great opportunity. We can aid these people to establish churches which will emphasize that interpretation of the Gospel which we believe to be Christian.

In Florida, Louisiana, Alabama and Tennessee we have already aided in establishing such churches which have connected themselves—and gladly so—with the regular State organizations of Congregational churches. No direful results have followed. No fanaticism is in it. It is simply doing the thing that is right and Christian. May such churches continue to multiply in the "New South" and help to make it new indeed.

THE MOUNTAIN WORK.

Notwithstanding all the interest that has been manifested in our mountain work, we feel sure that the churches do not realize the magnitude of this field, the pressing needs of this people in the heart of our country, the wonderful opportunities before us, and the heart-stirring results already secured.

Large portions of seven States—three or four hundred counties—with a population of between two and three millions, claim our attention and call for our work. Here is a country of untold natural resources. Here is a people of good blood. Men of power have come from among them, and shown of what they are capable. Side by side with the Northern soldiers these mountaineers fought for the Union, or suffered in prisons rather than fight against it. Where our schools and churches have been established, men and women of worth and ability have stepped out and become strong helpers in building up new institutions. But away from these institutions and out of touch with the life of the towns, we find a class of people whose condition in itself is a Macedonian cry. Their windowless, stoveless, comfortless log cabins; their so-called schools, in which on the roughest benches conceivable, and without a desk, a slate, or a blackboard, with a teacher with unkempt hair, ragged and dirty clothes, possibly bare feet, who perhaps can scarcely read, the children study at the top of their voices—blab schools they call them—have for their course of study the spelling book alone, and are taught that a word is correctly spelled when all the letters are named, no matter in what order; their so-called churches, with perhaps a monthly meeting during the summer months, without Sunday-school, prayer meeting, or any form of church work, without morality as a requisite of church membership, with an illiterate ministry—a large number of the ministers cannot read even, and what is worse in many cases are drunken, impure, and in every way immoral; their children so easily gathered into day-schools and Sunday-schools, and so responsive to the work done for them—all these things appeal to us with pathetic power. Perhaps no missionary work ever showed greater results in so short a time than those obtained in these mountains.

We have here in two States eleven schools and twenty-two churches. Earnest calls have come to us to begin work in North Carolina and Alabama. We feel sure that if the churches could hear these appeals they would bid us respond. We have promised to begin work the coming year in these States, and we must look to the churches to furnish us the means. New lumbering and mining towns are springing up in this mountain country, and immediate missionary work is their only hope. A single one of these new towns, scarcely half-a-dozen years old, has had already more than a hundred men shot in it, and this awful work still goes on. This marvelously rich mineral region is sure to be filled in the near future with these mining towns, and unless the Christian work keeps pace with this kind of growth, this large territory will become notorious for bloody scenes as no portion of our land has ever been. Now is the time to preempt the country for Christ, by planting at strategic points the church and the Christian school, and through them to send forth to every part the pure, restraining and elevating influences of the gospel. God's call to us to do this work is loud and clear. Can we be faithful to Him and refuse to obey?

THE INDIANS.

There are 260,000 Indians in this country. Compared with our great fields in the South, this is small. But there is an emphasis on this work which is not made by figures. Those who were native to this land have been made foreigners. Those who were the first to receive missionary work here, and who responded as readily as any heathen people ever did, are still largely pagans. While one Christian has been telling the Indians the story of the gospel, another calling himself a Christian has been shooting them. They have not yet had a full chance to learn what Christianity is. From place to place they have been pushed so that they have not had time to build their altars to the true God. We have wronged them and we owe them more than we shall pay. We shall meet our obligations but in part, when we do all we can to save them.

We have in our Indian work eighteen schools and six churches, one new church having been added this year. In these, 68 missionaries have been doing noble service for the Indian and for the country. Shall the Indian problem forever perplex and shame both the country and the Church? Will not the churches enable us to send all the workers and do all the work needed to be done, and thus hasten the day when it can be joyfully proclaimed that the Indians are evangelized—no longer pagans and foreigners, but our fellow Christians and our fellow citizens?

THE CHINESE.

At our Annual Meeting in 1887 we were urged to bring the attention of the churches to this their phenomenal opportunity and duty, to give the gospel at short range and nominal cost to Asia's millions, and to support their hopeful and fruitful mission with all possible sympathy and aid Again, in 1888, the need of immediate and great re-enforcement and enlargement was urged upon us.

Sixteen missions have been in operation during the year, and in them thirty-five workers, ten of them Chinese, have been employed. 1,380 have been enrolled as pupils in our schools—249 more than last year. 40 have this year come out of heathenism into Christianity, and the whole number who have confessed Christ in these missions and have been received as true converts is above 750. This means much for the Chinese in this country, and it means missionaries for China as well.

ENLARGEMENTS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

Extensive building and improvements have been called for this year. At Lexington, Ky., the Chandler Normal School building is nearly completed at a cost of $15,000—the gift of Mrs. Chandler. At Williamsburg, Ky., thirteen acres of land have been secured for the enlargement of our very successful school there and the large industrial building moved upon it. $2,300 of the expense for this was paid by our generous friend, Mr. Stephen Ballard, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The increasing number of boarders at this institution has made necessary a new and larger dining room and kitchen, which have been built.

At Nashville, Tenn., a commodious two-story building of modern architecture, with rooms for physical culture and industrial training, has been erected.

At Memphis, Tenn., the Le Moyne school building, which in the winter was partially destroyed by fire, has been restored by the insurance.

At Knoxville, Tenn., the old church building, which was unfit for use, has been built over and a parsonage added, making a neat and convenient place of worship, and a home for the minister.

At Jellico, Tenn., the building used for church and school purposes has been considerably enlarged to meet the wants of a large Sunday-school and congregation.

At Grand View, Tenn., a new building has been put up for school and dormitory purposes.

At Pleasant Hill, Tenn., a large three-story Girls' Hall is in process of construction to enable the mountain girls to take advantage of this successful normal school.

At Pine Mountain, Tenn., the church building has been completed and furnished for school as well as church purposes and a teachers' home has been built.

At Beaufort, N. C., the large old school building known as Washburn Seminary, has been placed in the hands of the Association and refitted and a new normal school started in it. The church building, also, has received many greatly needed repairs.

At Chapel Hill, N. C., a brick church building, formerly belonging to the Southern Methodists, has been purchased for a school, and will be used also for church services.

At Macon, Ga., the Ballard School building has been completed and furnished at a cost of $14,000, and a Girls' Hall erected at a cost of $7,500—the first another generous gift of Mr. Stephen Ballard, and the other that of a friend in Massachusetts.

At Savannah, Ga., extensive repairs have been made on the Beach Institute building.

At Thomasville, Ga., the school facilities have been increased by moving a school building in the town, to the Connecticut Industrial School.

At McIntosh, Ga., land and buildings have been bought for the enlargement of this historic, successful and intensely interesting school.

At Woodville, Ga., the church and school building which had been nearly wrecked, first by the Charleston earthquake and then by a cyclone, has been made solid and comfortable.

At Byron, Ga., land has been bought and preparations have been made for a church building.

At Fairbanks, Fla., a school building and lot worth $2,500 have been given to us by Mrs. Merrill, of Bangor, Me., on condition that we maintain a school there.

At Marion, Ala., we have refitted a large dwelling for a greatly needed school building.

At New Decatur, Ala., a new church building is about completed.

At Tougaloo, Miss., the large Girls' Hall, owing to the peculiarities of the soil—alluvium, 300 feet deep—unknown when it was built, had been crushing its foundations into the ground until it was on the point of falling. Our own missionary and student force lifted it up, put under it new foundations and repaired it in every part. At a cost of between $4,000 and $5,000, they saved a $15,000 building which engineers and contractors pronounced a hopeless wreck.

At Jackson, Miss., our church has been nicely seated with new pews.

At Hammond, La., a new church building has been erected.

At Straight University, a new industrial building has been put up with student labor, and a small greenhouse has been built. For a long time the need of enlargement there has been felt, and a lot near the present buildings has been bought, on which is to be a school house for the primary and intermediate grades.

At the Fort Berthold Mission, North Dakota, a new church, school and mission home building has been built and named the Moody Station, after the giver of the money which built it; also a small church building at Moody Station No. 2.

At Cherry Creek, a new school, church and mission building—called after the donor, the Sankey Station—has been erected. At Rosebud Agency, a mission house, with a room for church worship, has been built. At Fort Yates, we report a new church building—the Darling Memorial.

These are the most important enlargements and improvements. Of course, there are many other smaller ones throughout our large field.

WOMAN'S BUREAU.

Twenty-six Woman's State Organizations now co-operate with us in our missionary work. Each year shows the increasing importance and helpfulness of the Woman's Bureau. From it go counsel, help and inspiration to the lady teachers in the field, and missionary news and helpful suggestions to the ladies of the State Associations. Through it pass the sympathy and the help of the earnest workers in the older churches to the earnest workers in our mission churches and schools. The people for whom we labor cannot be saved either for this world or the next, unless the women who make the homes are lifted out of coarseness and vice, and taught true womanhood and womanly duties and arts. The Woman's Bureau is a most potent factor in the work of bringing the Gospel to the rescue of womanhood in our mission fields.

FINANCES.

The current receipts have been	$376,216.88.
The expenditures, including the payment of the debt of last year of $5,641.21, have been	$371,745.21.
Leaving a balance in hand September 30, 1889	$4,471.67.

It is with devout gratitude to God that we present these figures, showing that we have been enabled during the past year to meet all current expenditures, to liquidate the indebtedness of last year and to show a balance of over four thousand dollars now in the treasury. This result is not only gratifying in respect to the past, but it is hopeful in respect to the future. We trust the constituents of the Association, who are so deeply interested in the success of the work entrusted to us, will see to it that the coming year shall terminate as favorably as this.

DANIEL HAND FUND.

In addition to the above receipts, the Association has received from Daniel Hand the munificent gift of one million eight hundred and ninety-four dollars and twenty-five cents ($1,000,894.25) to be known as the Daniel Hand Fund for The Education of Colored People. The income only of this Fund is to be used. The amount received as income from this Fund for the nine months to September 30, is $36,999.71. This amount is not included in the current receipts stated above, but is a Special Fund and has been appropriated under the terms and conditions of the Trust. From this income we have not only aided more than three hundred students who otherwise would not have had the privilege of atttending any school, but have also greatly enlarged our school accommodations at Chapel Hill and Beaufort, N. C., Phœnix, S. C,, Thomasville and McIntosh, Ga., Selma, Ala., and New Orleans, La. Another year will afford opportunities to a much greater number of pupils, and will still further enlarge our school facilities in the special lines of work contemplated by this gift. It was a noble gift from a noble man and it will do a noble work.

The overwhelming majority of the Southern Negroes are still found in the rural districts, where schools are few and far apart. It is expected that the gift of Daniel Hand will take educational privileges to thousands of these in the country and on the plantations, who but for this must have lived as in the blackness of night.

CONCLUSION.

This much we report. But how little can figures and words present the needs of these great fields. How little idea can they convey of the extent of the work done by our earnest, self-sacrificing, faithful and able missionaries.

We turn from the past to the future. The work attempted and done is great, the work unattempted and not done is far greater. Should every church and individual in the land double last year's contribution this year, we would be compelled still to leave greatly needed work undone. In view of boundless opportunities, we can ask no less of the churches than that which the recent National Council at Worcester recommended—five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000) for the work of the coming year. Brethren, with more prayer, more consecration and more self-denial let us take up together this vast work and these difficult problems which God has set before us.

It has been found that with the West ever growing, and Congregational churches multiplying, the field of our Western District Secretary was too large for him possibly to cover it all. Hence this immense district has been divided, and another has been established with its centre at Cleveland, Ohio. Rev. C. W. Hiatt, a graduate of Wheaton College and Oberlin Seminary, has been placed in charge of this district, and has already entered upon the work. We bespeak for him a hearty welcome from the churches.

Prof. Edward S. Hall, a graduate of Amherst College and a teacher of long and successful experience, has been chosen a Field Superintendent for the Southern work, and entered upon his duties at the beginning of our year.

We again make grateful acknowledgment of our indebtedness to the American Bible Society for its grants of Bibles, and to the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society for its grants of books and lesson helps, to our poorer churches and Sunday-schools.

OBITUARY.

We have this year to chronicle an unusually large number of deaths among the workers in our field.

Early in the year, our Gregory Institute, in Wilmington, N. C., was sadly afflicted in the death of Mrs. Geo. A. Woodard, the wife of its Principal. She was a most devoted missionary, consecrating her earnestness and fidelity to the cause of Christ.

Very soon after came the tidings of the death of Prof. Azel Hatch, Principal of our Normal School in Lexington, Ky., who entered his heavenly rest on the 31st of December, 1888. Prof. Hatch was educated at Oberlin College and at the Union Theological Seminary in New York. He entered the service of this Association in 1876, and occupied honorable positions in the schools at Montgomery, Ala., Tougaloo, Miss., and in Lexington, Ky. In every post of duty Mr. Hatch showed himself to be a faithful, conscientious and Christian worker, shrinking from no duty.

Mrs. Hattie B. Sherman, the daughter of Rev. R. F. Markham, died January 14th, at her residence in Stockton, Kan. For two years she was a missionary of this Association at Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga., where she rendered faithful and efficient service in the education of the colored people.

On Saturday, March 16th, the great household at Fisk University was suddenly saddened by the announcement of the death of Mrs. Lydia Herrick Bennett, who, after an illness of four weeks, was called to her rest. In 1867, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett gave up their work in a pleasant Northern parish, and came to Fisk University, where they labored together for almost twenty-two years. During these years, Mrs. Bennett was not only an efficient helper to her husband and a wise and tender mother to her children, but contributed much to the work of the school. During the last few years, she gave much time and labor to the preparation of a botanical collection for the Scientific Department of the University.

Mrs. Villa (Crumb) Borden died at her home in Norwich, N. Y. During her three years' service in the work of this Association at Athens, Ala., she was untiring in efforts for the improvement of her pupils.

Mr. A. J. Berger, formerly industrial teacher at Macon, Ga., died at Claremont, Virginia, September 2d., at the age of 66 years.

Miss J. P. Bradshaw, a former teacher at Tougaloo, Miss., passed into the better land in August. For five years she bravely battled for life, but finally died of consumption.

Another of our educated, consecrated and useful colored pastors has passed away. Rev. Welborn Wright, pastor of the Second Congregational Church of Lawrence, Kansas, died at his home, August 14th, of consumption. He was born in South Carolina, and had been pastor of the church in Lawrence over six years. He was a man of thought, earnest in his convictions, and had acquired a large influence over his own people. His church had prospered greatly under his care. He won the esteem of the white people. Two years ago he was elected a member of the Board of Education of the city, and proved himself to be a man of good judgment in practical affairs.

Rev. Larmon B. Lane, M.D., died at his home in St. Charles, Ill., Sept. 15, 1889. He was born in Tallmadge, Ohio, June 21, 18[illegible]. He studied medicine at Cleveland Medical College, and afterwards attended Oberlin College and Theological Seminary, graduating in 1848. The following year he was sent by the American Missionary Association as missionary physician to Siam, where he labored faithfully, ministering to soul and body six years. In 1855 a severe hemorrhage compelled him to give up the missionary work. After a short rest he began his work of preaching the gospel. He had successful pastorates in Illinois and Ohio; afterwards he practiced medicine in Geneva and St. Charles, Ill.

After our General Survey was in type, October 18th, we were startled by the telegraphic announcement of the sudden death from typhoid fever of Prof. Edward S. Hall, one of our Field Superintendents. Mr. Hall had been one year in the service of the Association, and had already shown himself to be a man of varied and remarkable capabilities—not only skilled in the management of schools, but familiar in an unusual degree with the practical work of building and repairing school and church edifices. His services have been invaluable to the Association, and it will be difficult to supply his place. As a man of noble Christian character and consecration to the work entrusted to him, he had won our highest esteem.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

REPORT OF SECRETARY.

A look backward over the twelve months since our last annual gathering reveals much of interest and encouragement, that should fill our hearts with gratitude that our woman's work has had such an influence in bringing light and gladness to thousands of women and children, whose lives have been cast in the dark portions of our Christian land. So large an element of woman's work enters into the plan upon which the field of the American Missionary Association is operated, and it is so interwoven with the entire structure of its missions, that any report of it as separate and distinct can be only partial. And yet with the more systematic organization of woman's work in the raising of funds, we have been able to assign special woman's work on mission ground, with most satisfactory results, for to have a particular school or missionary has stimulated the givers, and has brought courage and comfort to the missionaries who have been thus sustained.

Our Woman's Work. What is it? Whom is it for? Who should do it?

What is it? It is to take to heathen mothers and sisters here in our own country the glorious news of salvation for them; to bring the light and truth of the Gospel to those who are groping in the fog of superstition and a wrong conception of Bible truth; to plant the Christian school; to establish the Christian home as an object lesson; to show mothers how to train their children to honor and obedience, to mingle with the needy and helpless, and by sympathy and tact secure such changes in the homes as will lead to their permanent improvement; in a word, to follow the example of our Lord Jesus, by living and teaching the blessings of intelligence and godliness among those in our home-land for whose improvement and well-being we are peculiarly responsible. The American Missionary Association has ninety-four schools, and in most of these more women than men are engaged. It is the duty of the missionary teacher to avail herself of every opportunity which her relation with her scholars affords, either in day or boarding school, to inculcate Christian truth, to warn against the evils which she finds common among the people, to teach by example and precept the living Word, as manifested in the life of Christ. The wonderful change wrought in those who are brought under the influence of such consecrated missionaries, testifies to the value of woman's work in missions.

But who are these for whom we are peculiarly responsible, and why is there so especial need of woman's work?

They are our eight millions of negroes, of whom probably not more than one-fourth may be said to have felt the corrective influence of the Gospel upon their lives. Perhaps only those who have come in contact with these people for the sole purpose of helping them to manhood and womanhood, can comprehend the tremendous incubus of bad habits, stunted growth, blunted susceptibilities, with which they struggle. It is painful to note the limitations of those even who have had the best advantages. Yet they are ever reaching upward, and the struggle is bringing out noble qualities of character, showing the possibilities of the race. We have had a goodly recompense for Christian labor among them, and does not this increase our responsibility for the three-fourths that are yet to be helped to a good understanding of themselves and their duty toward man and God? And no one will question that in the development of the best womanhood there rests the surest hope of the elevation of this wronged, and even now, greatly oppressed people.

But our woman's work finds also its mission among the needy whites of the South. It seems almost incredible that there should be found, within thirty-six hours' ride of our Northern towns, so dotted with schools and churches and Christian homes, a section of our country where there have been in hiding, in the ravines and on the mountain sides, two or more millions of our American people, in gross ignorance and superstition. But such is the case, and as always, the women are the greatest sufferers. Doubtless the Negroes have the larger claim upon us, because of their past history, their present wrongs, and their great numbers, which have become so startling as to make it imperative that we yield no jot of advantage gained, but rather increase our efforts every year for their intellectual and moral improvement. Yet the work for the mountain whites is just now especially urgent. A missionary of much experience expresses the view, that if we can bring the forces of Christian education to bear mightily upon these mountain people for the next ten years, they will themselves become a power as our allies in the great battles of the future against immorality and false doctrines. A few weeks since I met in North Carolina near the Great Smoky Mountains a mother and daughter, the latter about eighteen years old. A school for mountain girls had been opened there, and the daughter had attended the last year. On entering she could not read a word, but now was in the Fourth Reader, and studying arithmetic and geography. The rich, soft color that came to her cheeks, and the kindling light of her eyes, told of the brightness this school had brought into her life; this Christian school, for here too, she had learned the way of eternal life. Even the mother's eyes sparkled like stars as she looked with admiration upon her "learned" daughter.

But our door stands wide open also towards the Indians and Chinese, and all the arguments that appeal to us so strongly for the disenthrallment of women in heathen lands, appeal with equal, yea greater force for the heathen in our own land, whom the Gospel only can make free.

Such is our great and urgent call for work for woman in the field of the American Missionary Association. Who should do it, and how? Who but the Christian women of our churches, either directly or by substitutes? Some can go, of those who have prepared themselves for the highest and best quality of Christian service. They should be thoroughly trained and disciplined teachers, but not this alone. Every teacher should be a careful and intelligent Bible student, able to instruct from the word of God, practical and earnest, self-sacrificing and co-operative, ready to do what seems most necessary, even though it should not call into action her finest mental qualities. Let those who cannot go, send a substitute, but let none fail to seize the opportunity for a part in this blessed work, for the salvation of our country, and its protection as a Christian land.

There are now twenty-six State organizations for Woman's Work in our own country through our Congregational Churches, which co-operate in the work of the American Missionary Association. Some have increased their contributions during the past year; others have not fallen below the standard they had fixed for this field, but have not made any annual advance. With a very few, co-operation has not yet extended beyond a study of our work. But a study of the field is encouraging, for a knowledge of the need brings responsibility to do all possible to meet it, and soon we trust these also will be contributing Unions. To facilitate the study of our field, our monthly magazine has been sent free to many ladies' societies, our literature has been distributed, and more than sixteen thousand copies of missionary letters have been circulated among the ladies. Would not the value of organization be shown in the larger flow of funds annually for a work of such pressing necessity as this? We rejoice that some have already demonstrated this value of united effort. More than one State Missionary Union, recognizing the importance of this work and remembering that in drawing upon the benevolence of all the Congregational Ladies' Societies in the State, it should not do a small thing, has raised the support of four or more missionary teachers for an entire school. And the officers of the Union have taken pains to stir up the pure minds of the ladies in each auxiliary by way of remembrance of this particular field.

But there are those not in the State organizations, whose help we record, as Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. Many such have during the year asked for a special object for their contributions. What can the Secretary do? The particular things that can be accomplished with forty or fifty or seventy dollars are indeed few, but these sums combined may sustain a missionary for a year. So each such contribution is made a share of the four hundred dollars necessary for the purpose, and something definite is accomplished. What is it? This. A faithful Christian woman is sent to the field, where, in a neat cottage, she makes her home life an object lesson to the colored people or the mountain whites or the Indians for many miles around. Their homes begin to improve. Her day school, held in the little church near by, attracts not only children, but young men and women, and even young married people. A Christian Endeavor Society is formed. The Sunday-school and church take a new start under her teachings. Other Sunday-schools and Christian societies are maintained through her influence, and so the small contributions accomplish a large work.

Private individuals also have aided us. What a blessed privilege to be able out of one's own income to put worthy missionaries into such a field.

There has been an increase in aid rendered in sewing, a form of help that is very valuable in keeping our boarding schools and mission homes furnished, our sewing schools provided with basted work, and clothing ready for worthy but needy students. As with money, so with sewing, we could use wisely very much more than has been received.

We acknowledge, also, the kindness of ladies in furnishing books and papers adapted to the need. The young people, especially among the Negroes, are acquiring a taste for reading, and with their emotional and excitable natures, they take readily to sensational literature, with its startling illustrations. A neighborhood or society collection of books and papers will usually contain some of such a stamp, and you may be sure they will not always discriminate in favor of the most instructive reading. Therefore select for them as you would for your own sons and daughters, what is attractive and healthful, and withhold all else.

And now we are just starting upon a new year. Four hundred and seventy-six laborers have been called into the missionary ranks of the American Missionary Association. One hundred and ninety missions are in operation, with their widening influence and ever growing needs. Of our one hundred and forty-two churches there are fifty-seven which have not at present any Northern missionary associated with them. The difference in the development of these churches, as contrasted with those which have the influence and help of Northern teachers, is so marked, as to constitute a most urgent appeal for more missionaries—faithful women—to gather in the young people, interest and instruct them, to live among them, an example of economy and thrift in housekeeping, of neighborly kindness, of faithfulness in church obligations and of consistent Christian life. I do not hesitate to affirm that in the field of the American Missionary Association such provision is next in importance to the preached word. Neither can take the place of the other. Either is at a disadvantage without the other. And yet there are fifty-seven of these mission stations this year, now, without such beneficent woman's ministry, waiting only for additional funds, the new money necessary to provide reinforcements.

I appeal to you, Christian women, in your organized capacity as State Unions; and as individuals—stewards to whom perchance our Lord has entrusted a goodly inheritance—for help to the American Missionary Association in this almost overwhelming responsibility. Send us the missionaries for these needy fields.

I appeal to you in behalf especially of the wronged and helpless women and girls of these ten millions of our own countrymen, American born, whose only hope is in the sympathy and the help of the Christian people of our own land. We do not live in the day of small things, but of great needs and large opportunities. Surely now, if ever, is the time to "enlarge the place of thy tent and stretch forth the curtains of thy habitation. Spare not, lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes, that thou mayest spread abroad on the right hand and on the left, and possess the nations of our land."

Average age, about 16 years. About two thirds of the students are colored.

A letter from Prof. Rogers gives us the following items in regard to our oldest college in the South. We rejoice in the tokens of its brightening prospects:

"The outlook for the future never seemed brighter. We are conscious that the Lord has laid upon us no light task, in providentially calling us to open this school from the first to all, and in sending to our care those of the two races about us, as well as those of both sexes.

"Our commencement exercises were not unlike those of past years, and consisted, in the morning, of orations by young men of the college classes, and essays by members of the ladies' course. In looking over the programme, I notice that thirteen were white, and eleven more or less colored. The themes were mainly upon topics of the day, which were handled with great freedom and earnestness, exhibiting in some instances no little diversity of view.

"The addresses of Rev. E. B. Fairfield, of Mansfield, O., and of Prof. Shackleford, of Kentucky University, made a profound impression upon the audience, consisting of some two thousand persons,—and such an audience as is rarely, if ever, seen outside of Berea, white and black, and all shades between, mingled indiscriminately, and without any apparent consciousness of their unusual juxtaposition.

"The new Ladies' Hall, which will be, when completed, by far our best building, is going forward rapidly, and it is hoped will be ready for use by the end of the year.

"With the opening of the next term, Mrs. J. H. Clark enters upon her duties as Principal of the Ladies' Department, and we doubt not will give new life and efficiency to that part of the institution."

Rev. C. H. Fairchild, Financial Agent of the College, reports thus:

"Berea College has felt nothing, not even her persecutions, so severely as she has the insufficiency and unfitness of her accommodations. Had not the government three years ago erected a building capable of accommodating one hundred young men, Berea College, with all its wealth of sacrifice and prestige of success, might by this time have been a thing of the past. The colonist system of establishing a college, so admirable in most particulars, feels disastrously such a want as Berea College has felt. This year, therefore, has been a bright one, in that it has witnessed the inclosure of as ample, substantial, and suitable a structure as can be found connected with the reconstructed educational interests of the South. The building when finished will cost $50,000, and is designed to accommodate one hundred and ten young ladies, besides providing a dining-hall for two hundred boarders, a parlor, library-room, reading-room, offices, an assembly-room, etc. The foundation had been laid last year, and for the progress this year, thanks are chiefly due to Mr. Rufus R. Graves, of Brooklyn, who headed with $15,000 a subscription which afterward swelled to $22,000. It is true that some $14,000 still is lacking to complete the building, but it is felt that the friends of the institution will hardly permit it to suffer longer so severely, when such ample relief can be afforded so readily.

"The interesting scenes of former commencement occasions were repeated this year. The extensive bower, capable of seating one thousand persons, was renovated, and during the five hours of the forenoon and afternoon exercises it was full. There were whites and blacks, cream-colored and dusky-brown, mountain-men and blue-grass farmers, nine tenths of both classes being wholly illiterate, ex-rebels still violently democratic, and fervid Union men. They were seated compactly and indiscriminately together through five hours in orderly, and apparently interested, attention to the exercises, orations, essays, music, and addresses. . . . . It is worth a journey of hundreds of miles to see such an audience.

"This is but one of many evidences of the interest awakened in all classes of society, and it is not easily accounted for. A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette suggests that the pluck manifested in the past explains it in part. He says:

"'The traditional Kentuckian accounts himself specially an admirer of pluck, and shows it in that bold address and frank bearing which are easily exaggerated and mistaken for swagger. One can but think that a sincere respect for pluck has much to do with the toleration and even friendly interest accorded this aggressive school for six years past by its near neighbors and enemies, by some even who in 1859 succeeded in driving its entire working force and all resident friends from the State.

"'As a gentleman of fine culture and position in the State, who is of Kentucky birth and Virginia education, expressed it after the commencement exercises yesterday, 'Apart from any principles involved in this experiment, I am interested in Mr. Fee's triumph. It is glorious to see the man who was scouted, abused, and driven from the State for his idea, standing to-day amid the approving and sympathizing audience of nine hundred or a thousand Kentuckians.'

"There may be truth in this; but dimly as they may now recognize it, principle rather than pluck lies at bottom of their interest and confidence. One can hardly overestimate the value of such an influence not only in the educational but in the social reconstruction of the South. The work is recognized as a permanent one placed upon a permanent basis. The professors and teachers suffer nothing of that social ostracism which has been so generally felt at the South. And when it is remembered that the work is the education together of blacks and whites in nearly equal numbers, and that the men are those identified with the anti-slavery struggle before the war, one can see arising above the social wreck of the South a more enduring and sightly structure than that founded upon the corner-stone of slavery.

"The work among the whites of the hill-country is developing in interest and importance every year. It deserves more attention at the hands of benevolent men than it has ever received. Five years ago, General Runkle, in an official report, said that 'for this class there has no provision been made, either by State or national authority, and benevolence has never gone within its borders.' No more interesting missionary work can be found in our own or any other land. Hemmed in by mountains, and living in a State which has never fostered educational influences, except for the rich, they have been left behind in the world's progress. In some counties not two weekly newspapers are taken, and this is a fair type of the general ignorance of this mountain-country. Yet these men were loyal during the war, are plucky in disposition, are proverbially hospitable, and are now singularly open to religious and educational influences. The effort made by professors and scholars in establishing common-schools has met with very great success. But the scarcity of teachers is very great, and will continue so until Berea College can educate those of their own number to meet this demand. Common-school systems at the South will keep pace with every practical effort made to establish common-schools. Mission-schools and churches have also been established, and the number and influence of these is increasing.

"All that Christian men can give is needed in this work; their prayers, their sympathies, their money. The foundations of this school were laid in sacrifice; it must be built up with sacrifice. But the result has justified every such expenditure in the past, and will do so in the future."

REVIEW OF THE YEAR.

BY REV. WM. C. POND, D.D.

Our fiscal year ended August 31st. To a stranger looking on as I close its accounts, there might be nothing visible but an array of figures "dry as dust." But if that on-looker could count the heart-beats, as I draw near to making up the balance, could watch the rising tide of feeling, could hear the out-burst of thanksgiving sounding through the chambers of the soul, and now and again breaking the silence of my study with the cry:—"What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?" he would realize that there was something in those figures not so very dry. All bills paid, and even a balance much larger than usual left to help out the too scant resources of the new year! I find myself saying again and again: "How can this be?" It looked so dark four months ago; it looks so bright to-day. God has answered prayer, has been true to his promise, has changed to blessing the stress that we were under by placing thus upon our work the seal of his own and his people's approbation.

Sixteen missions have been in operation during the year, all but three of them for the entire twelve months. Thirty-five workers have been employed, ten of whom have been Chinese brethren. The months of labor aggregate 354.

The total number who have been enrolled as pupils in our schools is 1,380. This is larger by 249 than the enrollment of the previous year, and by 336 than that of the year before. The average membership month by month was in the aggregate, 523; the average attendance, 319. These numbers are also in excess of the corresponding ones in several previous years. Among these members of our schools, there are 211 that profess to have ceased from idolatry, and 150 who are believed to be true disciples of Christ. I cannot now state the exact number who have professed conversion during the year, but I believe it to be about forty. If so, the total number who have declared themselves to be Christians and have been accepted as such by our brethren, is more than 750.

At San Buenaventura the new mission house, finished several months ago, gives great satisfaction. It is not the property of the Mission, but has been built for it and is rented to us at cost. We can rely upon the use of it as long as the work continues in that place,—that is, if the building lasts so long. We were paying $12.00 per month for a low, ill-located and ill-built, untidy shanty, yet the best place that could be had. We now pay $8.00 per month for a neat, commodious building which furnishes not only an attractive school-room, but living rooms also, for which our brethren pay a small rent, and thus make for themselves something very like a Christian home. Four of these brethren were recently baptized and received to the Congregational Church.

The new mission house in Oakland we hold by the same tenure as that at San Buenaventura. It could not be better located, is a very neat structure, substantial also, and planned expressly for our work. It, too, is rented to us at cost.

The expenditures for the year ending August 31, 1889, have been as follows:

For salaries of Superintendent (nine months), teachers and Chinese helpers	$7,654.55
Rents of mission houses	2,464.00
Incidental expenses	900.45
Total	$11,019.00

The expense for salaries, it will be seen, averages for each worker $21.62 per month. The incidental expenses include fuel and lights, furniture for newly-opened mission houses, traveling expenses of the Superintendent and the evangelist helpers, printing, etc., etc.

The resources have been as follows:

Appropriation from the A. M. A	$7,100.00
Offerings made directly to the Treasury of the Mission as an Auxiliary of the A. M. A.	4,130.65
Total	$11,230.65

This shows a balance in hand of $211.65.

The offerings received at the Auxiliary treasury have been classified as follows:

From local missions	$1,559.00
" Churches in California	1,129.15
" Individuals in California	850.00
" Eastern friends	592.50
Total	4,130.65

The expenditures have been $11,019, of which more than $1,600 came from the Chinese themselves, while their offerings for mission work in China and the expenses met by themselves in connection with Christian work in California would show a giving on their part of at least $2,500 during the year. Surely we do well to "thank God and take courage."

Prof. A. K. Spence reports as follows:

"The history of Fisk University, for the scholastic year 1871–72, is especially marked by the development of its courses of study, by the efforts of the Jubilee Singers to gain funds for its use, and the appointment of a corps of professors.

"As to the first of these, there are now established the following courses of study, leaving law and medicine yet to be provided for: A college classical course of four years, with college preparatory course of three years, making unitedly as thorough a curriculum of studies as is usually found in American colleges. Two Normal courses of two years each; the first of which embraces only common-school studies, with the addition of professional instructors, and prepares the pupil to teach common-schools; and the second of which, commencing where the first ends, gives instruction in the sciences, higher mathematics, etc. A theological course of three years, which may be pursued at the same time with other studies, and model schools, A and B, requiring each about two years for their completion, and preparing the pupil for the higher courses. Besides these courses, instruction is given in bookkeeping, music, both vocal and instrumental, and gymnastics.

"As to the 'Jubilee Singers,' the facts are as follows: At their annual meeting in June, 1871, the Board of Trustees, jointly with the Field-Secretary of the A. M. A., instructed Mr. George L. White, Treasurer and Musical Director of the University, to keep a company of the students of the institution under musical training during the summer vacation. Should circumstances seem to favor, they were to give concerts the coming year for the benefit of the University. When the concert season came, in the autumn, the question was, Do the circumstances favor? It seemed difficult to answer. Judicious and true friends were divided in their opinion, the majority, apparently, being opposed. But there were the young people who had spent their vacation in preparation, and there was the money already expended by the institution for them. There, too, were the lines of hospital buildings fast going to decay, in which teachers and scholars could not long shiver through the chill winter. Fisk University had come to the Red Sea of its history. Should it go forward? It did, and the waves parted before it.

"In justice, it must be said that, humanly speaking, without the courage, determination, and faith of Mr. George L. White, the Jubilee Singers would never have gone forth.

"It was a day of doubt and misgiving when that little company left us on their uncertain mission. They were not then the well-known 'Jubilee Singers,' but an unknown troupe without a name, and who were mentioned in a leading newspaper as 'Negro Minstrels, calling themselves Christians.' After purchasing provisions sufficient to supply the Home for a few days, every dollar had to be taken to get the singers across the Ohio River.

"Then came the terrible fire at Chicago, and all sympathy and aid went to the sufferers there. For some weeks just enough of success was given to answer the prayer so often sung by them in their own sweet, wild music:

'O Lord, O my Lord, O my good Lord!
Keep me from sinking down;'

but not enough as yet even to replace the funds used to put them into the field.

"So, too, at the institution, the oft-repeated prayer, 'Give us this day our daily bread,' had a new significance. Many a time the last quarter of a dollar was paid for provisions, and yet the stern decision, no more debt, was adhered to. Was it too much to expect that the God who fed Elijah by the ravens would feed us and those under our care? He did feed us; not by a miracle, at least visible to human eyes, but by a kind ordering of his providence. When the trial had been long enough, the troupe soon refunded to the institution all they had cost it, and paid in addition all its indebtedness at the time they left it. The boarding department was already running on a cash, self-sustaining basis, and, at the end of the year, there were $20,000 deposited in the bank by the Jubilee Singers toward the erection of Jubilee Hall.

"'They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.'

"In regard to the school, the diminished attendance, as compared with the previous year, was in the primary grades, and not to be regretted, as it was the result of increased facilities to pursue their studies in the public schools of the city, which are in a flourishing condition. Many also of the advanced pupils had exhausted their means and taught school during the year with the hope of returning again. The good they had thus done, especially in the States of Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kentucky, can not be estimated, while the people of these dark regions are crying for those who shall bring them light.

"At the last annual meeting of the Board of Trustees, the following professors were appointed, subject to ratification by the A. M. A.:

"A. K. Spence, M.A., Professor of Greek; Rev. H. S. Bennett, M.A., Professor of Rhetoric and Theology; George L. White, Esq., Professor of Music; Miss Helen C. Morgan, M.A., Professor of Latin; Henry W. Hubbard, M.A., Professor of Mathematics; Rev. F. A. Chase, M.A., Professor of Natural Science.

"These professors will meet the immediate wants of the institution. A professor of mental and moral science will be needed soon.

"Substantial progress has been made during the year in point of scholarship. Four were promoted to the sophomore class in college, and six to the freshman, while three graduated from the common-school normal course.

"The religious work has been less marked than that of the previous year, and yet not without its fruits. God's presence has been very sensibly felt continually at the chapel exercises, attended daily by all the members of the school, and in the devotions of the Home. During much of the time a daily prayer-meeting was held at noon for the pupils boarding in the city, and in the evening for those boarding in the institution. Many scenes of deep interest took place in these meetings. Conviction was generally long and painful, accompanied with many tears and groans and prayers. Frequently, individuals were so affected as to be unable to pursue their studies, and the downcast looks of some for weeks were a continual sorrow to us. Their joy and ours, when their sorrow was turned to joy, was correspondingly great. About twenty-five thought they passed from death unto life, and several of them have become most earnest Christians. One at once gave himself to the ministry, and entered the class in the Bible and in sermonizing. He has since decided to take a more thorough course of preparation. He

BRIEF HISTORY.

The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846, its distinctive characteristic being freedom from all complicity with slavery and caste.

The object as stated in its constitution is, "To conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort."

It began its work in Foreign Missions in Africa, Siam, Sandwich Islands, West Indies; and its work in our own country, in the Western States and among the Indians.

In 1848, it began work in the South among whites and blacks, although attended with great opposition and danger.

In 1852, it undertook to reach the Chinese in California, the plans ripening in 1870 to successful work.

In 1861, during the civil war, it began the enlargement of work in the South, which has been marked by steady progress and success.

In 1882, it transferred its Foreign Missions and enlarged its Indian work by receiving the Indian Missions of the American Board.

The work of the American Missionary Association is therefore at present among the Chinese in California, the North American Indians and the needy classes of our Southern States.

SERMON.

THE PURPOSE AND METHOD OF THE REDEEMER.

BY REV. ROBERT R. MEREDITH, D.D.

"Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law." ISAIAH xlii: 1-4.

This prophecy refers to the character and work of the Messiah. Of this there can be no doubt; for aside from the evidence furnished by the passage itself, the words are quoted by an inspired evangelist and expressly applied to Christ. The prediction covers the whole work of the Redeemer, alike in the humiliation of His incarnate life, in the progress of His kingdom, and in the final triumph of His mediatorial reign. It sets before us the grand purpose of His interposition, and the general method by which He proceeds to its accomplishment.

It is to these particulars that attention is invited:—I. THE REDEEMER'S PURPOSE; and II. THE REDEEMER'S METHOD. A consideration of these points must bring to view the ground on which the hope of Christ's church rests, and the principles which should inspire and control its efforts.

I. THE REDEEMER'S PURPOSE.—What has Jesus Christ undertaken to do for the world? What is the nature of the enterprise He has in hand on behalf of our race? To these important questions the text furnishes a brief but comprehensive answer: "He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles," "He shall bring forth judgment unto truth," and He is to "set judgment in the earth." The word "judgment," as here used, has no better equivalent than righteousness, in the sense of that which is essentially right in heart and life, both toward God and toward man.

This righteousness—rightness—in all the powers and operations of the soul, and in all its relations to God and the universe, is the master need of mankind. God made man upright—all the powers of his soul in accord with each other, with the external world, and with his great Creator. But man sinned, and by his disobedience forfeited his noble inheritance. How thoroughly that original derangement has diffused itself into all the faculties and relationships of man, and into every part of the world, history, observation, and consciousness, all bear witness. We have only to look at the individual soul—filled with tumultuous passion, tossed and torn by doubt and fear and guilt, unable wholly to renounce either its sins or its God, to see how much it needs the advent into it of some divine Being who can still the turbulence of passion, restore the lost balance to its powers, and renew it again in righteousness, until, in its blessed experience, "the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." Look out upon the world at large. Mark the selfishness and cupidity, the injustice and crime which are darkening the homes and blasting the hopes of the children of men; think of the oppression and ignorance, the superstition and degradation under whose weight the populations of empires have groaned for centuries; behold the race prostrate in moral decrepitude, and frequently forced by its very religions into a still deeper impurity; and then remember that all this is the bitter fruit and expression of unrighteousness—that this miserable condition of things must disappear before the establishment of rectitude, and say if this be not the world's great need. The want of it involves the want of all other good. Well may "the isles wait for His law!" Universal conscience cries out for righteousness. For lack of it "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."

The Redeemer has undertaken to meet this great need of the world. This was His purpose in coming among men. He came not to establish certain forms of theological thought and expression; not to set up certain ecclesiastical organizations and rituals,—all these are of little worth, except in so far as they can be made the means to a vastly grander end. Jesus Christ came to establish essential righteousness in individual human souls, and so in the community and in the world. It is His grand purpose, never for one moment lost sight of, to enlighten the ignorance, to quicken the conscience, to energize the will, to purify the affections, and to exalt the aims of men, bringing them thus into harmony with God. He came to make every wrong right—to break the oppressor's yoke, to banish cupidity and caste, ignorance and selfishness, and every form of sin, so that Eden shall bloom again in this dark and sin-cursed world. Magnificent purpose! altogether worthy of the Divine Redeemer. For its accomplishment He lived that life on earth which stands and must forever stand as the highest example of embodied righteousness. For this He died that death on the cross by which he showed the righteousness of God: "that He might himself be just, and the justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus"—that death which must for all time furnish to men the strongest possible motive to righteous living. For this He ascended the mediatorial throne, and has sent forth His Spirit to be man's efficient helper to a life that is beyond his unaided strength—a life of righteousness. For this He organized His church in the world, that by the proclamation of the truth and the ministry of His Spirit in answer to united prayer, men might be persuaded of the security, the dignity, and the blessedness of right living. This is Christ's purpose; this is the grand mission of His Church.

In the prosecution of this sublime purpose, the Redeemer calls all his disciples into co-operation with Himself. They are to make His purpose theirs; and in the might of His Spirit, living righteously themselves, they are to seek to persuade others to be righteous. In this they are to find the development of their own spiritual character, and by this the world is to be won for Christ. This call of the Master lays upon his followers a most solemn responsibility, as it opens to them a most blessed privilege. In response to it, faithful men of God, intelligently recognizing the obligation and joyfully embracing the privilege, organized the Association whose Annual Meeting brings us together at this time, that they might the more efficiently further the beneficent purpose of their Divine Lord. For well-nigh half a century it has steadily carried on its work for Christ, with Christ, and by Christ's power. Another year of such toil is accomplished, and we are gathered on this anniversary occasion to gratefully review the blessings of the past, carefully consider the problems of the present, and seek increased wisdom, firmer faith, nobler courage, and loftier inspirations, as we turn to face the work yet to be done. Under these circumstances it cannot be otherwise than profitable for us to pause, and bethink ourselves anew and more profoundly of the dignity, the glory, the divinity, of the vocation wherewith we are called, as workers together with Christ in the realization of his purpose of mercy and salvation.

The prophecy of the text, in its full accomplishment, anticipates nothing less than this—the complete attainment of our Lord's gracious end. And it also brings to light the method of procedure by which it is to be effected. Consider now this aspect of the prediction.

II. The Redeemer's method.—This is set before us by the prophet in a fourfold view,—as authorized, as unostentatious, as compassionate, and as persevering. Look at it for a moment in each of these aspects.

1. As Authorized.—"Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him." Here the Redeemer is represented as acting under the appointment and authorization of the eternal Father, as being His commissioned, sustained and anointed servant. Nor is it difficult to perceive why this is necessary. God, as the Sovereign against whom man has offended, was alone competent to determine whether any mediation could be admitted between himself and his rebellious creatures, and, if any, what the nature of that mediation should be. It is essential to any man's faith in redemption that he should recognize it as of God from the beginning. The divine wisdom, inspired by boundless love, solved the problem of mediation. "He spared not His own Son, but delivered him up for us all." The starting-point of redemption, with all its priceless blessings, was in the heart of the infinite Father. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The interposition of Christ is first of all, and more than all, the manifestation of the Father's impartial and everlasting love for lost men. This is a truth of immense importance; it has broad practical bearings. We cannot too highly appreciate, nor too strongly enforce, the view of the Divine nature here suggested. Any misconception of the nature and character of God must be more or less dishonoring to Him and injurious to men. And there is nothing the world more needs to-day, in order to its speedy and complete evangelization, than the clear, fearless, and constant preaching of God's exhaustless love. This is the staple of revealed truth. The Bible, from beginning to end, is, infinitely more than anything else, a revelation of the love of God. This constitutes the supreme purpose for which the Book was given.

Multitudes of earnest and devout men and women, alike in the pulpits and the pews of our churches, have come to feel that, in very much of what has hitherto been written and said by the recognized teachers of Christian truth, the infinite love of the Father has not had given to it the prominence and emphasis which the plain teaching of Scripture warrants and requires. The feeling is a wholesome one, and has its basis in fact. Our catechisms, our systems of theology, and too much of our sermonizing have been taken up with the presentation of a God of infinite greatness, almighty power, infallible wisdom, unbending veracity, inflexible justice, and immaculate purity. All this is, of course, perfectly true and right as far as it goes—these attributes all belong to God. But this teaching does not go far enough to be true to the Scriptures, or to meet the necessities of our case. There is not a vestige of help or hope for us in this view of God, standing alone. These attributes may mark the Divine perfection, and be very adorable in the sight of perfect beings; but we are not perfect, and they are all felt to be against us. We are not dealing with abstractions. This incomplete teaching concerning God has frequently tended to widen the separation between man and his Maker, rather than to bring them together. The character of God the Father has been invested with a sternness which has had the effect of repelling men. A frowning God has been pictured, and men have felt an almost irresistible inclination to turn away from the contemplation of His character; then the Lord Jesus Christ, a Saviour of boundless compassion, tenderness, and love, has been presented to sinners as a refuge from this angry God. A contrast between God the Father and God the Son has thus been suggested to the mind, which is at once deeply dishonoring to the Father, and most disastrous to the faith and hope of sinful men,—a contrast which is fatal to any true conception of Bible teaching concerning the Trinity and Atonement. The love of the eternal Father for His lost children is made to be the effect of Christ's interposition on our behalf, instead of that interposition being the demonstration of the Father's everlasting love. This misconception of the truth concerning God is to be found in many a theological treatise and volume of sermons, and is scattered through the hymnology of the church. No less a man than Jonathan Edwards has allowed himself to speak of Christ as having "purchased the love of God" for this lost race; and Isaac Watts, one of the sweetest of all the uninspired singers in our Israel, frequently gives expression to the same idea in hymns which, happily, are being dropped out of our modern hymn-books. Nothing could be more at variance with the whole tenor of the Scriptures. "God is love," is the shining pinnacle of divine revelation. "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God," and therefore had no claim on His love, "but that He loved us," who loved Him not, "and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." There is no creature whom God has ever made, good or bad, whom He does not love, with a love either of pity or of complacency and approbation. "The Gospel of the glory of the blessed God," which is committed to us, enables us to meet the sinner, steeped to the lips in sin, and say to him as the first thing—the thing which he most needs to know and which he finds it hardest to believe: "God loves you; there never has been a moment of your life when he has not loved you. He hates your sin, He would not be a loving Father if He did not, but He does not hate you. He will sink your sin as surely as He is love, and if you refuse to give up sin you must sink with it. But God wants to save you; let go of your sin and turn to Him, and He will sink the sin and lift you into the security and joy of restored childship." This is the Gospel for every child of man. There is no wayward prodigal wandering in all the "far country" who has not a loving Father in the eternal home, yearning for his return and ready to receive him. Up out of this old prophecy, as out of the Scriptures as a whole, rises the Father God, not stern and implacable as some gloomy theorists have presented Him, but graciously willing the recovery of the lost, arranging all the details of their redemption according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself, and, in unexampled love, offering in costliest sacrifice His only begotten Son.

"Behold my servant." For the purposes of redemption Christ is the "servant" of the Father. In at least three other passages of the book of Isaiah the same term is used. We turn to the forty ninth chapter, and read, "It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel; I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." Turning to the fifty-second, "Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high." And in the next chapter, "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities." Now it is evident from this use of the term that it is only an official servitude—that Christ is the servant of the Father only in reference to His mediatorial work. He is not essentially a servant. The Redeemer is God, the equal of the Father in glory, majesty, power, divinity, and eternity; but he is God manifest in the flesh—perfect God and complete man mysteriously united in one person; the humanity undeified by its union with the Godhead, the Deity unhumanized by its connection with the manhood. The Scriptures never lose sight of this great fact. Hence Christ is sometimes represented as infinite in wisdom, "God over all, blessed forever;" doing whatsoever He pleaseth; "from everlasting to everlasting." And then again He is described as "increasing in wisdom;" as "made lower than the angels;" as subject to the will of the Father. These representations are harmonized, and the whole blessed truth is revealed in the grand word of Paul: "Christ Jesus; who being in the form of God, counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross." And from one so appointed, from such a Mediator, what may not be anticipated? "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, traveling in the greatness of his strength, mighty to save?" Who is He? The child of Mary, the Man of Sorrows, the crucified One. "Behold the man!" God's "servant," God's "chosen," in whom His soul delighteth. Who is he? "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his Kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ever." Behold the God! who brings all the strength of an almighty and infinite nature to the rescue of our race. Behold the God-man! whose uncreated divinity takes hold on heaven, whose complete humanity rests upon the earth, and who thus unites the two and becomes the Mediator between God and man—a way by which grace, pardon, and peace flow down from above, and by which love and faith, prayer and effort, may go up from below.

As it was necessary that the Redeemer should be authorized, so it was necessary that the authority under which he acted should be explicitly attested. It was thus attested. The words, "Mine elect in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him," which suggest the idea of anointing, are obviously alluded to, or rather directly applied by God himself in the scenes of the Redeemer's baptism, when the Holy Spirit descended visibly upon Him, and a voice from the excellent glory was heard saying, "This is my beloved son, in whom I am well pleased." Christ's own interpretation of this was given in the synagogue at Nazareth, on the threshold of his public ministry: "There was delivered unto Him the book of the prophet Isaiah," and he "found the place where it was written, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor." Having read the passage, "He began to say unto them, To-day hath this Scripture been fulfilled in your ears." This aspect of His mission was clearly understood by His apostles. Peter and John, liberated by the Sanhedrim, returned "to their own company," and reported. They all "lifted up their voice to God with one accord," and in the course of their petition to the Father, they refer to the Son as "Thy holy servant Jesus, whom thou didst anoint." So Peter in the house of Cornelius begins his discourse by appealing to the fact, as one well known to all the disciples, "How that God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power." God gave Him "not the Spirit by measure." At intervals during his ministry there came to Him divine attestation; at its close He was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead; and having ascended to the Father, he was constituted "head over all things to the church," principalities and powers being made subject to him, for "it pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell." In this Gospel "the whole Deity is known." Redemption originates in the infinite love of the eternal Father; it is wrought out by the eternal Son, who for this purpose, "emptied Himself, taking the form of a servant;" and it is rendered efficient by the eternal Spirit, who, operating in the hearts and consciences of men, convinces of sin, enlightens, persuades, empowers, renews and sanctifies. The Triune God is moving up and down in the earth to bring righteousness into human lives, to banish sin and every form of wrong from among men. Contemplate the glorious fact, until your faith grows strong and your hope bright, until it shall seem to you a not very distant consummation—the realization of the Redeemer's purpose for the world. The Redeemer's method also appears—

2. As unostentatious.—"He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause His voice to be heard in the street." Messiah's mission was to be distinguished by no secular pomp, by no military glory. "The battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire." The Redeemer's appearance was to be lowly, His operations silent and unobtrusive. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." The Saviour of men is great in gentleness. On this point prophecy is mysteriously impressive. The strongest statements of His greatness and glory are contrasted with equally strong statements of his inexplicable humiliation and suffering. History answers to prophecy. In the life of Jesus Christ there is a marvelous mingling of grandeur and humility. Born in infant weakness, He was cast upon an indigent Hebrew maiden for care, and grew up to manhood in subjection to an humble artizan, "making," as Justin Martyr suggests, "cart wheels and yokes for oxen." But at His birth the herald angel proclaimed His lofty lineage and sublime mission, a multitude of the heavenly host made the night vocal with their song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," and wise men from afar, feeling the attraction of His presence and guided by His star, found their way to his feet So in his public ministry. In the performance of His mighty works, he shunned all parade, all ostentation. Their aim was spiritual, and He strug gled constantly against the tendency of the people to fix their attention on the wonderful display of power, and fail to grasp the spiritual truth. It is to just this that Matthew refers, when he quotes the prophecy we are considering and declares that it was fulfilled in Christ. Thus it was in every aspect of His work. As a teacher come from God, "He spake as never man spake," but His doctrines were purely spiritual, and the farthest possible remove from anything like sensationalism; He never uttered a word to attract a crowd. His character was embodied excellence, but it contained no elements that could attract the attention of men hating the light. He "died like a God," but it was by the agony and ignominy of the cross. He saved others, Himself He could not save; He could not save Himself, because he saved others.

The same principle pervades the whole of His administration. Here is marvelous grandeur, but there is deep lowliness. As in the kingdom of nature, the sublimest effects are produced in a way to attract little or no attention. Worlds move through the immensity of space "in solemn silence." Light gradually and noiselessly unfolds from darkness into the splendor of the day. Spring advances without ostentation, modestly glances here and there, and the fields mantle themselves with verdure and forests with foliage; plants become all life and birds all song, and the earth is robed in vernal beauty. There is no noise, no show, nothing that savors of the bustling littleness of human effort. "So is the Kingdom of God." It breaks like the light of the morning on the spirit of man. It converts the wilderness into a fruitful field; yet this moral spring, like the natural, advances mysteriously and often silently. There are indeed diversities of operations, corresponding to the diversities that obtain in human constitution and character; and in the process of the work of salvation, some are powerfully convinced, others gently allured. A Lydia's heart is opened as naturally and silently as the lily's leaves unfold, to drink in the rays of the new-born sun, and she is softly molded into love and praise; while a Philippian jailer is awakened by the stately steppings of an earthquake, and made to cry out, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The Lord, in advancing his merciful purpose, may by a great and strong wind rend the mountains and break the rocks in pieces; and after the wind there is sometimes an earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; circumstances these intended to awaken attention to His visitation. But it is in the "still small voice" that follows that God speaks to the waiting soul. And as the purposes of mercy are carried on in the individual heart, so are they advanced in the world. "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Its prophetic symbol is, a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, instinct with life, moving on under an invisible impetus, irresistibly crushing opposition, gradually accumulating into a mountain, and filling the world. It is represented by our Lord as "leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened." And so the Gospel has mysteriously subdued the hearts of men, forming into its own spirit tempers and habits the most alien from its nature. Thus it has successively occupied new positions of spiritual potency, and overcome everything that was arrayed against its progress. And so it shall continue to advance, until "the kingdoms of this world," adopting its principles and molded into its spirit, "shall become the kingdoms of our God and of His Christ."

3. As compassionate.—"A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall He not quench." Advancing to the realization of His sublime purpose, the Redeemer will not overlook the smallest acquisition; and, His attention will be especially directed to those who are specially needy, weak and helpless. What an exquisite representation of the perfection of compassion have we here! Let the images live before our minds. Yonder by the roadside a reed, bowed by the storm and crushed by the foot of the heedless traveler—about the most helpless and uncared for object in the world—"a bruised reed." Again: a dying lamp, glimmering ghostly through the darkness, the oil dried up; the last leap of the flame; the thin curling smoke only an offensive trace of recent fire; a lamp, for all purposes of utility, gone out—"the smoking flax." If it were a question for men to decide, what think you would become of the bruised reed and the smoking flax. Too commonly the impatient foot would trample the life out of the one, and the surly hand would utterly quench the other. But our Redeemer brings to his work a compassion deeper and kinder than ever surged in human breast; and He props the reed and heals its bruise; He fans the flax and pours in oil; until the one becomes a rod of Jehovah's strength, and the other a fire burning brightly to His praise.

And thus is illustrated the infinite compassion of Jesus rising in himself, having its eternal source in His own gracious heart. For by nothing was the Redeemer more distinguished than by His tenderness. His loving labors were always in contact with the suffering side of human experience. When John the Baptist in prison and disturbed by doubt, sent two of his disciples to Jesus with the question, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" the Master did not answer them immediately. He went on with His mighty and beneficent work. "In that hour He cured many of diseases and plagues and evil spirits; and on many that were blind He bestowed sight." Then He answered them—and here is has a widowed mother and brothers and sisters dependent upon him. How could some charitable person expend fifty dollars a-year better than by aiding this young man, or others like him, of whom there are many struggling heroically against every difficulty, to fit themselves to benefit their race?

"To close this report I would say that we would build up an institution which shall be a centre of religious power, the circumference of which shall take in Africa. To this end we most earnestly ask the prayers of God's people everywhere. By his blessing, we now hope for houses and lands and endowments needed; but what is all this except Fisk University be a temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in? Such may it be."

HISTORY AND DESIGN.

This Institution has been begun in accordance with a plan formed early in the history of the work of the American Missionary Association in the South.

The Freedman's Bureau and the Association, with a few friends, have furnished the means for what has been done.

Atlanta, because of its central position and healthful climate, was selected as the best place for such an institution. A charter was obtained in October, 1867, and a board of trustees formed.

The trustees now hold about sixty acres of land on one of the highest elevations in the city, and commanding a fine view in all directions.

The first building was completed in September, 1869. It is a substantial, four-storied brick building, neatly finished, and contains parlors, dining-rooms, kitchen, bath-rooms, and dormitories for forty lady pupils. Another building, of about the same style and dimensions, in which are temporary school-rooms, and dormitories for sixty gentlemen, was completed in August, 1870.

During the summer and fall of 1871, a wing was added to the latter building. This accommodates forty more pupils, and also provides other school-rooms. The plan of the Institution for the immediate future, contemplates a similar addition to the ladies' hall, and also a central building, for chapel, school-rooms, lecture-rooms, cabinet, library, etc. The school, being without endowments, is dependent upon the American Missionary Association for all support not derived from other sources.

In 1870 the Georgia Legislature almost unanimously voted to the school an annual appropriation of $8000. The next Legislature refused to grant any aid.

The Institution stands on the broadest possible platform, and, while intended to be thoroughly Christian, is in no respect sectarian. It offers its advantages to all of either sex, without regard to sect, race, color, or nationality.

It is designed to make the school, as far as possible, a home for those who attend. Not only their intellectual, but their social, moral, and religious culture also receives careful attention.

WANTS.

There is pressing and immediate need of an addition to the ladies' hall.

Two thousand dollars is greatly needed for fencing and grading the grounds. About seven eighths of our sixty acres is unfenced, and of no practical use to the school. Were it fenced, much of it might be cultivated to advantage, and the rest set with trees.

Other needs are such as all young colleges have—buildings, endowments, scholarships, libraries, reference books, surveying instruments, apparatus, etc.

Nowhere is an institution of this kind more needed, and nowhere will the offerings of philanthropy and Christianity be likely to produce earlier and richer fruits.

We have the following report from this institution:

"ATLANTA, July 8, 1872.

"Another year has passed over Atlanta University, bringing into literal existence an infant college. A class of fifteen have just graduated from the preparatory department, and enter next October upon a collegiate course. In spite of the humiliating name "freshman," they "bear their blushing honors thick upon them," as there are no sophs to intimidate, nor seniors to eclipse. They have not read quite as much Latin and Greek as is required for admission to New-England colleges, but more than Southern and Western colleges require. Their instructor in the classics is confident that several of the graduates have a more thorough knowledge of those branches than any in the class in which he fitted, most of whom entered Dartmouth.

"On account of the examinations of the city schools occurring the same week as ours, a much smaller number of white residents were present than were here last year. However, those who came expressed such commendation as assured us that they continued to believe what they first discovered last year, that the colored people were capable of a thorough education."

Prof. A. A. Safford gives the following encouraging report:

"The school under the charge of THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION at this place has taken a long stride forward during the year just closed.

"We have had students in attendance from various towns and cities, from the northern portions of the State to the extreme southern limits. The whole number in attendance has been two hundred and five, (205,) classed as follows: Preparatory and Normal Departments, 90; Intermediate Department, 67; Primary Department, 46. Of the entire number, about 100 are from abroad.

"In the latter part of the first term, classes in Greek and Latin were formed, and yet later, a small class in Algebra. These constitute our class in the Junior Preparatory year. There was also formed a class, quite respectable in numbers and ability, constitut-

Christ's own characterization of His mission—"Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, AND THE POOR HAVE GOOD TIDINGS PREACHED TO THEM." John was familiar enough with prophecy concerning the Messiah to recognize the picture, and his doubts were set at rest. What helplessness and need did not excite the Saviour's compassion? with what form of human woe did He not sympathize? They brought infants to Him, and His disciples thought their Master too dignified and His work too important to suffer such interruption; but He rebuked the disciples, took the infants in His arms, blessed them, and sent the anxious mothers away comforted and happy. In the presence of hungry, fainting, scattered multitudes, "He had compassion on them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd." Brought into contact with bereavement and social sorrow, "He groaned in the spirit, and was troubled," and shed tears of human sympathy with the sorrowing. As the fate of Jerusalem loomed darkly upon His prophetic vision, He "wept over it." The tenderest designation of all history is His—"a Man of Sorrows." But no form of misery melted the Redeemer so much as that which was moral and spiritual. He met the penitent, and pardoned him; He met the wanderer, and restored him. Behold Him in the house of Simon, the Pharisee. A poor sinful woman "brought an alabaster cruse of ointment, and standing behind at His feet, weeping, she began to wet His feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hair of her head, and kissed His feet, and anointed them with ointment." The Pharisee said to himself, "This man, if he were a prophet, would have perceived who and what manner of woman this is which toucheth him, that she is a sinner." He was more than a prophet, and He knew full well what she was, but He uses His knowledge for salvation, not for scorn, for from the divinest purity divinest pity sprang. The fountains of His compassion were opened; He turned to the poor "bruised reed" and, having first vindicated her affectionate earnestness, "He said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven; thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." Think of Peter. A flame more ardent and sincere than his love for his Master never glowed in human bosom; but presumptuously exposed to the tempests that burst upon the dying head of that Master, whose love many waters could not quench, it sank down into its socket, quivered, almost expired. Jesus was on trial for his life; and might have been supposed to be fully occupied with His own sufferings. But He was concerned only about his unfaithful disciple. "And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter." What was in that look? Indignation there must have been, but with the veil of an inexpressible compassion and a fathomless yearning thrown over it. The glance entered the heart of the cowardly denier of his Lord, the dying spark caught, quivered, burst into a flame, that burned with increasing lustre till it consumed the whole man. "The smoking flax He will not quench."

"Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and to-day, yea and for ever." With like tenderness is His administration still charged. Though now conducting it from His mediatorial throne, He still "can bear gently with the ignorant and erring." The great Christian High Priest, Jesus the Son of God, is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," for He "hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." He still suffers long and is kind. He overlooks the times of ignorance. He bears with the infirm purpose and the blundering service. Understanding how weak and wayward a world of sinners is, He has long patience with it. He is nearest to the man who has no other friend, and keeps His readiest mercy for the deepest need. The broad and bottomless stream of His divine compassion is not interrupted by the heathen's rage, and the people's vain imagining. He could "break them with a rod of iron," or "dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel;" but He would rather conquer them with victorious grace, and turn His enemies into friends. And He will yet bring from the slopes of many a distant mountain those other sheep of His which are not of this fold, and house them securely and forever; for only in a regenerated and happy world can He be supremely satisfied. That is the travail of His soul.

4. As persevering.—"He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for His law." It was the opinion of certain ancient philosophers, that if Virtue were to become incarnate, all men would love her. One held a different view. Socrates contended that in such a case, so great would be the contrast between her character and that of mankind, that she would be hated, persecuted, and put to death. Three centuries before the time of Socrates, Isaiah had predicted the appearance of Virtue, in the incarnation of the Son of God, and the cruel and criminal treatment He would have to encounter—that He would be "despised and rejected of men," and be "led as a lamb to the slaughter." The prediction was awfully verified. "He came unto His own, and His own received Him not." His claims were scorned, His works were attributed to Satanic influence. Opposition to Him united parties the most hostile to each other; and so deep was their malignity that they could be satisfied with nothing less than His blood. But He did not fail, He was not discouraged. He plowed His way through all opposition from Bethlehem to Golgotha. Heroic purpose found expression in holy longing; and as He dashed aside the waves and pressed on, He said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." Deeper sorrow took hold of Him. "The Lord laid upon Him the iniquities of us all." His soul was made an offering for sin. The soul of Christ's agony was this agony of His soul. Behold Him as the preternatural horrors of the hour and power of darkness approached! "Being in an agony He prayed more earnestly; and His sweat became as it were great drops of blood falling down upon the ground." Prostrate in Gethsemane He cries, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me." What! does He fail? is He discouraged? No: holy will triumphs and finds instant expression in the cry, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt" See the matchless hero and conqueror! He rises, He encourages His drooping disciples, He surrenders himself to His enemies, He hastens to the cross, and, dying, He shouts in triumph, "It is finished." His grand purpose was now virtually realized, and from that hour it has been advancing to its actual accomplishment.

The risen and exalted Redeemer is moving steadily on to His final and complete triumph. His mighty work is not yet finished; and difficulties, insuperable to any but Himself, still interpose to hinder its completion. Christ alone is not at work in the world. The enemy of souls is malignantly and actively working against Him, sprinkling with tares the half-sown field. This enemy is aided by multitudes of misguided men. Barriers are lifted up against the advancing kingdom of God, in the ignorance, the errors, and the earthliness of men, and the downward gravitation of sin; in the pride of the human intellect, and the enmity of the carnal mind against God; and in the spirit and maxims of the world, with its godless customs, its caste distinctions, and its selfish ends. Every sinful soul is a citadel manned and armed against the realization of the Redeemer's purpose. That purpose precludes the exercise of force as a method of its accomplishment. It aims, as we have seen, at the renewal of the soul in essential righteousness—the development of Godlike character; and character can in no sense or degree be the product of external force. It roots invariably in the free choice of the individual. What one is forced to do has for him no moral quality—is neither sinful nor holy. Only as men are free can they commit sin or attain to holiness. The problem of Redemption is, therefore, not a simple one. When in the physical realm "darkness was upon the face of the deep," it needed but the word of power to dissipate it. "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light." Not thus can the moral and spiritual darkness of the world be dispelled. For this requires not only the exercise of divine power, but also the voluntary surrender of individual souls, who are perfectly free to recognize or ignore the claims of God upon them. Hence the costly and apparently slow processes of the Gospel. God reveals Himself in Jesus Christ as hating sin and loving the sinner; gives the world a revelation of His will and sends forth His Spirit to interpret and apply it; constitutes all faithful souls co-workers with Himself in the gracious enterprise; and thus warns, exhorts, entreats, invites, encourages, persuades men, and brings to bear the mightiest motives to lead them to be reconciled to Himself. He can do no more. It rests with each man to say whether he will accept or reject the salvation offered. The accomplishment of the Redeemer's purpose can only be secured by persuading men perverted by sin and begirt with adverse influences, one by one, to accept the salvation offered in Him. This is not a simple nor an easy task. It demands patient and persevering effort. Such effort, successful hitherto, will be crowned with complete success at last. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth."

This, it will be perceived, is not only a description of Christ's perseverance, but also an unmistakable prediction of His triumph—part of that sure word of prophecy whereunto we do well that we take heed. The conquest of the world by our Redeemer is a settled matter which He sits expecting to realize, and which the faith of his followers may anticipate upon the warrant of His word. We may be of fitful faith and languid hope as we think of the slow progress of the work—of errors apparently rooted when we deemed them overthrown, of truth prevailing slowly and after strong contest, of years without apparent advance, of standard bearers stricken down by our side; but there is not the interval of a moment in the march of our risen Lord to victory. In the calm azure above the involved and revolving wheels He sits upon the throne, and brings forth judgment unto truth, presses his sublime purpose, and waits for his assured triumph. It is coming up the steeps of time, and this old world is growing brighter. The chemist has his solution which needs but a single added drop to bring out its crystals. That drop withheld, the solution will grow clearer and clearer, so that when at last it is added, the gems shall be the finer for the delay. So year by year the fermenting thought of the world is growing purer, and one error after another is precipitated. The supreme moment of the Redeemer's spiritual alchemy is coming, when His hand shall fling in the added drop, and the waiting world shall flash forth into solid order and crystalline beauty. "Then cometh the end, when He shall deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power. That God may be all in all."

Brethren, we are called to be co-workers with Christ—to make his purpose ours, and find our own spiritual development in doing what we can to advance the interests of His kingdom. He has left us His great Commission: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." In executing this commission we are to adopt the Master's methods, walking in his footsteps. As with the Head, so with the members. We are called to be God's "servants," and to work under the divine authorization. To us is the promise of the Spirit given. It is ours to go forth to the field consciously appointed of God and anointed by Him. And herein lies the most important part of our qualification. There is an unfailing source of power, zeal, and inspiration in this consciousness. No matter what else we may possess, we shall be of little worth without it. Then we are to look for spiritual results in the use of spiritual means. By no mere sensationalism, secular pomp, or governmental power and patronage, are men to be won and the world saved; but by the simple, spiritual truth of God, proclaimed by us, and brought home to individual souls by the Holy Spirit. Called to such a mission, we are to be diligent, yet not obtrusive; bold, but humble; avoiding cowardly hesitation on the one hand, and ostentatious parade on the other. Nor, in anticipating the great things to be attained, should we undervalue the least success, nor withhold the humblest effort. It behooves us to commune with our Master until we are saturated with His spirit, and are made partakers of His tenderness, so that we shall not become impatient and discouraged in dealing with the weak and the perverse, nor feel that any sinner is too low for our ministry, but go first and oftenest to those who are farthest from God and most in need of the light and saving power of the Gospel. Above all, however feeble and resultless our exertions may seem, let nothing tempt us to remit or relax them. "The Captain of our Salvation" is himself in the field. Christ has not abandoned the enterprise of the world's salvation to us; only called us to co-operate with Him—to fall in behind Him, and obey His commands. The work is His, and "He shall not fail nor be discouraged." Let us keep step with Him. His triumph is assured. "Be not weary in well doing; for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. I. This Society shall be called the American Missionary Association.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own country and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Members of evangelical churches may be constituted members of this Association for life by the payment of thirty dollars into its treasury, with the written declaration at the time or times of payment that the sum is to be applied to constitute a designated person a life member; and such membership shall begin sixty days after the payment shall have been completed. Other persons, by the payment of the same sum, may be made life members, without the privilege of voting.

Every evangelical church which has within a year contributed to the funds of the Association, and every State Conference or Association of such churches, may appoint two delegates to the Annual Meeting of the Association; such delegates, duly attested by credentials, shall be members of the Association for the year for which they were thus appointed.

ART. IV. The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be held in the month of October or November, at such time and place as may be designated by the Association, or, in case of its failure to act, by the Executive Committee, by notice printed in the official publication of the Association for the preceding month.

ART. V. The officers of the Association shall be a President, five Vice-Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, Auditors, and an Executive Committee of fifteen members, all of whom shall be elected by ballot.

At the first Annual Meeting after the adoption of this Constitution, five members of the Executive Committee shall be elected for the term of one year, five for two years and five for three years, and at each subsequent Annual Meeting five members shall be elected for the full term of three years, and such others as shall be required to fill vacancies.

ART. VI. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds, the appointing, counseling, sustaining and dismissing of missionaries and agents, and the selection of missionary fields. They shall have authority to fill all vacancies in office occurring between the Annual Meetings; to apply to any Legislature for acts of incorporation, or conferring corporate powers; to make provision when necessary for disabled missionaries and for the widows and children of deceased missionaries, and in general to transact all such business as usually appertains to the Executive Committees of missionary and other benevolent societies. The acts of the Committee shall be subject to the revision of the Annual Meeting.

Five members of the Committee constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VII. No person shall be made an officer of this Association who is not a member of some evangelical church.

ART. VIII. Missionary bodies and churches or individuals may appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. IX. No amendment shall be made to this constitution except by the vote of two-thirds of the members present at an Annual Meeting and voting, the amendment having been approved by the vote of a majority at the previous Annual Meeting.

Notices of the regular and special meetings of the Committee shall be sent by mail to its members, or otherwise communicated in writing, at least one day previous to the time of meeting.

ART. II.—OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES.

At the same meeting, the following Standing Committees for the year shall be appointed, to consist of seven members each, three to constitute a quorum:

2. A Committee on Southern Work.
3. A Committee on Indian and Chinese Work.

A Committee on Appropriations, of four members, shall also be formed each year in the manner hereafter designated.

CHAIRMAN.—It shall be the duty of the Chairman to preside at all meetings of the Committee, to facilitate the transaction of its business, to sign, when necessary, checks upon the bank accounts of the Association, and to appoint all standing and special committees not otherwise provided for, subject to the approval of the Executive Committee.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN.—In the absence or inability of both, a temporary Chairman may be appointed by the Executive Committee.

RECORDING SECRETARY.—The Recording Secretary shall keep the minutes of the Committee, and read them at its regular meetings. He shall cause all Committees to be notified, in writing, of their appointment within twenty-four hours thereafter, and shall inform them of the business referred to them. In his absence or inability to act the Chairman shall appoint a substitute.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee, before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with his statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statement when approved by them. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. This book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the members of the Executive Committee, and the record shall be so added to and amended, from time to time, under the direction of the Finance Committee, as to show at all times a correct statement of the property of the Association, and of any special trusts in its hands. All title deeds to real estate and certificates of stocks and bonds owned by the Association shall be in the charge of this Committee, who shall provide a proper place for their safe keeping. This Committee shall, when occasion requires, direct the sale and transfer of stocks, invest any funds of the Association not required or designed for current expenses, and in general shall have the oversight of the financial concerns of the Association, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

OTHER STANDING COMMITTEES.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Southern Work and of that on Indian and Chinese Work to report to the Executive Committee, at its regular meeting every month, such suggestions or proposed action as shall seem to them desirable for furthering the efficiency and economy of the Missionary and Educational Work of the Association in their respective departments. They shall also have power to manage the current work of the Association assigned to them, subject to the general supervision and direction of the Executive Committee.

Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee), and may consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee, and the Chairman of the first three Standing Committees.

Each of these Standing Committees shall elect a Chairman and a Secretary from their own number.

Special Committees may be appointed from time to time, as required.

Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee.

All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them, with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

ART. IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various standing committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient working of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of the Chairman of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all money contributed or intrusted to the Association, and to give receipts therefor; to deposit it to the credit of the Association in such bank or institution as may be designated by the Finance Committee; to keep clear and accurate accounts of all sums received and expended by the Association; to make payments and remittances in accordance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to endorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purposes of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them.

His books of account and vouchers for payments shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

It shall be his duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee such financial business as needs their action.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries and other Agents as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches, collect funds, and perform such other duties as may be assigned them, and who shall also prepare and present through the Corresponding Secretaries to the Executive Committee each month reports of the work done by them for the previous month.

ing our first year in the "Normal Course." These classes suffered great reduction in numbers before the close of the year, many having to leave, in order, by teaching, to provide themselves with necessary funds.

"The past year has witnessed a marked change in the studiousness of most of the pupils. It would be hard to excel some of them in the matter of patient and continued application to study. Those who boarded with us, and roomed in the college buildings, as a general rule, showed great superiority in this respect.

"But perhaps the best proof of what has been accomplished during the year was found in the closing examinations.

"No effort has been spared either on the part of teacher or scholar to make the examinations answer the oft-repeated objection of the whites, that it was entirely useless to endeavor to give the colored people more than an ordinary education.

"Programmes showing the classes to be examined, and the time when, were distributed quite generally among the best representatives of the 'superior race,' and a cordial invitation given to attend the examinations. Contrary to expectations, many who ridiculed our work attended. From twenty-five to thirty influential citizens were in attendance at various times during the course of the examination, which continued through three successive days.

"These 'did not care much for the examinations in reading, writing, and spelling,' though they were 'astonished at the general correctness in spelling, and the excellent penmanship of some of the pupils.'

"Much more interest was manifested in the examination of the classes in Arithmetic, Geography, and Grammar, including Analysis. As the classes examined in these studies for the most part acquitted themselves well, the 'surprise was great.' They 'had not imagined the students had made such progress.'

"I was asked, after the examinations in Latin and Greek, 'How long have those classes been studying the language?' This question was asked by the Principal of the Normal School. I replied, 'A little over seven months.' 'Indeed,' was his reply; and yet that single word from him, spoken as it was, convinced me of his conversion to the doctrine of 'negro education.'

"Another, the Instructor in the 'Training School for Young Men,' having learned how long the same classes had been studying, replied that he 'had a class of young men, who had been studying Latin for ten months,' and he 'would hate to pit them against some of those just examined.' His expressions of praise and commendation were such as to surprise me.

"The Principal of the 'Synodical Female Institute' expressed his 'very great surprise at the excellence of the scholarship manifested, and the evident thoroughness of the drill.' He 'congratulated the teachers on the evident success of the experiment to educate the colored people.'

"According to the programme, we had addresses in the evening, following the close of the examinations. Addresses were made by the Hon. G. T. McAffee, State Senator, Hon. Charles Pelham, Circuit Judge, and N. S. McAffee, Esq. Their remarks were full of commendation and encouragement, and, for the most part, of sound advice.

"These were our regular speakers. After they had concluded, the Editor of Our Mountain Home (Democratic) was called upon to make some remarks. He frankly admitted that he 'was greatly surprised, and that the examinations had shown that the colored race were capable of receiving not only an English, but a classical education.' . . . We think, therefore, that we have just reason to feel proud of this manifest success, and are determined to make the succeeding year one of still greater advancement. The occasion will long be remembered by the colored people as one of an educational victory for the despised people. . .

THE RELIGIOUS WORK

during the year has been of a very encouraging nature. Many of the students have been converted, and much of the time a deep religious feeling has been evinced. In our own family, there were but two or three irreligious persons at the close of school, and I am confident these went away deeply impressed with the necessity of a true Christian life.

As Brother Strong has had the religious work more directly in charge, it is but just that I should leave a full report of this part of the work here in his hands.

"We closed the past year with bright anticipations for the future. Already we hear from those who have gone to their homes, or to educational work, 'good news.' They write us of the evidence of a large increase in numbers, of the satisfaction they feel in view of what the past year has done for them, and of the earnest work they intend to do for the school and for their people. Already two of them have lectured in the City of Montgomery, where no little enthusiasm has been created in favor of the work here. Most, if not all, are impatient for the new school-year to commence.

"I should say before closing, as evidence that the work is being appreciated, that almost all of our best students had schools offered them as soon as ours closed. I have had applications for teachers that I have not been able to fill."

"Our night-schools have had enrolled more than two hundred pupils, though the number attending regularly is much less. Our schools have received the warm congratulation of the County Board of Education, and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. The latter gentleman said, after his visit to our schools, that he wished to make them the nucleus and model for the colored schools of the State.

"We held in the spring an institute for colored teachers under the new school-law of the State, the first ever held. This also was warmly commended by the school authorities.

"We have been able to furnish teachers for some large schools in the country, and hope to do much more in this way in the future. We have also seen a great advance in public sentiment in favor of free schools in the State. A tax has been laid on all the property of the State."

Rev. P. B. Davis, D.D., presented the report of the Committee on Secretary Woodbury's paper. The addresses of the evening were delivered by Rev. A. H. Bradford, D.D., President Merrill E. Gates, Ph.D. and Gen. O. O. Howard.

Secretary Strieby announced that the following gentlemen had been invited to be present and had sent letters of regret and of appreciation of the work of the Association: Hon. Wm. Windom, Hon. W. C. Breckenridge, Rev. A. G. Haygood, D.D. and Rev. J. L. M. Curry, D.D.

Charles H. Johnson, Esq. offered the following resolutions which were adopted by a rising vote:

In concluding the 44th Annual Meeting so favored by the weather and environment, in the city fragrant with so many suggestive memories, this Association desires to testify herewith its grateful appreciation of the graceful and generous hospitality which has lent such charm to the sojourn of its officers, members and friends.

We name gladly our indebtedness to the three Congregational churches of Northampton, who acted in concert, and with most unselfish spirit, to promote the efficiency and interest of the meeting. Their pleasant homes, together with two of their churches, have been opened to their temporary guests with a delightful cordiality.

To the Chairman of the local committee and his associates who have anticipated so considerately every need and convenience of the Association, we voice our obligation. So likewise to the railroad companies who in their way facilitated by their favors the attendance on this meeting.

To the representatives of the press who have given a wider circulation to every report and address which has made so publicly significant this platform during these recent days, and also to the landlord of the Norwood House, for his kindness, involving no little sacrifice for entertaining the Jubilee Singers, we desire to put on record our thanks.

And we cannot feel that we have discharged our obligation to those whose debtors we are without making grateful mention of the Jubilee Singers, whose services of song have certainly contributed a new feature of enjoyment in our daily exercises, and also to Prof. Story of this place, who has given direction to the music.

While to our honored President, whose presence and presiding have been happy factors in our meetings, we also desire to express our heartfelt thanks. To our thoughtful hosts and the ready helpers that have left nothing undone for our comfort, we mingle with our good-bye our best wishes.

Rev. H. W. Lathe, pastor of the First Church, responded in behalf of the churches and people of Northampton.

It was requested that all papers, documents and addresses be placed in the hands of the Executive Committee.

After the benediction by Rev. Dr. Quint, the Association adjourned to meet at the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, Ohio, for its next Annual Meeting.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

REPORT ON EDUCATIONAL WORK, SOUTH.

BY REV. H. M. LADD, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

A portion of the Dark Continent suddenly deposited in the heart of a great Christian nation might be hailed under ordinary conditions as a most hopeful opportunity for missionary work at short range. But the field in which this Association is chiefly engaged is not a section of Africa alone, but Africa and America commingled in sin, morally and spiritually confused, and it is, therefore, beset on every side with greatest difficulties resulting from generations of slavery with its degradation, ignorance and moral disease. This is a field overgrown with perplexing questions which have been almost hopelessly complicated by race prejudice and the peculiar distortions of a race in which those whose elevation we seek were themselves most deeply implicated.

These questions, the despair of our ablest statesmen and apparently beyond the reach of legislation, this Association is bravely facing, and slowly but surely helping to solve. As time passes, it becomes more clearly evident that a Christian education for the whole Southland, restoring worthy manhood to the black, and removing blind prejudice from the white, is the only hopeful solution of these questions. The dark cloud of illiteracy that rests upon the South is large indeed, larger than it was a quarter of a century ago and full of threatening storm even yet; but if larger it is not so intensely dark as then. It was then all dark, but now the schools and colleges of this Association bespangle the darkness like the stars of night, each one of them as the glorious Sun of Righteousness with healing in its wings. The varied work of this Association, as set forth in the report, with its 6 chartered institutions, its 20 normal and graded schools, its 53 common schools, and its more than 13,000 pupils is doing not a little to dispel the darkness and let in the saving light of Christian education. These schools are wisely located as radiating centers. In them, cultured and experienced instructors with heroic Christian consecration and earnestness, realizing the far-reaching nature and vast importance of their work, have done most faithful service during the past year. Under this quickening touch, the African-American is awakening more rapidly than ever to his needs. He has come to understand that illiteracy incapacitates, that ignorance is a disgrace and means inferiority, that manhood must prove its worth. As a result, the schools have everywhere been overflowing and hundreds have been refused admission.

It is even more encouraging to note that the mere rudiments of education do not satisfy this longing for better things. There is a growing demand for the discipline of a higher education, and ample equipment for greater helpfulness in lifting the race out of darkness into light. Increased intellectual eagerness, however, is not the chief blessing of the year. The deep religious interest pervading all departments of the educational work and everywhere made the most important part of it, has in many places been marked by unusual spiritual quickening and the results are most promising for the moral uplifting of the race.

A prominent feature of the year's work is also seen in the internal development of the schools, in strengthening the various departments of instruction, in enlarging the facilities for manual and industrial training as a most important part of the work, and in increasing the number and capacity of the buildings. These multiplied advantages and opportunities mean increased responsibility for us. This best year of service and support in all the history of the work calls the more loudly for a better to follow. The field demands yet more men, still larger gifts, even greater sacrifices, and should receive at once, on grounds of loyal patriotism as well as Christian philanthropy, far more than it demands.

It is also gratifying, as a portent of a better day dawning, to be assured that the faithful, conscientious work thus far done is growing in the esteem of the thoughtful white people at the South. One of their own number justly honors those African-Americans and best expresses the quality and results of our work in their behalf when he says, "No other illiterate people have ever made such progress as these in the last two and a half decades."

REPORT ON CHURCH WORK.

BY REV. A. H. PLUMB, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The Committee on Church Work are happy to characterize the papers submitted to them as abounding in interesting and instructive details, comprehensive in their scope, setting forth the limitations and hindrances as well as the encouragements of this department of service, and presenting, also, such evidences of its wise management and substantial advance as warrant renewed energy in its prosecution, and great hopefulness in respect to its future success.

There are three points especially brought to view in these papers on which this Committee desire to place particular emphasis. First, the low conditions in which the church work has to be undertaken; secondly, the careful and constant supervision needed and supplied; and thirdly, the dependence of the church on the school.

The planting of Congregational churches among the Freedmen of the South bears a far closer resemblance to the establishment of churches in our foreign missionary work than in the ordinary home missionary fields. The home missionary in most parts of our country can almost always find considerable general intelligence in the society where he labors. He meets with many who from their residence in the more favored portions of the land have known somewhat concerning the character and influence of Christian institutions. That influence has more or less affected their thought and life. However neglectful of religion they may be personally, they have long been familiar with the general features of a pure Christianity. In unevangelized countries abroad, and to a considerable extent at the South, this is not so. Very generally the colored people have defective ideas of religion and morality, of the church and of the ministry. In large districts the ignorance is very dense and the highly emotional and unintelligent character of such religion as prevails indisposes the people to accept the quiet and thoughtful methods of an intelligent and spiritual worship. Those who come into our churches from such conditions are likely for some time to be mere children in knowledge and spiritual strength. Hence the urgent need of continual oversight by our missionaries and teachers. It is gratifying to notice that this supervision has for some time been steadily becoming more and more pervading and thorough. Every part of the field is visited by competent superintendents or by college officers, missionaries or other teachers, and great good is done by friendly counsel and wise guidance. Such help seems to be as welcome as it is needed and measures have happily been taken of late to extend this branch of the work.

In order, however, that such supervision may not be a permanent feature of the work of the society, but that the churches and ministers may at length attain a good degree of self-reliance, and be able to maintain and promote sound Christian life and work, great dependence must be placed upon the schools which this Association sustains. As the report of the Executive Committee fully demonstrates, the schools maintained by the Association are indispensable to the establishment and growth of such churches as will prove to be a credit and help to the interests of morality and religion.

The following extracts from a report presented to the Executive Committee last May very conclusively set forth the relation of our schools to our churches, both in reference to the general life of the churches among the colored people and to the equipment of a competent educated ministry of their own race.

"One kind of constant supervision should be a small school, say with two missionary teachers, where the church can have the fostering help of these teachers, who can train the young. The pastors, moreover, need the teachers almost as much as the people do, to hold them to high views of duty, and even to purity of life. One thing is to be remembered, our constituency does not exist, like that of the Methodist and Baptist; it has to be made, and usually from the slow process of our schools.

"In general our successful churches are where we secure the young people. Our most hopeful church work is for the most part contiguous to our schools, where it has the continual aid of our teachers. Frequent revivals occur in our schools. In reality our schools do far more gospel work and church work than most of our churches. At all events, to plant churches away from schools, and by themselves, and to entrust these to half educated pastors, perhaps come-outers from some other denomination, is to make them chiefly receptacles for missionary funds. The people are now generally asking for colored preachers. Other denominations taunt them when they have a white preacher; not unfrequently it works to the prejudice of a colored church to have a white pastor. It did not formerly to the same degree. In nine cases out of ten, vacant colored churches now prefer a colored preacher. It goes without saying that these colored preachers must be properly furnished for their work, and that after all, our permanent hope in church work, turns upon preparing a sufficient and worthy ministry in our own schools, and with our own traditions. We shall then have hopeful churches in greater numbers. Meanwhile if the necessity is found to exist, we must meet it, and send white preachers in preference to inferior colored ones."

REPORT ON MOUNTAIN WORK.

BY REV. N. BOYNTON, CHAIRMAN.

The mountain work is an effort to educate and to evangelize 2,500,000 people, who by their natural capacities have rich promise of strength, and by their loyalty in other days have large claims upon the Christian North. It is a work which is specially urgent now, and with each to-morrow will be less and less possible. The present opportunity will not tarry if the obligation be unassumed. The marvelous development of these mountains under the direction of capital, yielding every year increased supplies of iron and coal, gives a reasonable basis for the hope that the South is to be the center of a new industry, namely, iron and steel production for the country. Many declare the hope already a reality. It is evident that this industry, together with the railroads which are everywhere multiplying, will make this territory the center of a wide circuit of influence and power. The education and evangelization of its people hence is a matter of grave importance. We congratulate the officers of the American Missionary Association that there are in its mountain schools 1,800 pupils, and that six new schools have been established during the past year. We are grateful for the pioneer work of theological students and for the preaching of evangelists. We believe that more schools and scholars, more pulpits and preachers, are the urgent necessity of this mountain work. We think that special measures may properly be taken to bring this fascinating work more generally to the notice of the Christian public, which when once roused, will not fail to provide funds for the field, and money for the men.

REPORT ON INDIAN WORK.

BY REV. ASHER ANDERSON, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The report on Indian work which your Committee has been called upon to consider and present in this formal way to the Association, comes to our hand full of good news and suggesting a most cheerful prospect. During the year eight principal stations have been maintained, four new churches have been organized and the service of the out-stations has been successfully carried out. We should not forget to put on record that five out-stations in Dakota were established through gifts of friends at Mr. Moody's missionary meetings at Northfield. The single fact that there are only a few hundred thousand Indians, gospel work among whom may be readily carried on by the larger Christian denominations of our country, encourages the belief that the matter of evangelizing them need be a question only of a very short time. The pacific policy of the Government, recently inaugurated, will certainly make it much easier to reach them. Never before has the door been so wide open. The opportunity assuredly justifies the largest possible increase in appropriations for the coming year. The Portland, Me., resolution ought to be carried out, and certainly no less than $60,000 be given to the work. The element of money is now the chief point of interest. To lack in that particular will be to hedge up the way to those benighted souls who are trusting when they might justly have hated even to desperation, who are asking for the gospel when they have had abundant reason for scorning the messenger of Jesus Christ as they would an agent worse than the worst Indian. Although it might not appear from a comparison of this year's report with that of last year, that any great advance has been made in the way of statistics, nevertheless, we cannot read that new churches have been organized, that hopeful conversions have been made, that members have been added to the Christian fellowship, that the force of missionaries and teachers has grown from sixty-eight to eighty-seven, indicating a need on the part of the Indian to which this service efficiently responds, without expressing a profound sense of gratitude for that care and blessing which the Great Head of the Church has bestowed upon all this work. Through the influence of Christian conference and an enlightened, not subsidized, press, the old-time prejudice is wearing rapidly away. Could the Normal School at the Santee Agency be for a season carried on where people, even not Christians, might see what is possible in the Indian character, there would be no difficulty whatever in getting the substantial sympathy of every honest heart. Indifference is the child of ignorance.

And now that the methods of the industrial school are becoming more generally adopted, these benighted children of the West, who, until recently have been crowded into reservations only to be despoiled, will quickly learn that the purpose of the Christian people of this land is simply to convert the tepee they are willing to leave, into a home of Christ. It stirs within us the deepest emotions to read of the boys and girls forming Endeavor Societies, and of the increased interest in the Sunday-school work. And the lines of the Association have gone out even as far as Alaska. Here there are two missionaries. They were sent this year. They have been most cordially welcomed, and the Mission established will strengthen what others are doing among these distant people.

Taking, then, these eight stations into consideration, remembering that there is a great willingness to be favored with the presence and work of the Christian missionary, knowing, too, that the conversions of so many indicate what is possible under the gospel of Jesus Christ, and finally having gained a large vantage ground in the favorable attitude of the Government, we ask to-day, What ought the Association to realize during the coming year?

First, a deeper interest on the part of the ministers who will bring the freshest information to the churches.

Second, increased beneficence to enable the Association to enlarge their missionary force. Enough has been done to warrant the use of an amount twice as large as that now given by the churches.

Third, special gifts for the work of the industrial department. Each station having a church and school should be equipped with material for industrial teaching at once. Past years have gone to prove how easy it is to dehumanize an Indian, and the sequels to our national policy have made it the more difficult to reach him; but now, instead of being kept a pauper-ward of the Government, he is assured of a citizenship protected by law, and toward the larger significance of this he may be properly led only as he is taught to understand that the best phase of citizenship is in honest productive toil. So it will be seen that the best gospel work finds its legitimate outcome in an intelligent Christian man conscientiously toiling for the salvation of his home.

REPORT ON CHINESE WORK.

BY REV. JOSEPH E. ROY, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

We have been a long time studying upon the providential purpose of the African in America. We are still hard at work upon our Negro problem. The providential footing of the Chinamen in our country is another grave question before us. His first coming, in 1850, by the attraction of gold discovery, was in the ordinary way of international migration. This year has witnessed in California the celebration, with great pomp, of the 40th anniversary of the reception of that State into the Union. The birth of that commonwealth had been out of the throes of the national conflict, characterized by the compromise of the Henry Clay "Omnibus Bill." In honor of that event San Francisco went into high jubilation, and her resident Chinamen, with their "flowery" tinsel, were welcomed to a place in her majestic procession. Their later coming by the thousand to build our trans-continental highway was recognized as eminently providential, for without their labor that stupendous and essentially patriotic enterprise could scarcely have been accomplished. On the coast they have proven themselves the most serviceable laborers in developing its railroad and agricultural systems. Our Chinese wall of exclusion leaves with us, all told, but 125,000, and these scattered over the Pacific slope and filtered into the cities of all the country. Surely this is a population so limited, so diffused, and so surrounded by our civilization, as not to be a serious menace to our institutions.

But is this enough, to be able to feel tolerably safe from contact with this heathen civilization? Even in this view, especially on the farther coast, where there are dense patches of this population, the touch of this heathenism is corrupting upon youth and susceptible spirits. It tends to lower the tone of morality. It drowns some souls in perdition. Here is, then, the call for self-protection.

There is, also, the providential call for missionary work at home. Our fathers, looking longingly upon that vast shut-in field, prayed earnestly that it might be opened. At last it is made so wide open that it sends its representatives to our very doors. We may see for ourselves the nature, the corrupting influence of heathenism. We may see the modifying influence of mere civilization, of the best elements in the pagan religion. We may gain new impressions as to the absolute need of such a religion as that of Jesus Christ, and new impetus in the duty and the work of imparting it to these home heathen. And so in most of the cities of the East and of the interior there is organized work for the local Chinese. We find it in the Mt. Vernon Church of Boston, whose pastor, except for temporary illness, would have been here to make this report and speak on this subject. We find it in North Adams, where there has been so large an influx of these Mongolian people. We find it at Chicago, in Dr. Goodwin's and Dr. Noble's churches; in St. Louis, at Dr. Stimson's church; at Peoria, New Orleans and Denver and at many other places. Among these is the church of our honored President, which has a Sunday-school of thirty-five pupils, and some of these have been baptized in the fellowship of the New York Tabernacle. It is only a Sunday-school work that is done in these churches this side the Rockies. But even this process is fruitful in conversions from Confucius to Jesus Christ, and the churches are prompt in receiving such to their fellowship, which is made to be a real brotherly kindness. On the other side of the mountains, in places where there are Chinese communities and no organized missions for them, local churches are doing the same sort of work, in the same spirit and with the same result. Then in the cities, where there are the most of these Chinatown people, the standard of missions is set up by some one or other of these national missionary societies, which in addition to the ordinary Sunday-school service, and in connection with the local church of the cognate denomination, have their mission buildings and premises, and in these the regular week-night schools, with devo tional exercises in each, and regular religious meetings. Ordinarily the converts of these missions are gathered into the local churches, which soon make the new comers realize that God is indeed no respecter of persons, and that all the disciples of the Redeemer are one in him.

In this good work the American Missionary Association is having a full share. As shown by this report, it has in California eighteen schools, two more than last year; thirty-three teachers and one thousand three hundred ten pupils. One hundred fifty-nine of these pupils give evidence of conversion, and two hundred four have ceased from idolatry. One new chapel has been built and dedicated, that at Riverside. A total of seven hundred fifty, not including any that have lapsed from the faith, are counted as having been led to Christ in connection with these missions. When we consider the natural obstinacy of the human heart and the prejudice and superstition of the heathen and their bondage to Satan, this is a result devoutly to be recognized. We feel also like calling special attention to the duty of remembering in sympathy and in prayer these tremulous disciples of the Divine Master and their Christly teachers.

But the highest consideration as to the providential footing of the Chinamen in America is the reaction of this work in our country in behalf of China itself. These people are going back to their native land in larger proportion than any foreigners who domicile for a time in our country. In 1889 there were eight hundred thirty-six registered arrivals and three thousand six hundred seventy-two departures. Those who return as Christians will, not a few at least, be as a leaven of the gospel in their old communities, and in some places nuclei of Christian schools and churches. The hopeful mission of the American Board at Hong Kong is the outgrowth of this retroactive influence of our own mission in California. And now we have among our Chinese Christian brethren in California, a society of their own to operate in South China, under the advice and supervision of Rev. Charles R. Hager of that Hong Kong mission. Heaven only can tell the final outcome of this co-operation of Christian Chinamen in America with that grand force at work in that empire under our own God-blessed American Board and other foreign mission societies of this and other lands. And so we find a divine wisdom and a divine hand guiding the footing of the Chinamen in America.

But we cannot close this report without voicing what seems to us to be a divine warning. If Jefferson, in view of the system of slavery in his day, had to say, "I tremble when I remember that God is just," well may we stand in awe of His judgments when we realize that His eye is upon the treatment our nation and its people are rendering to China and to her sons in this land. It was no weak appeal to sentiment, when two weeks ago, President Angell, a former minister of our Government to that of China, in his report to the American Board, expressed a warning, much in the spirit of a Hebrew prophet. He said: "We ought not to keep silent concerning the fact that our missionaries have reason to fear embarrassment sooner or later, if the Congress of the United States unjustly and cruelly legislates, or if our citizens treat Chinese residents here in disregard of our solemn treaty stipulations with the Chinese Government. As Christian citizens, let the friends of this Board and of missions raise their voices in protest against proceedings which disgrace us as a powerful Christian nation, and which may provoke retaliation, to the serious harm of our missionaries, and, indeed, of all American citizens in China."

Mr. Denby, the United States minister to China under President Cleveland, reporting to his Government the looting of a Presbyterian and a Methodist mission in that land, said: "This is a serious case and may be a test one. It grew, as all our evils do, out of the troubles in the United States." The viceroy of the province of Quong Fung justifies his hostility to the Presbyterian mission on the ground that any wrongs inflicted by the natives upon the missionaries are trivial in comparison with the outrages visited upon the Chinese in America. Bishop Fowler, returning from China, expressed his belief that a policy of retaliation would soon be inaugurated that would bring on an effort at extirpation of Americans.

REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

BY CHARLES MARSH, CHAIRMAN.

The committee, to whom was referred the Treasurer's statement and accompanying papers, have attended to their duty and instruct me to submit the following report:

We have met the Treasurer and have examined with as much care as we were able, the voluminous accounts for the year, together with the certification of the auditors to each phase of the accounts. The business of the Association has grown from $11,000 in 1846, to transactions involving forty times that sum in 1890, and employing a capital investment in lands, buildings, bonds and mortgages (including trusts) of two hundred times that sum. We find that the accounts are kept by an intelligent system and show an admirable perfection of detail. The methods and thoroughness of the auditors is especially noteworthy and commendable. We find the facts stated in the summary which has been freely distributed among the audiences during these days of meeting, to agree with the Treasurer's more detailed statement.

The Association has received from interest and dividends on the investments placed in their possession by Daniel Hand, the sum of $34,686, and has good reason to expect that this amount will be considerably increased during the coming year. They take great interest in mentioning the fact that the giver of this munificent trust still lives; though feeble in body, clear in mind, to see the great good that his gift is accomplishing.

The committee take much interest in an annuity account on the ledger of the Associarion which represents anticipated legacies, the donors receiving stipulated rates of interest during the remainder of their lives. In these days of will-contests this method of settling one's own estate, in part, is greatly to be commended.

While the record of the Association is thus admirable, we should fail in our duty did we not clearly set forth the fact that the churches fall far short of meeting their responsibility in the great work before them. When you congratulate yourselves that the large sum of $403,000 has been received during the past year, exceeding all previous years and larger by $32,000 than last year, it must not be forgotten that the large sum of $75,000 came from Government aid and tuitions, and the still larger sum of $137,000 from legacies. (Included in the last sum is the great legacy of the late lamented President of this Association, ex-Gov. William Barrett Washburn). Legacies are an uncertain reliance for the steady and constant needs of an ever growing benevolent enterprise. This leaves as the amount contributed by the living members of our churches only $186,000.

Does this sum fairly represent the interest of our Congregational churches in the education and enlightenment of the freedmen in our country, to say nothing of the other important branches of the work of this society? Are the churches meeting their "great opportunity"? Consider: First, the rapid increase of the work before the Association, the vast population to be reached, the readiness and co-operation with which religious and educational effort is received in almost every part of the South, (in such contrast with a score of years ago) and that other most important fact, that efficient and well educated helpers of their own race are now in command in increasing numbers.

constantly waning, and, from necessity, the colored population has been greatly reduced. Mrs. B. Y. Messenger has done a hard and successful year's work, and our hope is to harvest the fruits year by year of the work done there in previous years. Several of the more promising young people are at Hampton.

3. Avery Institute, Charleston, S. C.

Instructors.—Mr. M. A. Warren, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. M. A. Warren, Charleston, S. C.; Mr. J. P. Richardson, Lowell, Mass.; Miss. M. E. Hilliard, Northfield, Mass.; Miss Agnes Duncan, Wayland, Mass.; Miss F. A. Gleason, Glen Falls, N. Y.; Miss F. W. Perkins, New-Haven, Ct.; Miss H. F. Miller, Charleston, S. C.; Miss E. A. Heath, ——, Ohio; Miss Leonora Johnson, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. H. V. Cuttino, Charleston, S. C.

Value of school property, $22,000; number of pupils, 317; number in Sabbath-school, 190.

The prevalence of the yellow fever prevented the opening of Avery Institute at the usual time, and, as a result, the number of pupils was a little reduced. The year, however, was a highly successful one, as the following report from the superintendent shows:

"There are in our work encouraging indications, notably the desire of the parents that their children should get an education. Parents are just as self-sacrificing and as ambitious for their children to-day as they were just after the war, when the country was filled with such extravagant stories of their greed for knowledge. The children, too, are just as diligent, ambitious, and capable as then. To be sure, teachers and superintendents have ceased to fill their letters and reports with individual instances for wonderment; (I wonder if this can be the reason for diminished givings?) but be assured we have just as interesting pupils and as wonderful ones now as then. If we make less noise about it, it is, perhaps, because we are wiser. At any rate, it is not because we are less interested or less hopeful in our work. And is not this interest of ours in the work another encouraging sign? I think it ought to be. If they at the front are cheery, what cause for dismay have those who stay by the stuff?

"As to results in my own school, I have to report as follows: Our higher department numbers 76; of these, 21 were in the senior class, which has received more or less of special normal instruction. Out of this class of twenty-one we graduated seven—the parents of the remainder preferring that they should remain at least another year before taking the diploma.

"Mr. Cravath was present, and presented the diplomas to the graduating class.

"Seven of our pupils have been teaching during the past year. Of these, two, perhaps three, return next year to complete their course and receive their diplomas. These three have had good success. One has taught in this school to my entire satisfaction; two have been engaged in Sumter County. From the superintendent of schools of that county I have received very flattering commendations as to the success of one; the second, at that time, not having commenced her work. Two young men who have been teaching near the Savannah river will not return to graduate, because 'they want us down there again next winter.' The chief difficulty in the way of these young people returning to graduate (and the last or senior year is far more profitable to them than any other year of the course) lies in the fact that they are poorly able to support themselves while at school. If any one would loan them money, to be paid back in one or two years from their earnings as teachers, it would be a great assistance, and thankfully received. Five dollars a month will carry them through the year.

"We have, studying Greek, 8; Latin, 25; Algebra, 75; book-keeping, (primary forms to teach them to keep their own accounts,) 20; dictionary, (to teach its value and use,) 75. Great enthusiasm has been developed in the study of botany. No text has been used, but both teachers and pupils have brought numberless specimens to the classes, and the pupils, many of them, have actually mastered a fair knowledge of the elements of the science, besides gaining what is of infinitely more value, a love of flowers and plants, and the habit of observation.

"Bible lessons have been had weekly in the higher departments. Every morning in the week (except one) we gather in the chapel for devotion. Several of our pupils have become Christians, and some have united with the different churches in the city. On the whole, I feel that a hearty year's work has been accomplished, notwithstanding the tardiness of its commencement."

4. Brewer Normal School, Greenwood, S. C.

Teacher, Mr. C. A. Young, Greenwood, S. C. Value of school property, $4000 Number of pupils, 100.

Early in the year the Association became the possessor in fee simple of a fine property, of eight acres of land, and a substantial brick school-building in Greenwood, S. C. By an arrangement with Mrs. Perry of Boston, who founded the Brewer Orphan Asylum near Wilmington, N. C., the asylum was closed and the property sold, and the name Brewer and the interest of Mrs. Perry were transferred to this institution. Thus the Brewer Normal School was founded.

The Association had never before been represented in western South-Carolina, and we regard the opening of this school as an important event in the development of our work in this State.

Naturally the school at present is quite primary, but it has a wide and important field.

5. Lewis High School, Macon, Ga.

Instructors.—Miss M. E. Sands, Saco, Me.; Miss E. M. Barnes, Bakersfield, Vt.; Miss S. A. G. Stevens, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; Miss H. F. Giles, Rockport, Mass.; Miss L. A. Jones, Jamestown, N. Y.; Miss H. C. Foote, Watertown, Ct.

Value of school property, $12,000; number of pupils, 518; number in Sabbath-school, 200.

We take the following from the report of the Superintendent, Miss M. E. Sands:

"As the duties of another season are about to close, and the months of labor are reviewed, I can truly say they have been the happiest I ever experienced. While I feel assured that the scholars have made commendable progress in their studies, which will, I trust, fit them for useful positions in life, I am rejoiced to say that God has bestowed upon us his richest gifts, and poured out his Spirit upon us, and sinners have been converted.

"The interest was first manifested among the larger scholars in the night-school. The Spirit strove so powerfully that young men were completely overcome, and were obliged to leave school until they had obtained pardon; then they returned rejoicing in what God had done for them.

"Prayer-meetings were established for the scholars which were well attended; some of them were very interesting. Twenty scholars have testified their love for the Saviour. Most of them made a profession of their faith, and are, I trust, trying to serve their Master. There are others who are deeply interested and very anxious, but like many others have decided to wait until a more convenient season. While endeavoring to help others, my own heart has been made to rejoice, and I feel that I shall never cease thanking God for the rich blessing he has bestowed on us—and trust I shall never grow weary of working in his vineyard."

Second, the great debt of America to the African race. Said Abraham Lincoln in 1865, one of his last utterances, "If God will that the war continue till all the wealth piled by the bondmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil be sunk, the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." So likewise if America should equal in a magnificent expenditure and Christ-like effort to enlighten and save them, it would not more than offset its great indebtedness to this long suffering race.

Third, self-preservation. This may seem an inferior motive but it is one that most quickly arouses energetic effort and a generous output. Let so rapidly an increasing race remain in ignorance, quick to imitate the sins and wickedness of the superior race, and it needs no prophet to foretell the direful result.

Fourth, the command of our Lord to "Preach the gospel to every creature," and the recognition of the great doctrine of the brotherhood of man, need no enforcement by us, after the ringing utterances from this pulpit on Tuesday evening.

In view of these considerations can it be thought for an instant that our churches are properly measuring their duty by an annual gift of $186,000. We will not reduce this sum to an amount per capita, it would seem too trifling, but would earnestly commend the whole matter to the enlightened conscience of our Christian brethren.

That man of God and most devoted missionary, Simeon H. Calhoun, said on one of his last days on earth: "Deeper and deeper has become my conviction that the work of missions is the great work of Christ's church on the earth, and that it can be neglected by no organization or individual without personal loss."

Let this sentiment enter into the hearts of Christian men and women in our churches; let it be taught to the children (and the important fact is too often forgotten that missionary interest begins very early in childhood) and wide, increasing, beneficent and heavenly results will follow.

FORTY-FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1890.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The year opened auspiciously. Throughout the months our work has moved on steadily.

The faith which sees in every man the image of God, which looks out upon the sin and misery, helplessness and darkness, with kind eyes, and reaches forth to save with kind hands, has been the inspiration of the year. In the service there have been diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. The mission work has been instinct with one purpose. It is the seeking and saving that which is lost. The teachers in common schools and in higher schools; the teachers of language, of history, of science, of theology, of industries for men and industries for women, the makers of houses and the makers of homes, as well as the preachers in churches organized and preachers in congregations not organized, have gone with the Gospel of Christ to save those to whom they have been sent, unto the same fellowship of their faith on earth, and to the hopes of the same Heaven. They have gone not only to rescue people from their woeful inheritances, but also to teach those who will be teachers of others. They have been preparing those who will be leaders of their own people. From schools of culture and from homes of refinement, with the keys of the Church of Christ, they have gone to open the doors of great kingdoms for the Lord of all the world. They have been of good courage, faithful and patient. They report a noble year of service to gladden our hearts and to cheer our faith. The schools have been overflowing, and many churches and schools have rejoiced in the special visitation of God's grace. We recall their works, and rejoice with them for their works' sake.

THE SOUTH.

Higher Education.

We condense the reports from our varied fields to the briefest statements. During the past year, the Association has directly sustained five chartered institutions in the South, namely, Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee, Talladega College in Alabama, Tougaloo University in Mississippi, Straight University in New Orleans, La., and Tillotson Institute in Austin, Texas. Besides this, appropriations have been made to Atlanta University in Georgia, and to Howard University, Washington, D. C.

FISK UNIVERSITY, with 518 students, is making a constant record of strong and thorough work. The Faculty of the College are working in perfect harmony, and each department is in zealous Christian emulation. The institution is a centre of light which stretches far out into the surrounding darkness. The intellectual and moral power of Fisk University is great. Many of its students yearly go forth to be wise leaders for their race; many also become preachers of the Gospel, who, though they may not identify themselves with our Congregational body, yet go where their work is counting much in the solution of the problems of their race and of their country.

The Association has voted to extend the facilities for theological instruction at Fisk this year, and an additional professor has already been appointed. We expect that this department will tell increasingly upon the religious condition of the people.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE follows Fisk in numbers, with 512 students. This institution with its large and excellent normal department has come to a point where many of its brighter and more thorough students are asking that they may draw their instruction from deeper springs. They realize (as many in the North cannot) that the welfare of their race does not rest in the ability to learn the surface truths of science and life, or even in the ability to go out and teach to their less favored people the rudiments of knowledge. If their education ceases here, this must mean perpetual inferiority. They see that people are helpless, up to the measure of their ignorance; they see as clearly that in the uplifting of a people into selfhood, they must not only take care of the beginnings, that their standards be right and high, but they are coming to feel that they themselves need the leverage of a discipline which a higher education brings, that they may have in themselves the greater power of helpfulness. They are realizing that while it is well for them to read and write, to add up their accounts, and to be instructed in industries, if this is all, the uplifting of the race to a higher plane must be very slow. Students in all our advanced institutions need no urgency to seek a larger preparation for a larger service and life.

In view of this, the college department in Talladega is now in another stage of its development, that the work which has been felt throughout the State and in other States, shall increase both in its channels and in its currents. The missionary work of Talladega especially, under the direction of Professor Reed, who has projected Sunday-schools in all the surrounding settlements, is very marked. These schools are carried on by students under a wise supervision, and are excellent training schools for the future usefulness of those who are teaching in them.

The theological department of this institution, is of inestimable importance, and is to be immediately re-enforced with another professor.

TOUGALOO UNIVERSITY, which was filled to crowding with 343 students at the time of last year's report, has been packed still more this year, with 383 students. Tougaloo is in the heart of the "Black Belt." The institution is beautifully located in a forest of oak, with 500 acres of excellent land for agriculture. There we have industrial shops and schools, with many forms of industry for both young men and young women. A successful Biblical department is incorporated into the course of study, and it is the purpose of the Association to enlarge also this feature of its Tougaloo work. The appalling religious condition of the "Black Belt" calls for our earnest help. It is our hope to send forth from this centre many, who though they may have but a limited Biblical education, shall be true in their religious teaching, and become pioneers towards the idea of a religious life which shall include morals. The testimony of one who has come into direct contact in this portion of the South for eight years with the colored ministers, is, "Three-fourths of those who are now acting as preachers of the Gospel in all this region are absolutely unfit to preach the Gospel or to attempt to lead any one." He writes, "It is very rare that one can find in the country districts where the masses of the people dwell, a minister who is in any degree both intelligent and morally upright. A large proportion of the ministers are ignorant, and far from being morally what they should be."

Testimonies like this, which cannot be gainsaid, have decided us to increase our facilities for Biblical education in Tougaloo, that we may send forth intelligent preachers, free from superstitions and pure in their characters.

STRAIGHT UNIVERSITY has numbered 582 students, who come from a wide area. It is not uncommon for students to seek this institution from Cuba, Central America, Mexico, or some parts of Louisiana, who can speak no English. It is an inspiring thought that they will return to their homes, as some have returned, with Christ in their hearts and thrifty thoughts in their heads, to radiate good influences in those revolutionary States. This institution has been more than filled. Hundreds have been refused admission. Every year shows marked improvement in the quality of student life in this, as in all our schools. Pupils come better prepared. They are more earnest and more energetic. The demand for teachers from this institution is greater than the supply. Seventeen of its former students are now teaching in the city schools of New Orleans. Many others are filling important places as teachers, superintendents and preachers, in neighboring States. Various industries for men, and all kinds of needlework and housework for women, are well taught. As at Fisk and Talladega, the religious interest has been deep and strong, and more than fifty of the students during the year learned how precious a grace is the Saviour's love.

The year past, under the Superintendency of Rev. R. C. Hitchcock, has been one of the most useful years in the history of Straight. President Hitchcock now resigns this charge to assume the duties of a General Superintendent. Professor Oscar E. Atwood, of Vermont, whose success as an educator gives great promise for the future, has already entered upon his duties. Rev. George W. Henderson, A. M., has been appointed theological professor and pastor in the Church of the University.

From the proceeds of the Daniel Hand Fund, we have at a moderate outlay, opened the Hand Model School, which will educate pupils in the primary and intermediate grades. The building will accommodate several hundred.

TILLOTSON INSTITUTE is located in the centre of the great empire of Texas. It is adding the collegiate department to its normal course of studies. This institution suffers for lack of dormitory room. A girls' hall is of immediate necessity. With no great increase of teachers, enlarged accommodations would multiply the good influences of this institution. It numbered last year 199 students.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY, which is not under the supervision of the Association at the present time, is still aided by it to the amount of $3,000 a year. Six of its trustees are nominated by the Association. The last year was one of great interest. We heartily commend the excellent work of the past year. The number of students registered was 677.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY, at Washington, has taken on new interest and purpose with the Presidency of Rev. J. E. Rankin, LL.D. The Theological department under our care, is developing with cheering progress.

HAMPTON. We have made our usual appropriation of $500 toward the support of the pastorate in Hampton Institute.

All these great schools are growing in the estimation of thoughtful Southern men.

Normal Schools.

Our normal and graded schools, in which are the same courses of study, up to the college departments, as in our chartered institutions, are 21. These are located in seven different States. Among them, LeMoyne Normal School, at Memphis, reports an attendance of 600 students. Ballard Normal School reports an attendance of 595. If we add the normal departments of our chartered institutions, we count 26 schools aided by the Association for especially normal instruction for teachers.

Common Schools.

Besides these, there are 53 common schools, crowded to their utmost capacity with eager pupils. In all of these, instruction in both manual and industrial training forms some part of the course.

We record a gain of 20 schools, 80 teachers, and 3,301 students above the previous year.

It will be seen that of these pupils eighty-nine per cent. are in the grades below that of normal, nine per cent. are in the normal grades, one per cent. in the college preparatory, and one per cent. in the theological and college departments. There appears to be as yet, no great excess of higher education.

The religious work of our schools has been very marked. They have been working in harmony, and gracious blessings of revivals have rewarded the fidelity and missionary spirit of our teachers.

Daniel Hand Fund.

The great gift of DANIEL HAND, which has made much of the increase possible, enables this aged Christian philanthropist to see how far and wide the income derived from his noble benevolence is extending itself to aid thousands who else would be denied the teaching and training for useful lives. From the avails of this fund some new school buildings have been erected, and all who have been able to prosecute their studies have been stimulated to industry and personal self-support and to the virtues which make for a stable moral and Christian character.

Church Work.

In the careful review of our church work, we are renewedly confirmed in our convictions that we are called not only to multiply Congregational churches in the South, but also to see to it that they do more than wear our name. They should understand and honor our principles. They should be centres of intelligent faith and sources of pure influence. It is no honor and no gain to the polity which we approve, and the ideas for which we exist, to name churches Congregational which are not so, and which by reason of their lack both of intelligence and virtue, can only put us to shame. A Congregational pastor, himself colored, writes us as follows: "There is no question of ultimate success to reward us for our work, provided we have patience and hold on. There is no reason to expect a mushroom development under present conditions. Congregationalism in the South is more likely to resemble the century plant in its growth. We are greatly dependent upon our schools to create the conditions."

Our constituency does not exist except as it is made, and this is made usually from the processes of our schools. It would be fair to conclude that our church work should not be considered without reference to the fact that our ideas are new to the people, and that our ideals are far above their level, and that we cannot plant churches with hope of success except where we are also successfully laboring to put intelligence in the place of ignorance. Our more sober methods of church life and worship and our pure principles do not attract those who are untrained and uneducated. It is true, as a noted Southerner testifies: "I speak advisedly to say, that the Negro population have made surprising progress in material, intellectual, moral and religious direction since their emancipation." It is true, as Bishop Haygood declares that, "No other illiterate people have ever made such progress as these, in the last two and a half decades." It is true that the Negro has done well. He has property to-day valued at two hundred millions of dollars. He is as greedy as ever for education, and the call for it on every hand, every day, is as anxious and earnest as it was in the beginning. It is true that sixteen thousand colored teachers have been educated out of this original ignorance within twenty-five years.

It is quite as true that the blacks to-day who cannot read are considerably in excess of the original four millions when emancipated, and that as yet, darkness covers the face of the land. Our hopeful church work is found for the most part to be contiguous to our schools, we might almost say, within them. This for two reasons. First, our schools are sources of light; and secondly, all our teachers are missionaries, to give these new organizations personal sympathy and help. Our teachers are in their Sunday-schools. They are in the prayer meetings. They are in attendance upon the public worship, until these churches take on the character and the forms which excite both the surprise and gratitude of Northern visitors. In these conditions for purity and permanence, we have strong churches.

We could plant churches much more rapidly, and make them receptacles for missionary funds, if we would yield to the temptation to plant them for the name of it. Come-outers from other denominations where there have been church difficulties, and uneducated and self-elected preachers, often turn to us with the willingness to take our name as soon as they can successfully pronounce it. They are ready to escape the ills they have, and to send us their monthly bills for support.

This would swell our numbers, and encourage those who count Christian work in this way, but engaged as we are in a serious effort to reconstruct the religious character and life of a people whose average condition to-day is not such as to susthin pure churches, it is our duty to guard against all hopeless expenditures, while we are steadily seeking to build good foundations against the time to come.

At the same time, with the leaven of education and the light of these better days, our seeking for the hopeful introduction of our church work is rewarded with churches in places where we have no schools. We have organized one such church among the colored people this year, and have worked seven points where churches are likely to be organized within a few months. These are now places of regular worship. In addition to these, six new churches have been added to our number.

Those who are conversant with the state of things among the colored people of the South at the present time, have marked the transitional phase of it. The colored people are coming and going. Places which a few years ago were hopeful, have been depleted. Some settlements have been well-nigh deserted. Many business ventures which call people together have not been successful, and for one and another reason churches which began with hopefulness have lost their membership. In our review of this year, we find eight churches which we have taken from our rolls in view of their unpromising condition. Five other churches, which were formerly reported by us, are independent and now unreported. With these corrections, the number of our churches is one hundred twenty-eight. They are not large, but they compare well with young churches Many of them are moving steadily on toward self-support, and all of them are taking on a recognized and worthy position.

Much time has been given during the year to the problem of our church work in the South. Professors from our colleges in central points of the South have personally supervised the various parts of the field carefully. Our General Missionaries have been consulted for their experiences and views. Every part of the work has been carefully visited. In accordance with this repeated and critical study of the field, both by our missionaries and from the office, the Executive Committee has voted to make increased effort for our church work, and especially to prepare a sufficient and worthy ministry in our own schools, who shall be trained to work with Congregational principles in our Congregational ways. We begin this new school year with a considerable addition to our force for Biblical instruction in our higher schools.

It is but just to mention, however, that the distinction between our church and school work differs more in name and in form than it does in reality. Our schools are doing much work that is usually done in churches. The purpose of our schools and churches is one. The supreme thought of each is to bring souls to Christ, and to educate them for Christ. In fact, as many souls count the place of their new birth in our schools as in our churches. It must needs be so. Life in the school is more susceptible. The influence of the daily Biblical and ethical teaching is great, as also are the organized meetings of prayer and Christian Endeavor under the leading and example of consecrated teachers. This close relationship of school and church is fruitful for both, and furnishes us, together with the increase of facilities for theological study, the answer to our problem of church work. We are getting to the roots of it when we plant some kind of a school by every church, and when we plant a church by the side of every school.

In this connection, we should notice the specific theological departments which exist in all our chartered institutions. They are doing a great work in sending forth a more capable and more worthy ministry into other communions as well as into our own. Many of those educated by us do not count in our statistics, but they are, nevertheless, leavening needy life with our teaching, and helping to bring in the kingdom of God.

Six new church edifices have been completed this year: Two in Georgia, two in Alabama, one in Tennessee, and one in Texas. A new church edifice completed last year, has been dedicated at Ironaton, Ala. We can confidently say that our churches are in better condition than ever before.

MOUNTAIN WORK.

The distinguishing feature of our mountain work during the past year has been its rapid growth, and the still more rapid development of its needs. We are planting new schools and new churches, erecting new buildings and putting in additional forces, but we fall behind the demands coming to us from this great region in eastern Kentucky and Tennessee, western North Carolina and northern Alabama. A revolution is going on among the hills and valleys of the Southern Appalachians. That which has been predicted in our reports of previous years is here.

Center of Power.

The railways are pushing through the four gaps of the mighty mountain wall which has so long fronted the forces of modern progress. Capital in scores of millions is pouring through these defiles from both England and America; but it is not pouring into the hands of the people of the mountains—it is vested in great corporations and owned abroad. So far as their own resources are concerned, the people, outside of a very few individuals, remain as poor as they have been; but the wealth of the mountains in coal, iron and timber has drawn to itself the eyes of the world and is being rapidly developed. In 1880 the total product of pig-iron by the South was 350,000 tons; this year the census reveals a product of 1,780,000 tons. The single state of Alabama has advanced to the third place among the states of the Union in this manufacture. Mr. Atkinson, one of the foremost statisticians of the country, says, that the world's iron and steel production will centre in the South. This region is to become a centre of vast social, political and moral power.

Influence of our Mountain Work.

Our churches and schools, few as they are, already wield an influence which is felt throughout large areas. We are educating teachers to go out each year into many counties and teach schools which raise the standard of many other schools. Our preachers and churches are diffusing a desire for better religious teaching and privileges. Every stroke of our work tells far beyond its direct and immediate results. We are glad to report that this advancing and productive work is awakening so large an interest among our constituents. If the means should be put into our hands to double its volume during the next year, it will still fall behind the demands which are pressed upon us.

We have over 1,300 pupils in our mountain schools, and have established six new schools during the year. Four new churches are enrolled, and several other missions where our ministers are at work are nearly ready for a formal organization. We are putting up new buildings at Williamsburg and Grand View, each school being over-crowded with students, and receiving applications now far in excess of even these additional accommodations when they are ready to be occupied. We are also building Saluda Seminary among the mountains of southwestern North Carolina, a most necessitous and promising field.

Pioneer Missionary Work.

We have been doing pioneer missionary work in the mountains of southeastern Tennessee and western North Carolina. Some of the best frontier work of the year has been done by missionary theological students, who have entered and held difficult fields with a perseverance little short of heroism. We desire to re-enforce and develop our evangelistic service, in which our missionaries go among the populations not yet reached by the railways, holding meetings in schoolhouses, and doing exploring work preliminary to our establishing schools and organizing churches. While this work makes for the present no statistical showing, it is fruitful in awakening the attention of the people, and inciting those religious and educational aspirations which open the way for organized work.

More Mountain Evangelists.

If the means were at hand, we should be glad to commission more mountain evangelists, and we believe that their preaching would be productive of large ultimate results. The voices of these evangelists crying in the wilderness will "prepare the way of the Lord and make his paths straight." An addition of twenty strong men preaching throughout the mountains a gospel of pure religion and pure morality, and lecturing and advocating educational advances, would do a wonderful work for the future of hundreds of communities in those regions, although the immediate results of their service could not be tabulated in set figures. We are thankful for the results of the past. We rejoice in present achievements; but we plan and look and hope for greater things than these.

Enlargements and Improvements.

Additions have been made to Washburn Seminary in Beaufort, and to the Lincoln Institute at All Healing Springs, North Carolina, and a new school building is in process of erection at Saluda, in the same State.

A dormitory for girls has been erected at Greenwood, South Carolina, and the capacity of the schoolhouse has been doubled.

At McIntosh, Georgia, a Principal's home has been built, with a dormitory for boys and one for girls. We have also added to the capacity of the schoolhouse.

At Orange Park, Florida, two dormitories, one for boys and one for girls, have been erected, and the central schoolhouse now awaits completion.

In Mobile, Alabama, the Emerson Institute home for teachers has been enlarged.

Improvements have added facilities for a greater number of pupils at Athens, Alabama.

Extensive additions have been made to Le Moyne Normal School at Memphis, Tennessee.

A new building for dormitory and school purposes is in process of erection at Grand View, Tennessee.

A new schoolhouse is in process of construction at Mt. Verde, Tennessee.

In Kentucky, the Williamsburg Academy is being enlarged, and a new school edifice is now in the hands of the builders.

The Chandler School has been completed, and was occupied about the middle of the school year.

At Tougaloo, extensive repairs have been made, and we are now erecting a building for the accommodation of Primary and Intermediate grades.

The Hand School at New Orleans has been already noted.

THE INDIANS.

The Stations.

1. SANTEE AGENCY, NEB.—This is the most important of our stations. We have here our large Normal Training School for Indian youth, in connection with which are a printing office, carpenter's shop, shoe shop, blacksmith's shop and a large farm; also a normal department for the education of native Indian teachers, and a theological department for the education of native missionary workers, and a native church.

2. OAHE.—At the Oahe Station, located on the east side of the Missouri River, fifteen miles above Pierre, we have an Industrial Boarding School, a native church, and in connection with these, nine native out-stations.

3. STANDING ROCK.—This station is located sixty miles south of Bismarck, on the west bank of the Missouri River, and its out-stations are scattered over the whole of this reservation. There is at this station a hospital with medical missionary and native assistants. This has been found to be a great help in reaching the Indians, as it destroys the influence of the medicine-man, who is the great opposer of all progress among the Indians. At first it was viewed by them with suspicion, and none but the Christian Indians patronized it. Later, an old Indian chief allowed a very difficult operation to be performed upon his son at the hospital, and as a result his life was saved. In Dr. Pingree's last report, she states that over one hundred calls had been made for medicine from the dispensary in the last three days.

4. FORT BERTHOLD.—This station is situated on the Missouri River, ninety-five miles northwest of Bismarck. The Association has here an Industrial Boarding School for boys and girls, and a church. During the year a new Boys' Hall has been erected, which has increased the capacity of the school about twenty scholars. There has been a deep religious interest in connection with this mission, and several additions to the native church. At one of the young peoples' prayer meetings, thirty young people, speaking four different languages, took part in less than twenty minutes.

5. ROSEBUD STATION.—This is the most recent work assumed by the Association among the Sioux Indians. It was begun, and has since been supported, by the children of our Congregational Sunday-schools. There are upon the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota about 7,500 Indians, and the station is located at the Rosebud Agency, thirty miles south of Valentine, Neb. In connection with this mission there are several out-stations, at one of which during the last year a church has been organized.

6. SKOKOMISH STATION.—Here Rev. Myron Eells has continued his work for another year. Besides the preaching at this station, the care of the Sunday-school and prayer meetings and the pastoral work, in which he gets round among his people as often as once in a month, he has also the care of the Indian church among the Clallams near New Dungeness, the brethren of that station in the pastor's absence maintaining stated worship. The benevolent contributions of the Skokomish church of fifty-five members amount to $198.15, an average of $3.60 for each member.

7. THE RAMONA SCHOOL.—This school, situated at Santa Fé, N. M., has been embarrassed somewhat during the year to obtain scholars, but its work has been quite successful.

8. ALASKA MISSION.—This mission, just planted at Point Prince of Wales, Alaska, aims to co-operate with other religious bodies in the evangelization of this distant and rude people. The two missionaries have reached their destination, and find an unexpectedly cordial welcome from the people. The mission house is erected.

Out-Stations.

These out-stations scattered over the great Sioux Reservation in North and South Dakota constitute one of the most interesting and promising features of our work among the Indians. They are located in the Indian villages, and are in charge of native workers who have been educated in our Normal Training School at Santee. The mission building is generally made of logs and has two or three rooms, costing from four hundred to five hundred dollars, and becomes a pattern for all the homes around. The missionary spends his mornings in school and Bible work with the children; his afternoons in showing the men how to plant their seeds, make their hay and take the first steps towards the civilization that is ahead of them. His wife, in the meantime, goes out into the families of the village, giving instruction in household duties. Some of her afternoons are spent in gathering the mothers into the mission house; one day to aid them to make clothes for their children, another day for a mothers' prayer meeting; again it may be to give instruction in the care of infants. Five of these out-stations have been established within the past two years by gifts from friends assembled at Mr. Moody's missionary meeting in Northfield, Mass. From these little villages, we gather into our boarding, industrial, normal and theological schools at the central stations, the children of these native homes, from which they return to their villages as teachers, missionaries, farmers, blacksmiths, carpenters, shoemakers; and the girls, thoroughly equipped in the different branches of house and home work.

During the year, the missionaries of the Association have organized among these Indians three new churches; one at Standing Rock, one on Bad River and another on White River. One church building has been erected and one school building.

Never before in the history of the Association has there been the progress in its Indian missions that the last year reports, and never before have the opportunities for enlargement and the call for help, been as great.

THE CHINESE.

In our Chinese work we report eighteen schools, two more than last year, and a new chapel has been dedicated at Riverside, Cal. Our Chinese mission buildings are plain frame structures, with a school-room used for religious meetings, kept in a neat condition and ornamented with Chinese bric-a-brac; they have also living rooms attached to accommodate a few of the members when sick or out of a situation. The pupils are all young men. The Bible is a prominent text-book, and the schooling is in order to Christianize the scholars. Every session is closed with a distinctively religious service. The Chinese pupils themselves are very liberal in the support of the mission, and in taking up work for their native land. In connection with a mission which the Association of Christian Chinese is supporting in Hong Kong, they have already built a chapel in which is held daily preaching; they have opened several free schools. One Christian Chinaman assumes the salary of a Christian Chinese physician who has been educated to the American practice, and another Chinaman pays for the medicine to be used by him, and this physician goes along with the preaching evangelist who is sustained by the Central Committee. The amount raised last year by their Association for the work in California and in China is $2,500.

WOMAN'S BUREAU.

The particulars which relate to the work of the Woman's Bureau will be given in a special report of its Secretary. We simply call attention to the fact that a large proportion of our missionary work is being done by Christian women. Well did Secretary Hiatt say: "The history of this Association is a grand and splendid eulogy of woman." Our sisters who went South while the sky was yet heavy with the clouds of war, from homes of refinement and religion, are many of them remaining until now, and they are constantly re-enforced from our best institutions of learning in the East and in the West.

Last year we reported twenty-six Woman's State Organizations, which were so constituted that they could aid their sisters engaged in this missionary work. We now are able to report thirty-two, from twenty of which we have received money contributions this year.

The Woman's Bureau was organized to give counsel, help and courage to the women teachers in the field, and to communicate the missionary news and inspiration from the field to the women of the State organizations. The Woman's Bureau, thus in correspondence with the earnest workers in the mission churches and schools, passes on helpful suggestions to the workers in the State organizations. Every year demonstrates the usefulness of this feature of our missionary work.

FINANCES.

We are devoutly thankful to report that our receipts for the year have been $408,038.97, an increase of $31,822.09 over last year, and the largest in the history of the Association. The American Missionary Association is still young. We are in the fifth decade of its history, and we celebrate to-day its forty-fourth anniversary. Our current receipts in its forty-first year (1886-7) were $306,761.31 ; in its forty-second year were $320,953 42 ; in its forty-third were $376,216.88, and in its forty-fourth year just closed, $408,038.97. These figures do not include the income received from the Daniel Hand Fund.

All the obligations of the Association are paid, and we have in hand a balance of $2,089.24 at the opening of this new year. Faith in God is our strength, as we review the past and face the future. This Missionary Association, with its feeble beginning and brief history, now finds its work growing rapidly on every hand. Relatively few of the multitudes have as yet learned the way of salvation ; many are waiting to be led into a true life.

The current receipts for the year have been	$408,038.97
Which with the balance in hand at the close of the year	4,471.67
Makes a total of	412,510.64
The expenditures have been	410,421.40
Leaving a balance on hand of	2,089.24

OUTLOOK.

The year of such marked growth and responsibility has called for increased force in the administrative department, and in the field work. In obedience to the request of our last Annual Meeting, the Executive Committee appointed as Corresponding Secretary, Rev. Frank P. Woodbury, D.D., of Minneapolis, Minn. Dr. Woodbury came to the office in April, and in the zeal and ability which characterize his service, has given assurance that our needs in this direction have been adequately met.

Rev. R. C. Hitchcock, for several years President of Straight University, New Orleans, has been elected Field Superintendent in the place of Rev. Frank E. Jenkins, who has re-entered the church work in Alabama as pastor. On the field, the assignment of Rev. L. E. Tupper to the duties of General Missionary in the Mountain work, with Rev. G. S. Pope, gives assurance of vigorous prosecution of the church work in their fields. The Rev. A. W. Curtis is acting as General Missionary for North Carolina ; the Rev. C. H. Crawford as General Missionary for Louisiana and Texas. Arrangements have been made for a similar supervision in other States, with the purpose of giving new vigor to our church work.

The removal of our office from 56 Reade Street to the Bible House has given us more commodious rooms, and has added greatly to the facilities of our office work.

Thus re-enforced—without debt to burden our treasury—and with confidence in the ability and willingness of our constituency to sustain this great work, and with reliance upon the good hand of God, which has been signally with us in all the past years, we enter upon the work of the new year with alacrity and courage. It is said that the sun never sees the dark side of anything. The light which has come to us from many sources, and that which we have been able to bear to those who are in darkness, makes us hopeful. The outlook is one of expectation.

OBITUARY.

General Clinton B. Fisk.—The death of General Fisk takes from earth a man with a warm heart, wide sympathies, and of great and varied usefulness. His zeal and untiring activity as a Christian worker, would require a volume. Our limited pages compel us to confine our notice to his more immediate relations to this Association and its work.

In 1866, he was placed in charge as Assistant Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, with headquarters at Nashville. His administration was so marked by mingled kindness and firmness as to secure the confidence of both whites and blacks. He took special interest in the education of the colored children, and when the American Missionary Association and the Western Freedmen's Aid Society advanced the money to buy the land in Nashville, Gen. Fisk secured the Government Hospital buildings located on it for the use of the school. It was soon crowded with nearly a thousand pupils, and the fostering care of Gen. Fisk was recognized by giving his name to it. He has always shown a warm sympathy for the work of the American Missionary Association, and in 1868 he was elected one of its Vice-Presidents. In 1875 he accepted a place on its Executive Committee and has made it a matter of conscience to attend its meetings and aid in its deliberations.

Rev. W. W. Patton, D.D., LL.D.—The sudden and unexpected death of Dr. Patton takes away a man who has made a shining mark in the various relations of pastor, secretary, editor and president of a university.

He was one of the few men present at the formation of the American Missionary Association in Albany in 1846, encountering the obloquy and ostracism which were then attached to those who favored the new movement. In 1868 he became the Western Corresponding Secretary of the Association in Chicago, and held this position for about two years. In 1877 he accepted the Presidency of Howard University in Washington, D. C., the theological department of which is under the care of the Association, and in which Dr. Patton was a teacher. Thus, from the founding of the Association till the time of his death, Dr. Patton had been connected with it, sometimes officially, and always with deep sympathy and earnest co-operation.

MRS. JANE TWICHELL WARE.—Mrs. Ware entered the service among the Freedmen in the autumn of 1865, and in Norfolk, Va., Charleston, S. C., and Atlanta, Ga., cast the radiance of her bright countenance and cheerful spirits over her serious and most successful work.

In 1869, the year in which the Atlanta University was founded, she was united in marriage to Rev. E. A. Ware, its President, and they with others gave the moulding touch to the University. In 1885 her husband died suddenly, and from that time she was left to face alone a serious pulmonary trouble, until at length, in the home of her brother, Rev. Jos. H. Twichell, of Hartford, she passed away February 17, 1890, in the forty-sixth year of her age.

ELIZABETH WINYAN.—After a brief, but severe illness, this native Christian missionary died. Her life was an eventful and useful one. Elizabeth was the name given her by the missionaries. Winyan was her Indian name. She was born near Mankato, Minnesota, in 1831. At the age of twenty-five she became one of the early converts under Drs. Williamson and Riggs. She came to live at the mission, and learned to sew and do all household work. She was a faithful friend. This fidelity she proved during the Indian uprising in 1862. When the mission families were fleeing from their burning houses at midnight, they forgot to take any food along. While they were hiding on an island in the Minnesota River, she, at the risk of her own life, carried to them bread and meat. At the time of her death she was in charge of an out-station on the Cheyenne River, forty miles from the central mission.

E. A. GRAVES, ESQ.—He was an earnest friend of the Negro as a slave and as a freeman. Mr. Graves was a member of our Executive Committee from 1876 to 1879. Failing health compelled his resignation and during the year he has passed to his reward.

REV. ELI TAPLEY, pastor of four of our churches in Mississippi, died March 2, in Lowndes County. He was born in the same County and State in 1839. In 1881 he began labors under the American Missionary Association, which he continued until his death.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

REPORT OF SECRETARY.

Is an Annual Report the same old story? By no means. It may speak along familiar lines, and mention names that have become as household words in missionary walks and talks, but there has been a new year, which has started a whole train of new influences, and the story is of new-born souls, of new mental awakening, of new hope in lives aroused to the worth of living, and of thanksgiving anew for what God hath wrought.

Many different agencies have entered into the success which we are permitted to record, and not the least of these is the steadily increasing aid from our Woman's State Missionary Organizations, from Young People's Societies of every name, and special personal gifts, which have carried to the mission field not only the means of usefulness which the money affords, but the prayers that have strengthened the busy workers, and have warmed their hearts with the comfort of being remembered. It is with sincere thanksgiving that we note the missionary zeal, and larger sense of responsibility on the part of Christian women toward the work of the American Missionary Association.

As to this work, words are but a feeble medium by which to convey an adequate understanding of the change that has been wrought in thousands of young lives, which we have been permitted to touch with the healing of education and of the gospel. We can only open the leaves of our field-book for a brief extract here and there, or a rapid scanning of the pages, to show especially the part that women have had in the schools and churches of this Association.

Fisk, Talladega, Tougaloo, Straight and Austin are familiar names of chartered institutions of higher education, and in them we see men and women working side by side, each instructing along his own lines in the prescribed curriculum of study, but there is much to be done for the two thousand girls and boys in these five schools, and woman must do her part in winning and directing them into right paths. How diligently she seeks to supply the deficiencies resulting from lack of early training; how well and wisely these young people are mothered in their school home; how faithfully the principles of Christian living are instilled, and watched through all the routine of study, reading, the various meetings, the social intercourse, as also in the daily household work of washing and ironing, baking, sweeping and dusting. And it is often in the homely household pursuits that the watching first discerns the hopeful signs of character-growth, when, with an old broom but live conscience, the nooks and corners of the big buildings are made clean by some girl who has learned that

"Who sweeps a room as to His laws, Makes that and the action fine."

Then, as the living principles take root, the brain grows clearer, and other cobwebs disappear. Grand work indeed is this, which seeks to supply the lack of mental, moral, physical and industrial training to a people, whose eight millions and increasing numbers are an indication of the power they are surely to have among us for good or for evil, according to the influences brought to bear upon them now.

But what of other familiar names of schools less conspicuous, but full of meaning to those who are working in them, and to you who are working for them—schools not only among the blacks in the South, but located in the mountains where they are accessible to two or more millions of our own race, who by stress of circumstances have been debarred the privileges of Christian education accorded to us, and schools also among the Indians, where it is our privilege to give the first glad tidings of the redeeming love of the true and living God? In Beach and Warner Institutes, McIntosh and Williamsburg Academies, Santee, Macon, Athens and Thomasville schools, with many others whose names are found on our list of educational work, we see the evidence of woman's work and influence. There has been steady improvement in industrial training. In the one industry of sewing, not less than four thousand girls have been under systematic instruction, ranging from all kinds of darning and patching to the art of dressmaking. In our Le Moyne School at Memphis, Tenn., during the past year there were in charge of one teacher two hundred and seventy-five pupils in sewing classes, twenty-five in household economy, and ten in care of the sick. Over one hundred garments were cut and made; every young woman in the cooking class took home a loaf of bread made throughout with her own hands, a useful and needed object-lesson to the home friends. And the record of industrial work in many other schools is equally good. In all the boarding schools, the girls have been taught the art of housekeeping, and in some they have done the entire work of the household with the exception of one hired cook, the size of the families ranging from fifty to two hundred and fifty.

But our missionary teachers have been very busy, not only with their schools, but with their Sunday-schools, Missionary Meetings, Bible Readings, Temperance Bands, King's Daughters, Christian Endeavor Societies, Social Purity, and Bands of Mercy, not to mention their rounds among the people for the hymn or prayer by the bedside of the sick, and the kindly talk to mothers, whose chance to improve has come to them so late in life. Much good has resulted from bringing the young people into Bands of King's Daughters and Christian Endeavor Societies. They are learning the motive power that puts Christ-likeness into the daily conduct.

And this has all been inwrought with the practical work of education through all the course of common English, and even higher branches of study. In every direction, whether among the Chinese, the Indians or in the South, do we see evidence of faithful Christian work. We are able to record many instances where boys and girls, who came into school last fall, not only thoughtless, but daringly wicked, went out earnest, working Christians to influence others Godward.

Indeed the crowning glory of every year's work is the souls that are won for Christ. Every school has had its blessing, and that you may see more clearly the pages of our book, I quote from the messages sent us from one mission station where is a day school for both boys and girls with a boarding department for about fifty girls. The reports came thus:

January. Our days are filled with gladness, our nights with song, and our hearts with rejoicing. One of the girls in passing into meeting last night brought this request on paper: "Will you pray for me that my sins may be forgiven? I am in great distress for my sins. Can you give me any comfort?"

February. Three of our girls have found Christ and six or seven others are anxious about their souls. We are looking for a still greater work of grace.

March. Few special meetings have been held except by twos and threes, but many of the girls have come quietly and clearly into the light. Now all but six of the boarding girls are professing Christians.

April. There are only three now that are out of the Ark of Safety.

May. Of our fifty boarding girls enrolled during the year, all but two are now Christians.

Thus the evidence of God's blessing upon our work stimulates us to greater activity. The returns are encouraging. They are right in kind. The work pays.

Many of these boys and girls spend their vacations in teaching, and in addition to their school work, conduct Sunday-schools, and in various ways, with opportunities such as only student teachers have, they do good in the out-of-the-way places which are beyond our direct influence. We can never know how widely our Christian girls and boys carry into the cabins on the plantations and the tepees of the reservation, a knowledge of a new and better life. We know that wherever they have gone out, very many from the highways and hedges follow them back to the missionary school, willing to work or do anything, if only they may have its advantages.

And many of these schools are wholly in the hands of women with liberal education and warm Christian hearts, who upon entering this field

6. Beach Institute, Savannah, Ga.

Instructors.—Mr. A. N. Niles, East-Hampton, Ct.; Mrs. A. N. Niles, East-Hampton, Ct.; Miss E. H. Twitchell, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.; Miss C. R. Bent, Newburyport, Mass.; Miss A. W. Johnson, North-Brookfield, Mass.; Miss J. S. Hardy, Shelburne, Mass.; Miss L. P. Auld, East-Boston, Mass.; Miss H. Russell, Washington, D. C.; Miss Anna D. Ludlow, Oswego, N. Y.; Miss M. E. L. Edson, Woodstock, Vt.; Miss Ellen M. Horton, Barrington, R. I.; Miss Carrie L. Smith, Oxford, Ct.

Value of school property, $12,000; number of pupils, 731; number in Sabbath-school, 145.

Superintendent Niles, speaking of the year's labor, says:

"Of the higher interests of the Beach Institute no formal account has yet been rendered. Each teacher has in the heart a private record of which she need not be ashamed, though deeply regretting that it does not contain more of actual success. Of the teachers it may justly be said that they have labored zealously for the intellectual improvement of their pupils, seeking daily to awaken and expand their minds, and to increase their stores of knowledge. Were the results equal to the desires and efforts put forth, great would be the gladness of the workers, and they do rejoice, though not abundantly. Many have learned much, many dull minds have been brightened.

"In addition to the regular work of instruction, there are other departments of labor appertaining to the Institute which deserve favorable mention. The music has been under the charge of a lady whose zeal and strength have been employed to the utmost in giving lessons upon the organ and in singing. At times more pupils have offered themselves than could be received. Nearly all have made commendable progress, and some have been remarkable in proficiency. At one of our public exhibitions, when two reporters from the city dailies were present in official capacity—an honor never before conferred upon us—several of the performers in music, as well as others in oratory, were mentioned with special praise. The missionary work has been under the care of one well adapted to it by unfailing energy, and sympathy and love for her labor. Her duty has been to visit the sick and poor, and to do them all the good in her power, both spiritual and physical.

"An average attendance of nearly one hundred and fifty have gladly and intelligently received the Word in the Sabbath-school.

"The world moves. The leaven is working. Place good men and true at the 'kneading troughs,' and adopting the sentiment of our worthy Brother Smith in the last Missionary, 'keep them there'—convince the thoughtful men of the South, by stability, by earnestness, by patience, by forbearance, by gentleness, by long-suffering, if need be, that our designs are not carnal or hostile to their interests, that we mean simply that the blacks shall have a fair show in the struggle for a higher development and civilization, and their hearty coöperation is assured, and not a great way off.

"The great work of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION in the South still demands ardent and unfaltering interest and effort, not only from those actually engaged in it, but from all who care for it everywhere.

"So vast is the undertaking that it seems but just begun. Thousands are yet in the depths of ignorance. There is a necessity for a new standard of giving and doing."

7. Storrs School, Atlanta, Ga.

Instructors.—Miss M. L. Farwell, Westfield, N. Y.; Miss Amy Williams, Livonia Station, N. Y.; Miss Ellen Walcott, Natick, Mass.; Miss Lizzie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, Ohio; Miss H. H. Grosvenor, West-Woodstock, Ct.; Miss E. E. Barnard, Benzonia, Mich.

Value of school property, $10,000; number of pupils, 434.

In January last, the city of Atlanta opened free public schools. Three large, airy, and well-furnished buildings had been erected for the accommodation of the white children of the city, and the school authorities had arranged with the Association to have the Storrs School, and with the Freedmen's Aid Society of the M. E. Church to have the Summer Hill School, become free schools for colored children. Under the wise and efficient management of Prof. B. Mallon, Superintendent of Public Instruction, the system of free schools was made, for the whites, a marvelous success. Nearly all the white children of the city were provided with accommodations, and the schools became popular, and were enthusiastically patronized by all classes of the people. The two schools for colored children were sufficient for the accommodation of but a very small portion of the children of the city, but becoming free schools, the city may be said to have begun heartily the work of educating all her children, and it is hoped that as soon as the finances will admit, equally as good building and school facilities will be provided for colored as are now provided for the white children.

8. Emerson Institute, Mobile, Ala.

Instructors.—Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ogle Co., Ill.; Mrs. K. A. Cooke, Newburyport, Mass.

Value of school property, $20,000; number of pupils, 135; number of Sabbath-school scholars, 145.

Before it was settled that no basis of coöperation with the school authorities of Mobile could be agreed upon, the burning of Chicago made it evident that there must be a falling off in the current receipts of the year. It therefore seemed best to put but two teachers in Emerson Institute, instead of a full corps, as this was the only school for which definite contracts with teachers had not been made.

So at this point our plans were not carried out, and the invested capital was not fully used.

9. Swayne School, Montgomery, Ala.

Instructors.—Mr. J. M. McPherson, Tabor, Iowa; Miss Eliza C. Ayer, Lockport, N. Y.; Miss Savira Wright, Clinton, Mass.; Miss Ada Clapp, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss C. A. Benton, New-Haven, Ct.; Miss M. E. Burt, Geneva, Wis.; Miss E. Wheeler, Worcester, Mass.

Value of school property, $15,000; number of pupils, 612; number in Sabbath-school, 150; number in Mission Sabbath-school, 150.

The coöperation of the school authorities and the Association in conducting Swayne School continues, to the benefit and satisfaction of all concerned. Superintendent McPherson says:

"The attendance and punctuality in most of the rooms has been greatly
Some of the scholars in the higher grades have not their time at their disp have found themselves face to face with a superstition and ignorance that they had not conceived as existing in this land, and which to overcome demands their best resources.

The magnitude of the work in the millions to be reached, the counter forces at work—forces of evil—to win these very people, make our day of opportunity seem very short, and tense with responsibility.

Our Report shows you what Christian work will do, supported as it must needs be by your money and your prayers. The American Missionary Association has reached in its schools thirteen thousand youth during the past year, and many lives will be brighter, and many homes purer for what has been done, but not until there are good fathers and mothers can we hope for permanent improvement; only through good mothers can the purity of the homes be attained and preserved. Then by all the tender memories of our Christian homes and honored parents, by all that we should render to our God for such blessings to ourselves, let us redouble our efforts, that each generation may make a better record for pure homes, for good citizenship, for the Christian Church, yes, even until of these mothers it shall be said, "Their children rise up and call them blessed."

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF OUR CHINESE MISSIONS.

BY REV. W. C. POND, D.D.

The Statistics:—Sixteen missions were sustained with eighteen schools during a part or whole of the year. Except Fresno Mission, all were maintained the full twelve months. This was begun in January and has been from the first one of our most interesting and successful missions. The aggregate number of pupils enrolled in our schools is 1,310, but this is far from representing the whole number reached with some gospel message or brought to some extent under Christian influences. On the other hand, let it not be supposed that we have so large a number as that in our schools throughout the year. They come and go—a procession rather than a congregation. The aggregate average membership, month by month, was 498.

Though the year has not been marked by any special harvest season, the number of those who have for the first time professed faith in Christ, by uniting with the Congregational Association of Christian Chinese, is 59, making a total since our work began of not less than 800.

The expenses have reached an aggregate of $12,044.00. Of this amount $3,381.40 were contributed in California and $1,731.60 by the missions themselves. The total of the offerings of our Chinese brethren for Christian work amounts to $4,000.

The Missions:—I can scarcely see how to compress into the space allowed even a glimpse of each of these, but I shall try to do it. At the head of the list stands Fresno, youngest of them. When in November, 1889, the Superintendent visited that growing city, its Chinatown was quite as busy and as booming as any other district. Its low brick buildings suggested to him bee-hives with the bees swarming. His heart was stirred within him and he determined that some effort should be made by us to gather out of those bustling crowds whatever souls could be induced to listen to and receive the Word. Many were the obstacles and delays, but at last in January, Miss Jessie S. Worley, for so many years the skillful, devoted and successful principal of our Central School in San Francisco, with Loo Quong as her helper, commenced work. They found a welcome among the Chinese far more cordial and more general than we had dared to expect. Christian people in the city also lent a helping hand, and though Miss Worley has returned to San Francisco and Loo Quong has gone to China, the work abides, and no less than fifteen Chinese up to September 1st, had avowed themselves to be believers in Jesus, and banded for Christian work in an Association. Three of these have been baptized.

Los Angeles which was for a year or more one of our choice spots, to which the heart turned for relief when discouraged, has been, mainly through interference from without, troubled and torn by debate and divisions. But peace was restored before the year's end, and though the work has not yet renewed its former vigor, it, nevertheless, gives ground for hope that the present year will be much brighter and happier than the last.

Marysville Mission was in former years a source of perpetual cheer. The little church into which its brethren were gathered was an inspiration because of its zeal and faithfulness and liberality. It was certainly, in one year of its history, the banner church of the whole country for its offering to foreign missions. But the brethren have scattered. Some of the pillars returned to China; some removed to various portions of our own country. Only one was left, a sturdy, steadfast deacon, with some of the faults and many of the virtues which tradition in New England has associated with that word. A great giver he was and will be yet again, but now he, too, has gone to China, and there is not one left. We were almost on the point of abandoning the field, but new hope has dawned and we will "try a little longer."

Passing Oakland and the home it has in the new building erected for it, and Oroville recently presented in picture to our readers, and Petaluma where, out of a little company of pupils four have been hopefully converted, and Riverside with its new home, its eleven gathered into the Association and four baptized, and Sacramento where the same good worker does the same good work year after year and God adds his blessing, so that seven were added to the Lord, we trust, and San Diego, which has had a year of greater peace and undiminished prosperity since our Presbyterian brethren planted their mission side by side with ours, we come in alphabetic order to San Francisco with its Central Mission at the headquarters of all our work, and the two branch missions—the Barnes and the West, located about two miles each from the Central and a like distance from each other. These two occupy buildings which belong to the mission, and in the case of one of them the property pays nearly the entire expense of the school. The Central has always been by far the largest of our schools, and almost always the largest of all the schools of any denomination in the State. Its quarters, held at a rental of $900 per annum, are far from prepossessing in appearance, farther still from being suitable for the uses to which they are put, but they are admirably located, and because we could do no better, we have occupied them now for seventeen years. Many a prayer has been going up from the hearts of our brethren that ampler and more suitable accommodations might be provided (not rented, but owned) and having faith in prayer they have begun the accummulation of a fund for this purpose, but meanwhile the work goes busily on with a class for children, a temperance society, a missionary society, a Sunday-school, a share in a regular street-preaching service, a weekly meeting for the training of helpers, as well as the evening school of from 100 to 140 members.

My space is exhausted and I must forbear to speak of Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Stockton and Ventura, at all of which points lights and shadows mingle with each other, but the lights sufficiently predominate to keep the workers enthusiastic and to make me thank God and take courage.

so have been somewhat irregular. I think most of them have made commendable progress in their studies.

"They have certainly made great improvement in their deportment, inasmuch as at the first of the year we hardly got through a recess without one or more fights among the scholars, and now it is a rare thing to hear of a fight at all. It took a great deal of work, but I think it has paid.

"There has been a great deal of interest among the scholars on the subject of the soul's salvation. It has been manifest in the weekly school prayer-meetings."

10. Lincoln School, Marion, Ala.

Instructors.—Mr. T. C. Steward, Marion, Ala.; Mrs. A. B. Ackley, Granville, Ohio; Miss S. A. Cooley, Bavaria, Kan.; Miss H. M. Leonard, New-Bedford, Mass.; Miss M. E. Bridgeman, Pawtucket, R. I.

Value of school property, $5000; number of pupils, 300; number in Sabbath-school, 72.

So much space has been given to the report of the religious work at Marion, that we take room here simply to say that the schools were successful and satisfactory in results. Here, as generally, the payments by the State to the teachers was in "scrip," which could be sold only at a heavy discount. This caused an increased expense to our treasury, and through the State has caused suffering and loss to teachers of public schools.

11. Trinity School, Athens, Ala.

Instructors.—Miss M. F. Wells, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Miss Jennie Stevenson, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Value of school property, $3000; number of pupils, 163; number in Sabbath-school, 175; number in Mission Sabbath-school, 415.

We quote from Miss Wells's report:

"This year has been a brief and busy one, and the results very encouraging.

"In February a Model school was organized, which has been taught very successfully by students of the Normal.

"The importance of this branch of our work can not be over-estimated. The constant and ever-increasing demand for teachers—the urgent appeals for help that come to us from all quarters, remind us continually of the great need of qualified colored teachers. We are making them as rapidly as circumstances will permit, but the 'harvest truly is plenteous, and the laborers are few.'

"Several of our students have already opened schools in the country; others go as soon as examination is over. They will teach till the opening of our school in the fall, or perhaps till Christmas, when they will return to resume their studies with us till another summer.

"Wherever a day-school is taught by one of our students, a Sunday-school is immediately established; and so the good seed is being scattered, and rays from our little rush-light in Athens are penetrating a multitude of dark places; the rudiments of an enlightened Christianity are being carried to the lowly ones, who thirst for a better way, a purer life than that to which they have been trained by men as ignorant as themselves.

"Our Sunday-school is large, and there is much religious interest.

"Our little church is holding on its way—'few but undismayed.' There has been an addition of one member this year.

"A goodly number of our most promising students seem almost persuaded to be Christians, still they do not publicly profess faith in Christ.

"We work, and watch, and pray for an ingathering of precious souls."

(One month later.) "Our examination was even more brilliant than usual, though none of our Northern friends were here to rejoice with us in the success, so heartily acknowledged by Southern men.

"Well, we thank God, and take courage. Nearly all the schools in the county are now supplied with teachers from Trinity school. As many of them commenced their schools before the close of ours, we had the closing day of our examinations on Saturday, when all our students who had gone out to teach came in, and were examined on the studies of the year. It would have done your heart good to look upon this noble band of young men and women, and listen to the clear and correct answers, so earnestly and joyfully given to all questions that were put to them. They acquitted themselves in a manner that would do credit to a similar class in any school, and not even those who have been most bitter in their opposition to the education of these people showed any disposition to cavil. On the contrary, they frankly and cordially expressed their delight at what they saw and heard."

12. Burrell School, Selma, Ala.

Instructors.—Mr. H. W. Carter, Tallmadge, Ohio; Mrs. M. J. Mead, Hillsdale, Mich.; Miss Lucia A. Darling, Akron, Ohio; Miss Anna Haylor, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss Lizzie L. Alvord, Austinburg, Ohio; Miss Lucy M. Fay, Prairie Depot, Ohio; Miss Mary A. Carter, Tallmadge, Ohio; Miss Sarah L. Emerson, Hallowell, Me.; Miss Mary P. Stewart, Barnard, Vt.

Value of school property, $7000; number of pupils, 500; number in Sabbath-school, 150; in Mission Sabbath-school, 50.

Superintendent Carter reports as follows:

"The pupils of the Burrell school have made gratifying progress in their studies during the past year. Although the letters of the grades remain the same as last year, we feel that a year's advancement has been made. It has been the aim to impart knowledge which should be practically exact and suggestive. To this end frequent reviews and examinations have occurred throughout the year. Monthly written examinations have been introduced into the higher department, with gratifying results. The oral examinations during the last week of the term were especially satisfactory. Two leading members of the 'City Board of Education,' who attended a part of these, expressed themselves as very much pleased with the proficiency exhibited.

"A literary society was organized last January, and has been of advantage and interest to the members of the advanced grades of the school.

"In the government of the school, it has been the aim to appeal more and more to the pupils' sense of honor and responsibility. Although this 'sense' has not been developed to its utmost capacity, still we feel that advancement has been made in this direction.

"Among the most important and valuable results accomplished at this station, have been the conversion of several members of the school, and the formation of the 'First Congregational Church of Selma.' We feel that we have good working-material in the church, and we hope that by faithful Christian labor this little church will grow to be a great power in cultivating the broad field open to our work here. There are few places at the South where there is better feeling toward the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION'S work than at Selma. As a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, I have been treated with very great cordiality. My business relations could not have been more agreeable. The teachers have all been treated with the utmost respect. I am frequently assured by leading Southerners of their hearty sympathy and good wishes for our work. We feel that prejudices are fast breaking down, and that a liberal [illegible] rapidly extending.

BRIEF HISTORY.

The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846, its distinctive characteristic being freedom from all complicity with slavery and caste.

The object as stated in its constitution is, "To conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort."

It began its work in Foreign Missions in Africa, Siam, Sandwich Islands, West Indies; and its work in our own country, in the Western States and among the Indians.

In 1848, it began work in the South among whites and blacks, although attended with great opposition and danger.

In 1852, it undertook to reach the Chinese in California, the plans ripening in 1870 to successful work.

In 1861, during the civil war, it began the enlargement of work in the South, which has been marked by steady progress and success.

In 1882, it transferred its Foreign Missions and enlarged its Indian work by receiving the Indian Missions of the American Board.

The work of the American Missionary Association is, therefore, at present among the Chinese in California, the North American Indians and the needy classes of our Southern States.

SERMON.

By Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, D.D.

Let me ask your attention, to-night, to the sixth verse of the fifth chapter of the first letter of Peter: "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." This is a flash of light from the fiery soul of St. Peter. No one knew as did Peter the power of humility and its revealing strength. No one saw so clearly as did he the baselessness of his pride and the weakness of its hold. Looking upon that cross from which he had fled with others, and beholding, also at this late date, the tomb where his faith had had its rise, he saw now how a humility very different from that sort of spiritual self-conceit which had infested him in other days, might supply for him and for all Christians a promise under God such as without it no human soul has. Clearly did he see, in the light of the cross, his new aspiration flowering into a certain accomplishment. His own soul now never dreamed of actualizing its vision, without humbling itself under the mighty hand of God. Hitherto his soul had oftentimes dreamed of working its way out through its own fiery purposes to great ends. That cross from which he fled had been succeeded by that open tomb, at which he found the power of his crucified Lord. The very cross itself taught him such a lesson of humility and its power in the world, as to give him an entirely new valuation for his own pride in the past, and to show him the possibilities of Christianity, and the powers which were lodged in the hands of men under God; and he knew from his own experience, and from the very nature of the cross of Christ, that their strength, aye, their victory, lay in being humbled in the mighty hand of God, that in due time the soul might have its exaltation and triumph.

Let us to-night agree that the nation is only an aggregation of human souls, with problems like unto that of Peter; that the church of God is only that great gathering of human spirits with God's ideal and his hope and his inspiration. Let us believe that, therefore, the problems which come to the church and the nation which we love are the same problems which came to the soul of this fiery man, who, in this hour of deeper spiritual life, saw the need of bowing submissively under a purpose far more grand than his best dream, far more comprehensive than his finest vision, sure to be accomplished because of the power of the omnipotent Jehovah, because of the inspiration of the Holy Spirit which God himself had promised for the outworking of that purpose.

And we can hardly to-night, in this presence and in this place, speak of the nation and the church together, without remembering that we are in the midst of such historic associations as bind that commonwealth of Israel in which we stand to the commonwealth which we look so earnestly upon, and for which we pray so lovingly in our political life—two vast agents for the accomplishment of all human dreams here below. To-night the flag is bound round this pulpit. Where but in Northampton, with memories such as sweep into that word, might the American flag so fitly be wound about that emblem of the preaching power of the gospel of Jesus Christ! The very word Northampton brings back to our minds the heroic days of young Congregationalism. Again we see the Cavaliers and the Roundheads, one party with their banners fluttering at Nottingham, the other with their banners in the sky reflecting the very sunbeams above old Northampton in England. We are in Hampshire County, and we remember how from old Hampshire in England there came forth those men with our fathers' faith, with our fathers' sign, a church without a bishop and a State without a King, up to the King of England, to demand from that throne a realization of the great fact that every government on earth owes something of loyalty to those whom it governs. We are in the county named after John Hampden, identified as he was with that early movement out of which came the Mayflower, from which sprang into existence that compact by which Puritanism became endowed with all its finer characteristics to accomplish what never even under Oliver Cromwell, might have been accomplished in old England. Again to-night we can hear Hampden refuse to pay the ship money. Again to-night we stand in the presence of Sir Walter Raleigh, sacrificed by the King to the rapacity of Spain and the party of the Jesuits. But standing under the scaffold is John Eliot. Again we follow John Eliot to the Tower, carrying in his heart the principles that have made New England Congregationalism lift up its banner in behalf of all the inspired thoughts of our American ideal. Again, when John Eliot falls, we can see him put into the hands of John Hampden his boys. Again we come to Parliament, and sit with John Hampden by the side of an earnest, half clownish man, who held within himself the very genius of this religious and political movement, Oliver Cromwell, and again we feel what it means to look toward a throne with notions which have identified themselves with our Congregational polity everywhere, and to refuse all sorts of government, ecclesiastical or political, that might in the slightest infringe upon the greatness of the individual, and the power of the Holy Ghost with the personal human soul.

This is historic territory. Here we may well be proud of our church and proud of our nation. From this point, we see striking toward yonder South the ideas of Puritanism, and from the South yonder we see coming toward the North in battle array the old conceptions of the Cavaliers. And when at last the Cavalier and the Puritan met in 1865, it was precisely the victory which was won at Naseby and Marston Moor, that was more lately won on this new soil. The nation is in our thoughts, and the church, as they were in Cromwell's thoughts in that time. Together they are to-night. Bound by all their memories and their hopes, they are together in our thoughts and in our prayers. No other denomination of Christians in America has such pride, no other denomination of Christians in America has such responsibility. In the one hundred and fifty years between the time of Cromwell looking to America and the anxiety of Cromwell and his compatriots about the fate of the Great Remonstrance, and the days of 1775 and 1776, when our fathers here this side the sea saw the problem which involved the future of an American commonwealth, there have been striking into our land some of the very forces which create the problem of to-day. Into Massachusetts in the North had come the Puritan, severe, earnest, dignified, religious, bigoted. Far in the South yonder had come the Huguenot with his delicacy, his brilliant imagination, his poetic, chivalrous heart. Yonder on Manhattan Island had settled the Dutchman. All of them had memories. The Huguenot had come from a land which had felt the power of the Catholic hierarchy till he bled and cried for liberty and for hope. The Puritan in England had known the stealthy advance of the Jesuit, until at last the throne of James the First and Charles the First had set themselves in opposition to every noble human hope. The Dutchman in Holland had listened to the words of William of Orange, as he said, "Let us level the dykes, let us give Holland back to the sea, but this land must not be ruled by any foreign power." The Scotch-Irishman, full of memories of John Knox and Jenny Geddes, had imperial importance in New Jersey and Delaware, and into Delaware had come the Swede full of memories of Gustavus. Great and strong had been the movement also in England of the Cavalier, who, coming into Virginia and Kentucky, had not forgotten the plume that waved above the brow of his puissant prince. The follower of George Fox and William Penn was in Pennsylvania. And when 1775 had come, so great, so pervasive was the victory of the Pilgrims over all these powers, so thoroughly had the Pilgrim fire touched every one of these agencies, that a cavalier's son, George Washington, holding in his blood memories of Buckingham and Charles the First, unsheathed his sword at Cambridge, in the very atmosphere of Puritanism which had flashed across the sea, and here again Charles the First saw his Cromwell. The old problem had come back, and the banners never rested until Cornwallis had surrendered, and Puritanism had given to this new liberty an American character such as it had never had before.

I have said this much, my friends, because I desire you to feel that this is the problem to-night: Church and State with all their interests intermingled, with all their hopes set on one common object, with all their trust and expectation strengthened by the inspiration of Almighty God. "Humble yourself," is the cry from the great possibilities which come out of the future to meet us at the beginning of another year of work in the

"The Sabbath-school work has been pushed here; and at other points, more than ever, during the past year. The entire work has been prospered and blessed, and we feel that there is great cause for gratitude to him who directs all things."

13. Howard School, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Instructors.—Rev. E. O. Tade, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Miss Carrie M. Blood, Lime, N. H.; Miss M. J. Robinson, Willimantic, Ct.; Miss E. S. Robinson, Willimantic, Ct.

Value of school property, $8000; number of pupils, 368; number of Sabbath-school scholars, 200.

The completion of our substantial brick building enabled the schools, which had been suspended for a year, to be reopened under more favorable circumstances than ever before. The city is moving in the establishment of free schools, and partial coöperation between the school authorities and the Association has begun. The prospect is bright for a more general coöperation. We expect that Chattanooga will soon become one of the foremost cities of the South in her public schools for all classes.

14. Le Moyne Normal and Commercial School, Memphis, Tennessee.

Instructors.—Prof. J. H. Barnum, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. J. H. Barnum, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. H. J. Shepherd, Memphis, Tenn.; Miss Lizzie Tollman, Memphis, Tenn.; Miss E. J. Gould, Fitchburg, Mass.; Miss Mary F. Kelly, Plaistow, N. H.; Miss S. O. Ostrander, Murray, N. Y.; Miss S. W. Maynard, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Mr. E. P. Pierce, Memphis, Tenn.

Value of school property, $15,000; number of pupils, 291; number of Sabbath-school scholars, 75.

The catalogue of this institution affords the following information:

"Dr. F. Julius Le Moyne, of Washington, Pa., having directed in his will that twenty thousand dollars should be paid to the American Missionary Association of New-York, for the establishment of an English school for colored youth at some point in the Southern States, decided, in 1870, that in view of the pressing demand of the colored people for education, he would be a witness to the execution of his own will. He therefore selected Memphis as the place, and directed the Association to draw for the money to build and endow the school.

"The building was erected and the school was opened in October, 1871.

"A Course of Study is adopted for the present, and is designed to furnish the main studies for a course of four years, beginning with those who can read and write, and understand the fundamental rules of arithmetic. Graduates from this course will receive diplomas.

"Model School.—The Model School is the preparatory department of the Normal School, and at the same time furnishes an opportunity for observation and practice for the normal students.

"Apparatus, etc.—An air-pump, an electrical machine, and such other pieces of apparatus as are used to illustrate the mechanical powers, have been ordered and will be received in time for the next term. A fine Hotchkiss striking-clock, with two dials, has just been placed in the tower. The clock is a present from Dr. Le Moyne, the neighbors assisting by subscription to set it up. It is valued at $800.

"Commercial Department.—A separate room and special teacher are provided, so that all the advantages afforded by the best commercial colleges are offered without extra charge.

"Music.—Instruction is given on piano and organ, and good instruments and pleasant rooms for practice are furnished.

"A regular course of instruction in vocal music is given to all normal pupils without extra charge.

"Aims.—As the name indicates, Le Moyne Normal and Commercial School aims to prepare its pupils to be good teachers and citizens, thoroughly fitted for all the business of life. It is open to all who are not too indolent to improve themselves, or too vicious for the company of those who are trying to make themselves better. It regards the doctrines of the Bible as the only proper foundation of any truly valuable course of education, and it heartily unites with all Christian denominations in laboring to secure the beneficial results of liberal Christian education to all men.

"Admission.—During the past year, many applicants have been refused for want of room. Hereafter those will be admitted who apply first and promise to remain throughout the year. Constant and punctual attendance during the whole year will be necessary to secure a good standing and regular advancement in the course."

Professor J. H. Barnum says,

"We have had 115 enrolled in the Normal Department. Our most advanced class numbers 13. They are just completing practical arithmetic, and are now ready to enter the third year of our course. The average age of this class is sixteen years.

"I can clearly see that we shall soon be able to show results very satisfactory to the colored people, and to all the friends of education everywhere. The public sentiment of the white people here is rapidly becoming favorable to our school. Very many Southern men have taken pains to express their sympathy, encouragement, and thanks for the work we are doing here. Five years ago, a daughter of one of our present neighbors reproved her little dog severely for 'following a nigger teacher' a few steps, while now, her younger sister visits our school-room, plays on our piano, and says our school is so nice she 'would not stop much to go to school here' herself.

"There is a large demand for well-qualified teachers. Arkansas and Mississippi look to Memphis for a supply.

"As we look over our school, and as we see the wants of the colored people in the city and country, it is very interesting to think of the vast amount of long-continued and ever-increasing good a little money in the hands of a good man like Dr. Le Moyne, may be made to do. How many will go and do likewise?"

14. Normal School, Lexington, Ky.

Instructors.—Mr. John G. Hamilton, Lexington, Ky.; Miss Flora V. Camp, Chicago, Ill.; Miss F. A. Rosecrans, Oberlin, Ohio; Miss M. E. White, Cincinnati, Ohio; Miss Laura King, Lexington, Ky.

Value of school property, $8000; number of pupils, 280; number of Sabbath-school scholars, 175.

We give an extract from the report of our Superintendent, Mr. J. G. Hamilton:

"The work at Lexington for the past year, though somewhat smaller than in previous years, has been encouraging in its results. The discipline has been good, and the morale of the school satisfactory. Gentlemen in official positions, and prominent teachers who have visited the school during the year, expressed themselves surprised at the proficiency manifested, the methods of instruction, and the general good behavior of the pupils. At the beginning of the year, a successful effort was made to grade the school, systemize

American Missionary Association. "Humble yourselves." These are the words from the voices in the past, that would have us know, in the midst of our national and church pride, that we have no power whatever save the power that lies in the hand of God, shielding us from disasters in the past, and guiding us on to greater hopes and greater achievements in the future. Where is that hand of God? Where shall the weary student of human life look to find this omnipotent power above him, and how shall we be able to-night so to put ourselves under its masterful energies as to feel ourselves henceforward identified with every one of its magnificent purposes?

The hand of God in nature has touched us oftentimes, as we have looked out upon the blue sky and the green earth. But after all, nature's story is a story that needs something more lofty than nature herself. The hand of God in nature is at last seen in that handiwork of God called man, and just as nature at last speaks in the voice of man, and as the hand of God, touching man, and working in man, thoroughly identifies itself with every step of man's onmarching energy, so at last human history finds its consummation in his everlasting strength, and its hope in that one mighty scene where Jesus Christ manifests God, where the hand of heaven reaches down for the salvation of men.

Let us look at that disclosure of this divine hand for a little time to-night, that we may know how fitly to humble ourselves that we may be exalted. For what did that cross stand, for what purpose, for what in the divine determination, for what in the greatness of God's plan, for what in the certainty of the divine victory? I am here to-night because I believe that statesmanship is the art of divining God's purpose, and the art of getting things out of God's way. Evolution or revolution! All revolution is delayed evolution, and all political evolution is simply the outworking of God's purpose which God himself would breathe into nature and into history, and which was manifested on the cross of Christ. If, therefore, I will know what statesmanship is, as from this platform to-night we look out upon the future of our Association and its work, I must realize its understanding of what that divine hand is, and whither those fingers point.

I.—In the first place that divine hand, disclosed upon the cross of Jesus, gives to mankind a new conception of aristocracy. Upon that new conception of aristocracy our own church has stood in fiery times, and upon that new conception of aristocracy all genuine and hopeful Americanism stands to-night. Before the Nazarene had begun his public work, a noble iconoclast appeared in the desert, preaching in the presence of a great problem. It is not wonderful that John the Baptist was eloquent in that vast audience-room which the Almighty had made for him, and it is not wonderful that, having in his blood the reminiscences of a priesthood many centuries old, and having in his own eye the glorious West to which he always looked, he should have been the one to have stated to mankind his true relations to the past. John, as he stood there with that priestly blood in his veins, was perfectly true to that noble past, because he looked out into a noble future. No man is so certain to be faithful to the past which has gone, as the man whose hold is strong upon the future which is to come. John stood in his imperial strength of character, and with his power of eloquence, in the midst of those circumstances, and ideal after ideal crumbled before those who looked upon him or listened to his words. Under his feet were some of the most revered political and religious conceptions that had come from the past of that nation of tradition, but he trod on them with the power of a king. At last he had spoken such a brave word concerning the power of inspiration, had left so many things unsaid concerning the authority of tradition, that the wiseacres who stood about him began to breathe uneasily, and doubtless one of them, who was anxious to stop the intellectual machinery in John's soul, called up the great shade of Abraham. Now, there is nothing that will stop the intellectual machinery of a man's soul so quickly as a great ghost. A great shade evoked from the silent grave will ordinarily change the current of eloquence. But that man stood there for a moment, looked on that grand aristocracy which Abraham represented and in spite of the fact that it was the most impressive aristocracy the world had ever seen, he said, "God out of these stones can raise up children unto Abraham." That is what aristocracy is worth.

It would have been easy for John to have blown away most of the aristocracies which men had conceived or allowed. Away below them all is the aristocracy of the brute. Above that is the aristocracy of the brute's possessions. That is the aristocracy of cash, the aristocracy of deeds and notes, stocks and bonds. Growing out of that is the aristocracy of family, because by tradition and by heredity the possessions of the brute may be carried on. Just above the aristocracy of the family is the aristocracy of brains, but far above that is the aristocracy of character. John saw in Abraham the aristocracy of possessions, the aristocracy of family, the aristocracy of brains and the aristocracy of character, but he objected in the name of living humanity even to that mighty shade ruling the future. The very instant that John, by the power that he had, turned back that mighty force, that very instant he created for mankind in the midst of an association of aristocracies, a new conception of aristocracy which to-night lies at the basis of all republicanism, and is ruling and inspiring the thought of our American commonwealth. We believe that man's highest good is ahead, not behind, and that the greatest service of Abraham was that he led to a greater humanity; and that the best power of every man lies in his ability to give to that humanity some greater future, some better ideal, some surer victory. That idea of aristocracy came into the world from the touch of that political iconoclast, and on that conception of aristocracy Jesus Christ walked to the cross. If that cross stands for anything, it stands for a new conception of aristocracy. It stands for the fact that a man is free, without any sort of bondage to any kind of authority in the past, and owes himself to nothing else but the living God and his own conscience. "God," said John, as though God were the only authority in the world, "God can raise out of these stones children to Abraham." If that cross means anything it means the abrogation of the old aristocracy; for it was the aristocracy of his time that hounded the Master to his death, and it was the political aristocracy of the time that at last sent the spear into his side. Jewish aristocracy in the name of Pharisees and chief priests, led him to Calvary, and Roman aristocracy, the aristocracy of politics, pierced his side with that cruel spear. Let us remember that as one of the mighty fingers of the Omnipotent God, for all these years in America that finger has been pointing toward republicanism, toward democracy, and it points away from all sorts of unholy aristocracy, as in 1861 it pointed from an aristocracy which kept the Negro in slavery, to an earnest republicanism and democracy which at last shall make his freedom a blessing and not a curse.

II.—Again, as we look at that cross, we see very clearly that it stands for a definite notion, new, and fresh, and inspiring, of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. If Jesus Christ is to be looked at merely as a philosopher or political thinker of the most noble type, we must see that he understood perfectly well that the greatest power in man's life is the power that expresses itself in prayer. Prayer has been a stream which has flowed along through all the centuries, and which has seen the stars upon its bosom in all latitudes. Men have built various temples as the waymarks of this flowing stream, here the pyramids, there the Parthenon, and there Westminster Abbey; and this great flood of prayer, pushing itself on towards the mysteries of the sea, has really carried in itself the greatest powers that lie in human nature, and the best possibilities of our common humanity.

Let us change the figure, and say that prayer is such a force in human nature, it represents so much, that it is perfectly certain that if you have the prayers of any people, you have the mirror of their government. Tell me what kind of prayer those people living yonder offer up to what they think is the supreme power in the universe, and I will tell you what kind of power they will allow in practical politics to rule over them. For their prayer will be the intimation of the quality, nay, the character, of their ideal of power. And if their ideal of power up yonder is such an idea as will allow an autocrat and tyrant to rule over themselves, surely here below you may expect to find, occupying their thrones and wearing their crowns, autocrats and tyrants. Wherever men have looked toward progress, it has been where Christ has reigned. "New heavens and a new earth." First the new heavens, afterward the new earth. First a dream, then a deed. First the ideal, then the practical. First it is in the heaven above, and is to be seen by prayer; then it is seen in the earth beneath, and it comes in the form of practical politics. When this man began his work, he said: "When ye pray, say 'Our Father.'" No monosyllable was ever loaded with such revolutions as lay in that monosyllable our. The world had already heard of the fatherhood of God in prophecies and psalms. Nay, Jupiter was a heaven-father. But the world had never heard of the our fatherhood of God. Men were standing and saying, "My Father." No man had yet felt the intense solidarity of the human race. No one had known that deep Christian socialism which lies in that first expression of our Lord's Prayer. "Our Father." When I say "My Father" I am asking a personal blessing. I am asking for something that separates me from other men, that disunites me, that cuts off my relationship, that makes me unsocial, makes me, indeed, a special favorite of heaven, and it is as if I thought there might be some blessing which would touch me alone. Now, I may use those words, "My Father," with all that heresy in my thought. But when I say "Our Father," every man's destiny is my destiny, every touch of hope in my breast belongs to you and to the man beyond the sea. I have lifted up every human being with me in my prayer, and bound my life with your life and with every other human life. "My Father" is monarchy. "Our Father" is pure democracy.

By all the revolutions that lay in that word, it has gone from century to century, doing its work, oversetting thrones, building republics where tyrannies once existed, and crowning the ruins of old empires with democracies. And to-night there is not a single throne on earth that is safe, which is not built upon, not only the fatherhood of God, but the brotherhood of man. To-night the Czar in Russia, fears the uprising of the people who have such righteousness on their side that the whole world looks with scorn upon his throne; and to-day in England all the older elements of the English aristocracy are thrilled as John Morley answers the Chief Secretary for Ireland, and the throne of one of the noblest queens in all history trembles, because the Irishman feels that while the fatherhood of God is above his head, the brotherhood of man has not touched his heart. From the very beginning of that revolution in human history until this hour there has been a steady advance from all theories which have isolated men, and there is not a single problem now which needs discussion or solution, which does not wait for the touch of that finger of God upon our conscience and our life to light it up, to make it no longer a problem but an omen of beautiful hope. To-day we are mourning about the "labor problem." The capitalist lies down on his cushions and walks upon his velvet carpets, and says, "My Father," and the laborer, if he is not in yonder saloon, kneels down on his bare floor and he prays, "My Father." Revolution lies in either prayer, revolution such as always comes when evolution has not been allowed its opportunity, and when all its energies have not been invited out into light and warmth. Never, my friends, until the capitalist and laborer bow together in the same church, not one in the mission chapel and the other in the richly upholstered church, but in the same place of worship, and say, both of them, "Our Father," will the labor problem be solved.

It must be solved, my friends, just as that problem in the South must be solved. It must be solved by the mighty touch which comes from that finger of Almighty God, which will teach the nations of the earth that all men are brethren. I come from the State of Lincoln to the State of Charles Sumner, and I tell you by the memories which come from South and North, memories which stir us with their enthusiasm and their hope, that the power which in 1861 took that man yonder from Springfield to Washington, and out of his awkwardness, and his earnestness, and his strength, gave to this nation a leader who through four years of civil war walked with faith and courage into the smoke of conflict and through the difficulties of debate, until at last in the hands of Grant there lay the sword of Lee, was the conviction of the fatherhood of God, and the absolute, universal brotherhood of man.

III.—But that cross stands for something other than this. When this man of Nazareth came into our world, he found a certain conception of liberty on which the world had built her institutions of politics, and largely her institutions of religion? What was liberty? Ask the Roman under whose eagles this man began his work. A Roman would tell you that liberty was a concession. Liberty is the property of thrones, and crowns, and scepters, and rulers, and if the man yonder is free, it is not because he has any right to himself, but it is because some gratuity has been vouchsafed him, and the crown itself, in which are the sources of liberty, has allowed him something not a right of his own soul. It is a concession on the part of power. And therefore crowns and thrones, as I have said, were the depositaries, nay, they were the owners in fee simple, and they doled out liberty, conscious that liberty in the hands of the people was entirely unsafe, and therefore to be kept safe must be kept entirely in the hands of the ruler of the crown.

Here came a man, walking in the midst of the influences of Roman civilization, as they penetrated the Jewish life. One day, talking with that freedom which he had in the midst of a nation of tradition, he found himself addressed by one who informed him, "We be all Abraham's children, and we have never been in bondage to any man." Instantly there flashed from the breast of the young Jew words which to-night are as living as they were then, and far more powerful: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." What! Man made free by the truth? That is precisely the Christian notion of liberty. That conception of freedom is the characteristic conception of the whole scheme of that Nazarene. Freed by the truth! He knew that every inch of human liberty had been won by man's having won truth. He understood that every single touch of freedom in the world had come first by truth's having come to the world. All the philosophers who ever had liberty in the intellectual sky had had it because they first got truth, and by the wings of truth they found the very home of light. All the brave thinkers who had preceded him had realized in their own souls the truth, and so thoroughly had they taken truth, upon which the world was made, under which history was organized, and according to which the whole future was planned, so thoroughly had they taken it within them, that the whole world came to be their home, and they moved easily, intellectually and spiritually within their righteous realm, because it is the truth. He saw distinctly that the old theory of truth which lay in the Jewish church and in the Roman state, was a theory which separated and confined the forces which belong to every man. There never was a more interesting lie in the world than that lie which we tell when we quote from the Declaration of Independence that sentence, "All men are created free." Nobody was ever created free. We are born little slaves. We have around us the slavery of laws and customs. Nature holds us in bondage, and from the very moment that the little child finds the truth as to how to get its thumb to its mouth, and gets that consequent sense of liberty, up to the time that it stands before the living God, and in the truth that is in Christ Jesus finds himself free from his sins, it is one long winning of truth and one long winning of freedom.

Freedom is not something that can be doled out by crowns that can be given in the lump to men by any sort of legislation. No kind of power can give it to the personal human soul. It is a personal achievement, and must be won through inspiration and by the enthusiasm of an eager spirit. When that notion of liberty came into the world, many crowns and thrones began to feel what successive crowns and thrones know, that part of their occupation was gone. The fact is that the very instant you tell a crown that it has no right to keep, and, therefore, has no right to give, liberty, that very instant you remove the whole problem of getting freedom from the throne to the soul of the individual man. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Yonder, crouching in the forests, away back there in the darkness of the past, is a wretch groaning and trembling under the smitten air, as the thunders roll over his head, and great lightnings leap out of the black scabbard of the sky, and he is hiding in the dark cave; while down yonder at the station, a little, delicate-fingered girl touches a key that bears my thought quivering under the deep, far over the hills and valleys, across to Europe and Asia, round the world. What is the difference? One knows the truth about the lightning, the other does not. One is absolutely free around the world, the other is a slave yonder in his cave.

On that idea of freedom, the American Missionary Association plants the school, plants the church, and proposes, whatever government may do, to give to the black man and to the Indian, freedom, because of the fact that it gives first of all the truth, the truth about the universe in which he lives, the truth about his God above him, the truth about his own nature, the truth about human history, the truth about all these great agencies and energies in the world, the mastery of which must come into his hand before he may ever be a man. To-day we have the same power confronting this gracious energy in our common-school system and in the work of this American Missionary Association, as confronted it in the time of early Congregationalism, when John Milton was poet, and Oliver Cromwell was captain, and John Pym was statesman. The power that to-night confronts this proposition as to freedom, the power that still in this world holds to the belief that it lies with the King, or crowned head, or Pope, is the old Jesuitical power that once came to England and to which Oliver Cromwell taught a lesson in Spain such as never ought to be forgotten. And yet, my friends, through the whole South the power of the Jesuits goes after the Negro with an energy proportioned to the deception in which that old conception of freedom lives. I found them this last summer through the West, pushing their way from one tribe to another of Indians, in order, if possible, that these wild men of the forest might be taught in their ignorance this wretched proposition that went to pieces so long ago, and has been dragged through the dust of so many battlefields in history. And one thing the American Missionary Association does. It plants itself by the American common school, and, putting itself in harmony with this notion, that you must touch the souls of men, that liberty is a personal achievement, it does not absolutely rely on government, not even on an Act of Congress, not upon legislation, but it does rely upon its own schools and the common schools, and it distinctly states to that despot in the Vatican that America will never be ruled by priestly and foreign power.

IV —Once more. The cross of Christ stands for something else still. For when he came to the world it was the era of institutionalism. Man was almost nothing, institutions were everything. Consider him, will you, as a peasant in Galilee, standing between two vast institutions, the richness and glory of which I may not have time to describe to you. On the one side laws, arms, arts, literatures, traditions, legions, were all massed upon the city of the seven hills, in one gigantic fact; marble in its buildings, and radiant with the triumph of its hopes, I mean, the Roman State. On the other side there lifted up itself upon the hills of Jerusalem a great ecclesiastical institution. Prophecies and songs, poets, priests, great thinkers and mighty captains had brought into that institution all the richness of their spoil. That was the Jewish church. On the one side the Roman state in politics, on the other side the Jewish church in ecclesiastics, and between them stood humanity, shriveled, shrunken, poor, hardly conscious of itself and almost hopeless. Institutions were everything and man was almost nothing. One day this man walked into one of those institutions. It was not the Roman State, for he was not a demagogue. If he had gone into the Roman State he would have been called Messiah, and would have been crowned. But he went to the duty that lay next to him. He went into the Jewish church, for he knew that institutionalism was as crowned and honored there as it was in the political institution, and he said that there were movements on foot which would sweep one stone from above another, and they stood and quivered before him. At another time he went into the temple, and standing amidst all its glory, and feeling the immediate influence of its past, he said, "There stands one here greater than the temple." Aye, the day of institutions had gone, the day of man had come. He called himself the Son of Man. Once again he took an institution into his hands, one of that sort the hardest to reform. It was the old Jewish Sabbath. He saw its meaning, its prophecy and its hope. He took it in his hands for a moment, and put man in the other hand, and man outweighed it. And he said, when Pharisaism howled,—when man goes up and an institution comes down, Pharisaism always says it is unconstitutional or uninstitutional,—when Pharisaism spoke there, he said, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."

Did he come to destroy institutions? Look at him on the cross. Look at the dark sky, the vail of the temple rent in twain from the top to the bottom. The institution had gone, man had come. Had all institutions gone? Nay, in the name of humanity, for the salvation of humanity, he went into that institution called the grave, fought death in his own castle, rose from the grave, and on the wreck of the Jewish Sabbath he placed the Christian Sabbath, with all the inspiring hopes of humanity. His idea was to teach men that institutions are to be the servants of men, that constitutions, laws, traditions, methods, buildings, every thing is to serve humanity. From that hour to this it has been easy to reform institutions. From that hour to this it has been possible even to amend constitutions. From that moment to this men have been walking up in front of ancient institutions, and asking, "What are you doing for humanity?" They have stood in front of constitutions that were revered and asked, "What is your service to man?"

To-day it is that spirit that stands in front of the American saloon, and asks in the name of humanity what that institution is worth. And by that old power which once asked slavery why it should have a right to exist, and ultimately decided that in the name of humanity it must go down, so at last will the American saloon depart out of our sight.

V.—But there was no fact as yet, no event as yet, supported by all these great ideas and agencies that gave power to these forces; and if the world had been left without that one matchless event, this power would have dwindled into nothing. As he stood there with these ideas, and ready to be crucified, did he see in all the world a place where all men are created equal? It was not in the Jewish church, for the Jewish church divided the Gentile world from itself. It was not in the Roman State. In the Roman State there were the patricians and the plebeians; there was the prince, the king, the emperor; and there was the beggar, the slave; were classes of men everywhere. But in obedience to these ideas there lifts itself against that sullen sky the all-conquering cross. There for the first time in human history, was a fact before which all men stood in awe; a common need, a common inspiration, a common hope, a common blessing, a common redemption. I care not to-night whether they believed it was true or not. The idea got into the air; it went with the morning; it spoke in every breeze; it was carried far to the north, and the east and the west. There was one spot where all men were absolutely equal, and then came the recurring thought also, that this spot was the very place where God Almighty had disclosed his government. Man began to follow at once a new system of politics, a new conception of what religion and what the state must mean, in the divine government manifesting itself on the cross, and of course has made all men equal, black and white, bond and free, high and low, rich and poor, all equal before the throne of God. Then it flashed through the intellect of men that any just government on earth will make equality in laws, equality in privileges, and equality in responsibilities. So at last there came to the world this great vision of equal rights for mankind.

I believe, my friends, that the life and death of Jesus were something vastly superior to this. To me he is the God-man. To me his atonement is not a political event, but a moral, spiritual, universal event in the economy of God. But I have sought your attention to-night a little while upon the edges of that great fact that we might see these five imperial truths:

First of all, the great idea of the new aristocracy.

Second, the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Third, the great idea that truth is the source of liberty.

Fourth, that institutions are man's servants, and man must never be their slaves; and,

Fifth, the idea of the equality of all men before any righteous government, that has the hand of Almighty God under it as a nation, under which as a church we want to humble ourselves that we may be exalted.

These constitute the hand of God. In that hand has been crushed tyranny and oppression, anarchy and greed, and in the palm of that hand there lies the republic to-night, waiting for the leadership of the Christian church, aye, for the leadership of our own church.

Yonder, at Hadley, out from his solitude and hiding place, attracted by the thunderous noise of Indian war, there rushed an old regicide, a friend of Oliver Cromwell, one of our earlier number who looked across the sea in 1620, to see the marvelous freight carried to Plymouth, to hear from across the waters the words of that first Plymouth town meeting. Out into the fray he sprang, as a man from that empty past, his long white hair flowing like a stream of silver in the golden atmosphere. Instantly the battle was turned from a retreat into a triumph. And if to-night we would help the Negro, the Indian, the Chinaman, we must invoke that same power which has laid tyranny low in the dust, and which abides in the human soul for the salvation of the weak.

the instruction, and look to the future results more than to the present. In each department of the school, vocal music was taught, and considerable progress made in the rudiments. Careful attention was given to all branches of instruction, and every thing possible was done to deepen the interest of the pupils in study.

"The religious interest has been deeper than in previous years. This result grew out of the Sabbath-school, which has been continued during the year with good success. In addition to the regular corps of teachers, about twenty teachers from Lexington have been in the school and done good work. The school will be continued through the summer months.

"The sentiment of the community toward the work of the Association is most favorable, and a great deal has been done for the Freedmen by the members of the different churches. During the long and severe winter, a great deal of suffering was experienced by the poor of the city, and much was done to relieve it by all classes of citizens, and for the first time, attention was paid to the blacks.

"I mention these facts to show the great change that has taken place within the past year.

15. Ely Normal School, Louisville, Ky.

Value of property, $20,000.

The great city of Louisville is moving very slowly in the line of providing for the education of her colored children. Simply the income to the school fund from the taxation of the colored people is used for this purpose.

A number of colored citizens are constituted a Board of Education, through which the school authorities of the city appropriate this money and manage the colored schools. As this board has no school buildings, for the past year the Ely Normal building has been leased to it at a low rate, and it is used as the High-School for colored children.

This Department embraces, as its field among the Freedmen, the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas, and the Indian Territory; among the Chinese, the States of California, Nevada, and Oregon, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho.

When we turn our attention to what has been accomplished for the Freedmen, the monuments of success, and especially the evidences of the Divine blessing, are so palpable that our hearts overflow with thankfulness, and we look forward with high hopes for the race. There are in this Department two universities, four graded schools with Normal classes, forty common-schools with Sabbath-schools connected, and twenty-five churches. The schools report a continued

Deacon Samuel Holmes, delegate of the Executive Committee to the International Council held in London, spoke of the estimate placed upon the work of this Association by that body.

The Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, of Columbus, gave an address on "The Mission of Congregationalism to God's Poor."

Secretary Strieby read brief extracts from letters from the following gentlemen who had been asked to be present but were not able: Bishop Phillips Brooks, Boston, Hon. Francis A. Walker, Mass., and Bishop T. M. Dudley, of Kentucky.

Secretary C. W. Hiatt brought to the Association the greeting of Hon. Seymour Straight, a friend and benefactor of the Association, now in feeble health and declining years. He also offered the following resolution, which was adopted by a rising vote:

Out of this delightful scene and fellowship we are about to pass to our several appointed stations in the service, carrying with us an inspiration whose sense is real and whose source is divine. Our season of convention has been conspicuous for blessings choice and multiplied. Our minds and hearts have been stirred and charmed beyond expression. We have rejoiced in the noble testimony of the public assembly and the cordial greetings and graces of the Christian home.

We have congratulated ourselves upon the scope and candor of the deliberations in this meeting, and the disposition to welcome, in all its latitude and longitude, the truth. We believe that in and through these various sessions One has walked whose name is love and whose benediction is peace. For this, with all its lavish entailment of spiritual benefits, we are profoundly grateful to our God.

As an Association we are helplessly in debt to the people of this Forest City for their boundless hospitality. It has filled and overflowed this dwelling and generously flooded the sanctuary itself. Formidable indeed would be the task of only enumerating the items of our obligation.

To the pastor and people of this local church, whose labors and resources have so amply matched their colossal undertaking; to the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of this church, and the societies co-operating without respect to denomination, for their bountiful and sumptuous collation of Wednesday; and to the ladies of this church, whose committee of co-operation with the woman's meeting have rendered such practical aid, and whose bounty we have also shared this day; to the choir for its valued services of song; to the President and Faculty of Adelbert College, and the local Alumni Association of Oberlin for their respective and noble recognitions of our workers and our work; to the press for its uniform and liberal courtesy; to the railroads, the hotels, and to all who have dropped the arduous work of parish, or mission, or literary field to bring their offerings to this spiritual and intellectual feast—we would express our thorough and grateful appreciation, invoking upon one and all the blessing of our God.

Minutes of afternoon and evening sessions were read and approved.

All papers, documents and addresses were placed in the hands of the Executive Committee for publication.

After the benediction by Dr. Strieby, the Association adjourned, to meet in Oberlin to-morrow morning.

J. R. NICHOLS,
Recording Secretary.

C. W. CARROLL,
Assistant Recording Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

REPORT ON CHURCH WORK.

BY REV. WOLCOTT CALKINS, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The committee on church work submit the following report:

This Association completes this year the third decade of its work in behalf of the Freedmen of the South. Only a few years of the first decade can be included in our survey of its church work. Our first churches were organized in 1867. And yet our educational work from the beginning was preparing the way for these churches. For they were founded upon principles almost as new to the colored race as Christianity itself was to the early Gentiles. We have aimed from the beginning to suppress the tendency to an emotional religiousness destitute of all moral principle. Immoralities too often tolerated among the members and even among the ministers of colored churches which existed before the war, have never blemished the record of our churches. They are among the purest and most consecrated of all the churches of our denomination.

From 1867 to 1871 of the first decade we organized forty-five churches, with 2,596 members, an average of fifty-five to each church. In the second decade from 1871 to 1881, the number of churches had increased to seventy-eight and of members to 5,472, the average mounting to seventy in each church. The effect of an educated ministry of their own race began to be felt by this time. Continuous revivals were enjoyed in the schools and colleges, and the quality of the churches was improving even more rapidly than the members were increasing.

In 1891, at the close of the third decade, we had 138 churches, with 8,258 members, the average shrinking back to sixty. The recent formation of new churches, with very few members in each, accounts for this diminished average.

The following new churches have been added to the roll during the past year: in Georgia, Thomasville and Wheathill; in South Carolina, Greenwood and the Old Circular church of Charleston; in Kentucky, Nelson's and Lexington; in Louisiana, Thibodeaux and Calvary church in New Orleans; in Mississippi, Garden City; in Alabama, Fort Payne; and in Kentucky, Bon Air, Cumberland Gap, and Rugby. One church, reported last year, Clover Bottom, in Kentucky, has been crowded out by the Baptists, and Orangeburg, S. C., has also disappeared. This reduces the additional number of twelve churches to ten, so that the actual increase is from 128 in 1890 to 138 in 1891.

The additions to the roll of church membership number 1,031. But the removals from the roll have been still greater. This is accounted for, not only by death, and by the migration of the colored population, which has been greater than ever before, but also by a stricter revision of the rolls, and the dropping of absent members. This example might well be followed by many of our churches in the East. The result of this wholesome revision is an actual decrease of our church membership, from 8,416 in 1890 to 8,258 in 1891.

Our largest increase by conversion was in 1884, when evangelists were employed to promote revivals. There is no limit to this means of swelling our church membership, if we dared to resort to it. But the danger of unduly exciting religious emotions, as seen in other denominations, has led us to prefer the slower and safer process of Christian education, yet very precious revivals are reported from many portions of the field. The church connected with Fisk University has felt this influence during the whole year. Lincoln Church in Washington reports 130 conversions this year, and over 500 in the past ten years. Wilmington, Raleigh, and Dudley, in North Carolina, have received from 50 to 100 new converts each; and the revival in Thomasville, Ga., has resulted in the organization of a new and vigorous church. Over 800 conversions are recorded, and 748 have been added to the churches on confession of faith in Christ. This is an increase of 9 per cent. by conversion from the world, while the increase in all the Congregational churches of the United States from this source has been less than 6 per cent.

The churches of Georgia have been happily united during the past year in a new organization entitled, "The General Convention of the Congregational Churches of Georgia." The fifteen churches of this Association are thus in cordial fellowship with many churches formerly known as Congregational Methodist and Protestant Methodist. But the principles of this Association and of the National Council as declared in 1889 are adopted with entire unanimity by the new convention. No distinction is made on account of color, and the ministers and members of every church are recognized as the peers of all others.

We record our grateful appreciation of the generous spirit in which brethren have labored for this result. Our expansive polity has proved adequate to this emergency, and all the Congregational churches of the South are now within ecclesiastical organizations recognized by our National Council and by the recent London International Council, where our colored churches were represented by one of their most devoted ministers.

There has been no change in church work among the Indians during the past year. We report the same nine churches, with a slight increase of members from 438 in 1890 to 496 in 1891. The encouraging feature of the year has been the loyal and, in many instances, the heroic conduct of our church members in the mournful warfare last winter. Not one Christian Indian was found among the hostiles. This test summons us to more vigorous work in sustaining these churches, and in planting new ones.

The Executive Committee have felt it to be their duty to assume some control and supervision over the churches of this Association. Our pastors are not always selected by a process of "candidating" so dear to old-fashioned Congregationalists. In many cases, no doubt, the recommendations of the administration in New York carry a greater weight than the letters which our ministers are incessantly writing to vacant churches around Boston.

Detailed instructions are also given. Questions are asked: What sort of sermons do you preach? Do you read them, or preach without manuscript? How are your prayer meetings and young peoples' meetings conducted? Are you training your Sunday-school teachers? And what are your relations to other denominations?

We may as well admit that this is a little mild Episcopalianism within our Congregationalism. And without going out of our way to ask if a little more of it might not be safely applied to some other churches, we are bound to face the question fairly, whether we are prepared to relieve our Executive Committee and their Secretaries of these delicate duties. It would be an immense relief. Instruct them to commission the best colored ministers they can raise up in our theological schools, to assist the churches these missionaries organize, in building meeting houses, and in sustaining their own pastors, and then to leave these churches absolutely to their own control, and the work of this Association would be wonderfully simplified.

Your committee are not prepared to recommend this radical measure quite yet. Our churches at the South are closely united to our schools and colleges. The schoolhouse serves in many cases for a meeting-house, and the teacher, in still more cases, for pastor. In very few instances can church work be separated from educational work.

An educated ministry and purity in the church membership are first principles with us. And it is the conviction of your committee that both would be imperiled by any relaxing, at this time, of resolute supervision of the church at headquarters.

After all this difficulty will be providentially escaped as soon as the churches attain to self-support. Financial ability is a better measure of intelligence and character among the colored race than anywhere else in this country. The ideal condition of a Congregational church in "good and regular standing" will be attained as soon as it can pay its own bills.

Thus the most urgent question which our review of the year's church work has prompted, is the extent to which our churches at the South ought to be pushed towards self-support. We have tried to get an estimate from our treasurer of the amount of the appropriation for church work. It is absolutely impossible to give exact figures. The salaries of our Field Secretaries are paid both for the supervision of the schools and for missionary church work. Nearly all of our pastors are also teachers. Church buildings are also school-houses. But a rough estimate, separating the gifts from our treasury, for church and school purposes, would be something like this:

For education	$235,183 33
For churches	70,000 00
Total	$305,183 33

This sum of $70,000 corresponds to the $750,000 given by the Home Missionary Society to Northern churches, plus the $150,000 given by the Congregational Union for meeting-houses and parsonages, a total of $900,000. Is $70,000 too much to give to the poorest of our churches among the freedmen?

Yes, it is too much if it is suppressing instead of encouraging self-denying struggles for self-support. Our 138 churches have given for this object during the past year $28,853.75 in addition to missionary contributions of $3,465.08, a total of $32,318.83. This is an average of about $4 for each member of the church, and it is almost exactly equal to the average missionary and benevolent contributions of all the members, rich and poor, of all the Congregational churches of the United States. We submit this simple fact on the question whether we are pauperizing the churches of the South. Our 500,000 members, rich and poor, give away for objects outside of their own churches, $4 each per year, and over 8,000 colored brethren give for their own churches, and for those more needy, $4 each per year!

There is rapid progress toward self-support. The churches in Memphis and Savannah receive no more aid; two churches in Kansas have just been committed to local support and will receive nothing further from our treasury; and four churches in Louisiana, one of which has never received aid, are entirely self-supporting; St. Mark's and Morning Star, of Schreiner, and Abbeville and Deroven.

In view of all the facts, the question is very pertinent, Are they shirking their own duties, those emancipated bondsmen and their children?

No small part of the "dictation and supervision from New York," has been a prompting of greater effort toward self-support. A circular letter was sent out September 15, 1891, to all the churches, pleading the claims of new fields, and urging still more strenuously the honor and welfare the churches would attain by standing independent. They were asked to call a church meeting and take a formal vote on the question of increasing their subscriptions and of assuming self-support as soon as possible. Replies have been received from many of the churches and are continually coming in. We have read some of them with the profoundest sympathy. They abound in such pathetic disclosures as these: "Most of our members are children. The street cars have taken away the earnings they used to get by carrying satchels." "Of our 180 members, 34 are absent, 24 are children, 16 are widows, and 18 are old and assisted by our charities. This leaves only 68, and only five of these are doing a good business. Nevertheless we have voted to increase our former subscription of $100 to $400 this year." And more than two-thirds of the replies thus far received promise an increase, and many of them express the hope of attaining complete self-support in the near future.

It is the deliberate judgment of the Executive Committee that a sudden withdrawal of all aid would extinguish a few of our churches at once, and send nearly all the rest of them to other denominations less exacting than we are concerning an educated ministry and an intelligent and orderly church life.

But we have discovered a restlessness of the administration under criticism; they are blamed for giving too much. But if their appropriations are diminished, supporters of the society who are interested in the particular fields which suffer, blame them more severely for the withdrawal.

Your committee is convinced, therefore, that this meeting ought to take some action on this matter. A positive recommendation of some kind would arm the Executive Committee with authority. But we cannot specify the churches which may be safely left to self-support. The only thing we can do is to encourage the Executive Committee in this work and to make the voice of the American Missionary Association heard by churches which may need further prompting.

We recommend, therefore, the following resolution:

Resolved, that the Executive Committee be instructed to consider every church which may possibly be left to self-support, as a case by itself. If in their judgment the church would survive without permanent loss of efficiency, they are authorized to cite this action of the Association as their reason for withdrawing aid. And we recommend that they continue their efforts to bring all the churches, as rapidly as possible, to a condition of independence, both for financial support and for control of their own spiritual work.

REPORT ON EDUCATIONAL WORK, SOUTH.

BY REV. L. S. ROWLAND, CHAIRMAN.

The committee to which has been referred the educational department of the annual report, take great pleasure in expressing their gratification at the present prosperous condition of the schools of the Association. The total number under instruction during the year has increased by several hundred, and almost every school is crowded to overflowing, compelling in many cases the sad necessity of sending away great numbers of applicants from lack of room for their accommodation. It is evident that the thirst of the colored people for knowledge, shown so remarkably from the moment of their emancipation, has not diminished, but is constantly increasing. It is a fact full of encouragement, but one also that brings with it new responsibilities, and constitutes the most impressive appeal possible for continued and larger efforts in their behalf.

The committee make special note of the growing ambition for higher education as shown by the increase of students in the college and preparatory departments. While the extension of primary education to the extent of the resources of the Association is a present necessity, and must remain one for many years to come in order to furnish material for the higher departments, your committee are of the opinion that one of the greatest needs of the colored people is coming to be that of competent, educated Christian leaders of their own race, preachers, teachers, and other professional men, a need not likely to be adequately supplied except by the colleges and higher schools sustained by this and other Christian bodies. It may be safely assumed from the history of other races, that no leadership will be permanently accepted by the colored people except such as shall come from their own ranks. In furnishing through its higher institutions such a thoroughly equipped leadership to take the place of its own at the earliest moment, this Association will make one of its best contributions to the welfare of the colored race. Another encouraging fact in the same direction is the growing interest in the theological department. As an ignorant ministry has been and still is the curse of the colored people, a thoroughly educated ministry is the highest boon we can possibly confer upon them. We are therefore specially gratified at the enlargement in the theological departments at Fisk and Howard Universities, and at Talladega College, and would earnestly commend this part of the work of the Association to the interest and support of the churches.

The religious history of the schools during the year proves that the Association is realizing in good degree its ideal of an education that shall thoroughly combine the Christian element with the intellectual in the training which it gives. An unusual number of the schools report precious revivals during the year, as the result of which many young people have been brought hopefully into the Christian life. In one case a new church has been the result of such a revival, and in other cases churches already existing have been greatly strengthened. The committee most heartily commend the policy of the Association in linking its schools and churches so closely together. In no other way, we believe, can its great aim to furnish to the colored people a thoroughly Christian education be secured.

REPORT ON CHINESE WORK.

BY REV. H. M. TENNEY, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The progress of the kingdom of God is marked by tidal movements. The income of the tide is often followed by a temporary ebb, which, in its time and turn, is followed by a stronger reflow.

In the work of the Association among the Chinese in America the tide this year is in the ebb. Our schools are less in number by one and their pupils fewer in number by two hundred and fifty-nine than were reported last year. This is due, however, not to lessened interest on the part of the workers, nor to the withdrawal of support on the part of the Association, but to the fact that hostility to the Chinese on the Pacific Coast and our acts of restrictive legislation are bearing their fruit, are checking Chinese immigration; and are turning back to their own land many of those who have come hither. We have built our Chinese wall at the westward, while we have left our ports open to the east for the entrance of hardly less objectionable people from Central and Southern Europe. But it is not to be presumed that this condition of things can be permanent. The United States is too thoroughly impregnated with the Christian principles of liberty and equal rights and human brotherhood long to discriminate against races. And China is too mighty and too populous, its undeveloped possibilities are too great, long to permit it. Mighty movements are now preparing the way for closer relations between these nations than we have ever yet known, and in the fulness of time commercial or governmental exigencies will break down the barriers and remove them. We are not to assume, therefore, that the decrease of the Chinese population in the United States, and the temporary ebb in the pressure of work for this people on the part of the Association, forebodes the ultimate removal of this one of the despised races from our soil and the lifting of the burden of missionary responsibility on its behalf from the churches. On the other hand, a reverent interpretation of Providence forces the conviction that God would have us seize upon the present peaceful and quiet days in Chinese affairs and use them in preparation for the larger work which the future undoubtedly holds in store. There are in the United States at the present time not far from 125,000 Chinese. Relatively the number is insignificant. For a few years to come it is not likely to be increased or decreased largely. But behind this handful of Chinese now in America there are the four hundred millions of the Chinese empire.

When it lay in the purpose of God to give to America a pure religion and a Christian civilization he brought to our eastern shores the humble Pilgrim and Puritan colonists, and having put the open Bible in their hands, he isolated them there for a century and gave them time to work gospel principles into their characters and institutions that thus they might be fitted to leaven the coming millions and the national life as they have done.

And now, in anticipation of the breaking of the barriers which have immured China in its heathenism and kept it from the sisterhood of nations, and in preparation for the evangelization of that mighty people, may we not believe that God is causing an elect few to be isolated among us from their heathenism for a time, and scattered throughout our Christian communities and under the shadow of our churches, that they through our influence may receive the truth and be themselves prepared to become the ministers of Christ and a Christian civilization to their own people? The plan of God seems too manifest to be doubted. And it is an honor bestowed of God that American Congregationalists, through this Association, are permitted to be workers together with him in the development of this purpose.

Your committee urge, therefore, that this department of the work of the Association, its smallest and seemingly least in point of importance, be not, at this stage of it, underestimated and neglected. We urge that the schools and the workers upon the Pacific Coast be sustained and encouraged to press their work with every favoring opportunity. And we urge this not only in view of its probable bearing upon an exigent future, but in view of the present value of the work, and the character of the converts among the Chinese. We have been deeply touched by testimonies which have come to us on this point. A recent visitor to the missions on the Pacific Coast, a brother known to all present, and honored, writes: "The Chinese work looms up to me wonderfully. I do not believe there can be any missionary in China doing so much for China as Mr. Pond is here. I am gratified beyond measure in what I see. What would you say to a Chinese prayer-meeting of a hundred men singing Moody and Sankey hymns in English and Chinese, and praying together in both languages, devout, earnest, and consistent?"

And the sacrifices which the Chinese Christians of the Pacific Coast are making for the preaching of the gospel in their own land is an assurance that we may look with confidence to them as laborers and leaders in the evangelization of China. They have their Chinese Foreign Missionary Society, and they support it, we are assured, by larger gifts per capita than are being contributed by any other Christians of the same means in the United States. Let the Chinese of this country be turned from their heathenism to Christ, and they will furnish the most powerful reinforcement possible for the missionary laborers by whom China is evangelized.

But we urge the prosecution of this work as a testimony as well as a ministry.

We urge it as a testimony against the miserable caste spirit which taints and pollutes our American civilization, and from which the Chinese, in common with the Negro and the Indian, have suffered so severely. Until this evil spirit is cast out the Christianization of America can not be regarded as complete. To-day it is our disgrace. It degrades us in the eyes of even the heathen. It robs us of power, and it provokes antagonism and retaliation. It needs to be made apparent that there is an American heathenism as well as an American Christianity, and the line of demarkation needs to be distinctly drawn. The races which are especially cursed by the American caste spirit are the races especially championed by this Association, and we cannot afford to surrender work with any one of them until, by our testimony against this spirit, we make it plain to the world that American Christianity repudiates it, and that it is American heathenism which indulges it. By the prosecution of this work among the Chinese, therefore, we may hope, with the blessing of God, both to save those for whom we labor here and across the Pacific, and also to save ourselves.

REPORT ON INDIAN WORK.

BY REV. DAVID BEATON, D.D., CHAIRMAN.

The outstanding features of this work during the past year are the results of the late "war" with the Dakotas, the appeals for new work among the Apaches, the Navajoes and the Crows, and the increasing value of the educational work especially at Santee and Oahe. A romantic interest attaches to the work just opened in Alaska, and it shows besides, that the heroic age of missions has not passed away. Were the full details of this Alaskan mission told the churches, it would furnish a deeply interesting and inspiring record.

The popular interest has centered during the past year in the late "unpleasantness" between the Government and the Sioux. It is difficult to write with patience concerning the disasters that have resulted to the vast field of outstation work from government mismanagement and injustice, ending in a contest that left desolation, distrust and death behind it. If this last had taught the Indians a lesson either of fear or confidence, if it had resulted in a new, strong policy either of conciliation or severity, we would not feel so cast down as to government blunders in the future. But the survivors of Wounded Knee talk and act as if they were victors; and seem to have good reason for doing so; and apparently those forces that brought about the late conflict are being left to work another explosion when the fulness of the time comes. The effects of the land agitation and the "war," on the outstation work, centering in Oahe and reaching out over Cheyenne, Rosebud and Standing Rock Agencies and outstations, have been very disastrous; unsettling the Indian's confidence in his efforts towards civilization, and scattering congregations already formed. The situation has been redeemed from utter disaster by the heroism, humanity and talk of your watchful Superintendent, Rev. T. L. Riggs. The picture of the plundered homes, deep distrust in the hearts of the people and the unburied dead, might be entitled "After the War;" and it would show a faithful missionary and his little party, their hearts full of sorrow for the ruin of their hopes and the loss of their labors, taking their lives in their hands, and going out to bury the Indian dead that had lain on the ground for seventeen days after the battle. That action deeply touched the Indian heart, for no service will more strongly and permanently move him than respect for his dead. The effects of this heroic and sympathetic action are already felt far and wide, and a great awakening of interest has been manifested towards this special form of missionary work; and the way is open for the establishment of several large churches on the Standing Rock Agency. Shall these facts find an answering resolve on our part to secure to the Indians and to the kingdom what true fidelity, fortitude and patience of your workers has snatched from disaster? The present moment is favorable to a large increase of outstation work among all those tribes who, partly for their own errors, and partly for the white man's lust for land, and official blunders, have suffered so much. In this connection, also, we enforce the appeal for a new mission among the three thousand Crows, a field which, from all the evidence we can gather, is as full of promise as it is empty of the word of life. It is most encouraging to notice amid all these troubles that many professions of faith have been made, and several new members have been added to the churches. The statistics of this year, compared with those of the past year, show in all an addition of fifty-eight church members and seven hundred and four Sunday-school scholars; while on strictly educational lines we find an addition of forty-six to the grammar grade, three hundred and thirty-three to the primary grade and a total increase of pupils of three hundred and sixty.

This leads us to the educational work, which has its head in the Santee Normal and Industrial School, and which is beyond all others the most hopeful department of Indian labor. Time will permit me to notice only that of Santee, which has just come of age and holds an honored rank in the commonwealth of education and letters. Preeminently it is a Bible training school, but eminently it is an educational and industrial force, of the greatest value in the whole system of Indian missions. I shall never forget what I saw in that school, at once a center of Dakota scholarship and literary interest, a source of evangelistic zeal, a hive of industry and a sweet and gracious home. Could our people see with their own eyes those Indian youths sitting at table, studying in class, and in many cases effectively teaching others, profound interest would be awakened and ampler means would flow into the treasury for the enlargement of such work.

A survey of the Indian situation shows that considerable changes are likely soon to take place in the system of education. It is plain that both the government authorities and the old, tried friends of the red men are becoming convinced of the antiquated and unamerican character of the present contract system of schools. The time has evidently come when the government must take effective steps to give every Indian child an education that will fit him for the full duties of American citizenship. That we can longer tolerate a band of aliens and savages near the nation's heart is repugnant both to our Christian love and our civic pride. The government must take hold of this educa'ion question in a way that will in some degree wipe off the stain which a century of dishonor has left upon our dealings with the Indian. A rational compulsory system of education, with all the dignity and means of the nation behind it, must be given to the Indian. For this inevitable change the societies directly interested in the Christian life of the Indian must be prepared, and perhaps they can render valuable help in its initiation; and, surely we, whose proud boast it is to have laid the foundation of the educational system, which is the glory of this land, will hail the change and adapt our work to it. Under a partial measure of civil service reform in the Indian Bureau decided improvement is taking place in the administration of Indian affairs; and we are led by this to hope that the day has at length dawned when the government will no longer consider the slaughter of animals in the presence of men, women and children on the reservation, part of its system of Indian education. Surely the abominations of the shambles amid accompaniments that strongly remind the half-wild native of former scenes of blood and cruelty is not an absolutely indispensable part of an agent's duty in the distribution of rations.

The continued use of the native languages of the Indians is another question of great importance as well as of much greater difficulty, both in its bearings on national education and the strictly Christian education and evangelistic work of our societies. The Indian must be educated and become an American citizen; live right in the heart of this English-speaking nation. His language problem is, therefore, not the same as in the education and conversion of a foreign tribe. In the opinion of many observers of Indian life and character the continued use of his native tongue is an almost insuperable barrier to speedy and effective citizenship and evangelization. Language is a much deeper fact than race; and although the native languages are enriched with the literary and religious concepts of the teacher and missionary, yet it is still the tongue of the old heathenism. But the language of the Indian's fellow citizens is the language of his new civic duties, his new industrial ideas, and his new religious knowledge and emotions. To give the Indian a national compulsory system of education, and with it the language of Milton, Shakespeare and his English Bible as his intellectual and spiritual inheritance forever, would be one of the grandest works of the age. Nor must this full measure of wisdom and justice be allowed in any way to interfere with the use of the native tongue in the present work of our schools and missions; it will rather demand a class of workers fully conversant with the language of the people to work out the problem and handle the difficult subject in its transition state. But we cannot much longer deal with the Indian partly on the assumption that he is a ward of the nation, and partly that he is free to do anything he pleases, partly that he is civilized and partly that he is savage, with a drop of English teaching here and a flood of Dakota there, with a few months of school discipline now, and then years of wild, untutored tepee life. This course has long led to disaster, and to-day he is neither a citizen nor a Christian to the extent that our prayers and labors might have made him if a more rigorous and comprehensive policy touching his whole life had been adopted, both by our religious societies and the government. If the Indian is to have an education by a compulsory national system, industrial training to fit him to earn his living, law and justice to protect him in his property and life, and full American citizenship, he must discard his native tongue and speak the language of the American people. Then the night of his oppression will pass away and the morning light of Christian manhood will dawn upon this whole people.

REPORT ON MOUNTAIN WORK.

BY REV. C. H. DANIELS, CHAIRMAN.

Your committee would heartily endorse the work among the Mountain Whites as conducted by this Association the past year. We beg to note certain factors indicated by the annual report. The work is slightly begun, though effectively, in North Carolina and Alabama, and is more fully advanced in Tennessee and Kentucky, while important fields await a beginning in Western Virginia, West Virginia, South Carolina, and other States. Valuable results are reported in connection with the seventeen schools and thirty-two churches, under the care of forty-six teachers and twenty-seven ministers and evangelists. In the schools are some 1,700 pupils, and in the churches nearly 700 members. When we consider the means used and the repression compelled, a great work has been achieved. This work, so eminently Christian, ought never to be called to report,—"If the means were at hand we could establish a number of successful schools back among these mountains, and furnish their local primary schools with teachers who would bring in a new era of educational progress," because it means that for lack of funds a great opportunity has been lost for another year. Another expression, forced by bitter necessity into the report, commands our sympathy and regret—"We have dispensed in the interests of economy," when it is not economy, only under the compulsion of no funds. There is an economy which is wasteful, and this is the kind, for it declines hopeful work, dismisses missionaries and discontinues evangelistic efforts. It has been a pitiable necessity. The more, then, do we commend the policy of the Association in strengthening the work at the best points and adjusting it to greatest needs, rather than sacrificing strength by enlarging the work beyond the means to make it thorough. The best is the cheapest in the long run. We note that the work is preceded by the pioneer evangelist who searches out the country; that the schools are "completely and rapidly filled," and that school accommodations have been increased to meet urgent demands in several places. We bring to mind the gross ignorance of these people only to observe the wisdom of the normal schools and academies, which now, as in the past, are greatest powers for promoting primary education. The pressing need of the people is common education. These institutions grapple with this one problem, the training of teachers for the masses. We advise the steady holding to this true line of missionary economy by which increasing numbers may be sent forth equipped to help their own, and thus the Association become the helping hand in this uplifting work. It is suggestive—"Twenty-seven pupils of Pleasant Hill Academy are teaching twenty-seven schools in the mountains, with over two thousand scholars." Colleges may be, but are not now, the need in this important field. The work of the evangelists and churches has been carried on faithfully, though under repression of no funds—a word that ought not to be found in the vocabulary of wealthy and Christian America. We remind the churches that the opportunity will be exigent until we take our place beside our brethren who are the foreguard of this interesting and urgent and Christian work. We urge upon the Association that all means be used that can wisely add to the efficiency and increase of this department of work among the needy mountaineers of our middle country, until they shall be a people whose hope is in God. In saying this it is with the full conviction that our churches now established be firmly held to our Congregational policy, and that, so far as funds will allow, well-trained men of Congregational sympathies be placed as leaders at important centers in answer to the calls from the present workers.

REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

BY MR. J. G. W. COWLES, CHAIRMAN.

The committee appointed at the last Annual Meeting to examine and report upon the condition and conduct of the financial affairs of the Association has made a careful examination of the same, and is pleased to express and record its entire satisfaction with the administration of this great trust.

The committee met in the treasurer's office in New York, four of the five members being there present, in order that they might not merely review the accounts and reports for the year as transcribed for publication, but inspect and review the original entries and records as made in the daily course of business. We find the system of bookkeeping simple and complete. Any ordinary business man, though not expert in accounts, can readily trace any item of receipts from its source to its disbursement according to the intention of the donor. All moneys received are credited daily in the cash book to the sources whence they come, and entered as given for the school, college, church, or other beneficiary designated, or to the general fund if no specific use is named. These items are then distributed in journal entries under the proper titles, and finally carried to ledgers, where the condition of each fund constantly appears. The treasurer takes a trial balance every month, and brings before the Executive Committee at each monthly meeting a full statement of the receipts and disbursements of the month preceding, which has been duly audited by the Finance Committee before being so presented. All accounts are audited quarterly, as also the treasurer's annual statement, by two experienced accountants elected at the Annual Meeting. The faithful and exact attendance of these Auditors upon their laborious duties, as appears of record, deserves acknowledgment and commendation. All cash received from whatever source is deposited in bank, and all money is paid out by checks, requiring two signatures. The securities representing the invested funds of the Association are kept in a safety deposit vault, which can be entered for the collection of dividends, interest, or any other purpose only by the treasurer and another officer of the Association with him having a second key.

The income from the Daniel Hand Fund is held by itself, and that from other investments, as well as moneys received for specific uses, such as the purchase of land, the erection of buildings, etc., are kept in separate accounts.

We find that the Association holds fixed property in lands, buildings, and equipments used and occupied by its schools and churches at strategic points in various parts of its field, indispensable to its efficiency. It has invested funds for African missions of $108,723.92, and for colleges and schools of $122,151.86, the income only, amounting to $10,729.90 last year, being applicable for current use. Here is a beginning, though small, yet suggestive and hopeful, looking toward the endowment and ultimate independence of these educational institutions.

The Daniel Hand Fund, amounting to $1,000,894.25, is safely invested in the orig-enthusiasm for learning on the part of the Freedmen, good progress in studies, and an increasing willingness to aid in sustaining the expenses. The churches nearly all report revivals of religion, and purity of life which will compare favorably with Northern churches. But there is another view and another feeling when we look at the vast tracts of country where no missionary labor has been attempted. For various reasons less has been done in this Department than in the Eastern, principally because of the remoteness of portions of the field.

No one should imagine for a moment that any considerable portions of the country have been reached. The Secretary has traveled over hundreds of miles in Texas and Louisiana where nothing has been attempted: and only last winter, passed through the entire tier of the river counties of Arkansas, and found but one mission station. Thousands of Freedmen were seen flocking down to the river, who had not yet had the privilege of learning to read even, not to say of hearing the Gospel of our Saviour intelligently preached.

The report of operations is given more fully under the classification of Churches, Chartered Institutions, and Common-schools with Sabbath-schools connected. A table of the church statistics is given elsewhere.

CHURCHES.

Two new churches have been formed during the year—one in New-Orleans and one at Goliad, Texas. Some interesting facts in connection with the organization of these churches will be given under a separate heading for each.

A State Conference for Texas was organized by our churches December 4th, 1871, at Corpus Christi, which marks a new era of spiritual prosperity as well as a unity of effort and plan for church work in Texas.

Corpus Christi.

A revival followed the meeting of the Conference with the Corpus Christi church. Indeed, under the ministry of Rev. A. Rowe there has scarcely been a time when there were not some inquiring the way of life. Some Mexicans, as well as Freedmen, have attended his meetings. A dedication of a new house occurred December 3d, 1872. It cost about thirty-seven hundred dollars, and is a tasteful building—the best church edifice in town. There was a debt of some seventeen hundred dollars, of which five hundred dollars were temporarily loaned, without interest, by a devout colored woman of the church, and one hundred dollars by a colored man. To relieve the church, this Association has since contributed three hundred dollars from its general fund, and has transmitted two hundred and fifty dollars which were specially donated for this object, leaving upward of eleven hundred dollars of debt, which we trust will be liquidated by special donations. At the time of the dedication, Mr. Rowe was formally installed, and our missionary at Victoria, David Peebles, was ordained to the ministry.

Brownsville Churches.

The colored church at Brownsville, which has been under the care of Rev. Jeremiah Porter, has become nearly extinct, owing to the removal of its members to other places. Mrs. Porter and Miss Nellie Waterman have represented the Association in missionary labor for the Freedmen in Sunday-school and among the families.

The white Congregational church, of which Mr. Porter had charge also for some time, is now seeking a pastor, Mr. Porter having gone as United States chaplain to Fort Brown, where are stationed a body of colored troops.

Should the right man for a pastor come forward, under Providence, one good church could be profitably sustained at Brownsville. It is particularly important as being the threshold for entering upon the evangelization of Mexico.

African Congregational Church, Paris, Texas.

Since the organization of the Texas Conference, our missionary, William J. Evans, who went out from Chicago Theological Seminary to Arkansas, and thence to Paris, Lamar County, Texas, and has been laboring in connection with "The African Congregational church" of that place, has on their behalf signified their desire for fellowship. This church has hitherto been independent. It consists of some three hundred members, mostly colored. A prosperous Sunday-school, started and superintended by Mr. Evans, numbers one-hundred and forty. The church shares with three other denominations the ownership of a house of worship which has been partly finished during the past year. The title to the site is with the African Congregational church.

Mr. Evans reports show this to be a promising field for missionary effort.

He says, "Since the cold winter has passed, the large church building has been crowded every Sunday, and many, on the profession of their faith in Christ, have been added to the church." He writes further of this church,

"It was organized soon after the war. The colored people then were not allowed any thing like equal privileges in the different white churches to which they belonged. In short, they were imposed upon by the white ministers, not being allowed to have or inal securities turned over by the donor, which yielded an income last year of $53,-533.80. This, according to the terms of the gift, can be used only in the educational work of the Association, and is especially designed for fitting colored pupils to become teachers and leaders among their people.

It is of inestimable value in enabling worthy pupils in school and college to complete their course of education.

In analyzing the income of the Association from other sources during the past year we observe that the churches have given $6,615.62 more, and individuals $7,016.31 less; the women's societies $1,365.87 more, and Sunday-schools $1,205.84 less than in the year before, leaving the total from these sources just $240.16 less than in that year. But the total receipts for current expenses were $20,846.44 more than the year before, the total receipts available for current uses being $482,419.21, which represents almost exactly the increase in legacies, which were $158,664.97 last year, against $137,-789.18 the preceding year, a difference of $20,925.79 in favor of last year.

It will readily appear that legacies, the gifts of the dead, are an uncertain reliance. Indeed, during the past five years they have fluctuated from $52,266.73 in 1886-7 to $158,664.97 in 1890-1; an extreme difference of $106,000. The gifts from churches, Sunday-schools, missionary societies, and individuals during the same period show but slight variation, the average for five years being $190,750.15. It is gratifying to observe, however, that the receipts for tuition have increased in this period from $28,-964.81 in 1886-7 to $44,988.27 in 1890-1, an increase of $16,000, or 55 per cent., showing a marked movement in the direction of self-help; but we must not fail to bear in mind that self-support can never be reached in the colleges of the South, as it is not in those of the North, though it may and will be in their churches. Upon this point we notice in the general review of the work that these churches contributed towards their own support during the year just closed $28,853.75, besides giving $3,-465.08 to missions. From the survey of these facts and figures it appears that the Association, considered financially, is in a most safe, solid, and prosperous condition, and that the year under review has marked an advance over those preceding in the increase in its properties as well as in its current income, and especially in the indications of increasing strength and self-reliance in its schools and churches. The great solvent of all difficulties, lubricating whatever causes friction, is money, plenty of money. Though charity be "the greatest thing in the world," the needed money is the oil of gladness to the heart of the self-denying missionary, and of the anxious secretary alike. Let the churches make abundant this supply and the record of the year to come will occasion increased good will toward men and more thanksgiving unto God.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE APPOINTED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING HELD IN NORTHAMPTON, OCTOBER, 1890.

The object of the appointment of this committee is stated thus:

"In view of the enlarged work of the Association and of the increasing diversity of its labors for the Negro, the Indian, the Mountain White people and the Chinese, it is asked by the officers that a committee of conference, representing the churches, and consisting of seven members, be appointed to visit the office of the Association for conference with the executive officers concerning the increasing needs of the Association, the adaptation of its present methods to the enlarged conditions of its work, and for such suggestions as may appear desirable."

In accordance with this vote, your committee, with the exception of one of its members detained by imperative business engagements, have twice assembled at the office of the Association in New York, and have had full and free conference with the officers and members of the executive committee. They have also sought by correspondence and inquiry to inform themselves of the true condition of affairs, and thus to be prepared to offer suggestions, in accordance with the desire expressed in the vote.

We are happy to be able to say that the report which we present is unanimous, and is in substance and so far as possible in form and expression, the utterance of the entire committee. Every facility has been afforded us by the officers to inspect their books and learn their methods of business, and to make such inquiries as we deemed important.

In the history of the past, and in the present condition of the Association, we find cause for gratitude to God and especially that under his guidance the interests of the great enterprise have been committed to faithful men, who have done their work with heartfelt desire to administer in the best way the solemn trust committed to their charge.

It gives us great pleasure to express our confidence in the present officers, not only as men of marked ability, but as those to whom the welfare of the Association has been personally dear and who have labored for it with unremitting toil. At times, moreover, the force has been insufficient for the amount of work demanded.

That there has never been a failure of judgment in special cases or misunderstanding arising from the embarrassment of a heavy correspondence, would be too much to expect.

Taking for granted the increasing needs of the Association, of which we shall speak more fully by and by, the main question before us is given in the words of the vote upon which we were appointed, viz: "The adaptation of its present methods to the enlarged conditions of its work."

Your committee would rather have omitted the word "present," as in their view enlarged conditions require new methods. An extensive business must be carried on in a somewhat different way from a very limited one. There must be more generalship in the management of an army than in the command of a brigade. The control of a great Association like this should be conducted upon large and comprehensive principles, and with the idea of educating all the teachers and missionaries in its employ to a high degree of responsibility and trustworthiness. It has been said by some that the cause was suffering from excessive management, that subordinate workers have been held too much in leading-strings, and that the officers have interpreted their obligations as requiring them to exercise too minute a supervision over details which would be better left to others.

In regard to this we have made careful inquiry and we believe that a greater degree of independence might be granted to many of the departments. The heads of colleges and schools might be required to assume the responsibility of some things which hitherto have burdened the central office. We wish to relieve the labors of the secretaries, and we think it might be done by general appropriations which would intrust to others the decision of many minor and subordinate things with which they are now perplexed. Of course those who are intrusted with these appropriations should be required to render a strict account of their expenditures, and to keep closely within the limits assigned. They should not be allowed to involve the Association in debt, or to draw upon its funds for anything more than the grant made to them. But it does not seem necessary that they should be hampered in their work by having no discretion granted them in exigencies that are constantly recurring.

Moreover, the colleges and principal schools ought to have in view the hope of complete independence. We believe that thus far they have been in great degree subjected to central control. This has doubtless appeared necessary to the officers, and a part of their solemn obligation. But the enlarged conditions to which they refer require enlarged methods. If these institutions are to grow and prosper, they must become self-governing as well as self-supporting. The object of this Association is not to perpetuate itself, nor to hold the largest amount of property in its own control, but to prepare the way by which those who now need guidance and direction for every footstep shall be able to walk alone. The day is certainly coming when colleges and schools at the South must be left to themselves and their own special guardians. While it cannot be said that there is now an exact parallelism between these colleges and our home missionary institutions at the West, yet we hope at some time there may be, and that time will never come without preparation. Self-government can never be learned without a chance to exercise it.

If the work of the Association increases, as it must, no central force, however numerous, can keep the run of all the minute affairs of the institutions that have grown up under its fostering care. There must be a movement, cautious, but yet manifest, towards independence. A prudent oversight does not necessarily imply an examination into every particular detail. In fact such an examination, especially if it involves delay in carrying on the work, while the question of particular expenditures and of the smallest items is transmitted to headquarters and there examined, and the answer returned to the distant field, may seriously embarrass the missionaries and superintendents in their work, and result in wounding their feelings, and taking the very heart out of their enterprise. That there should be as prompt a rendering of business accounts as may be consistent with the best work is certainly true, but it is difficult to answer every minute question at once, and the employés of the society should be men who can be trusted, although they ought to be made to understand the need of accuracy and promptness, and the fact that the churches expect a judicious use of the means committed to them.

In our late war many were the complaints of the officers in the field that they had to wait and sometimes lose the best opportunities by the claim that all decisions must be made at Washington.

A tendency to such centralization as shall impede rather than promote enterprise is much to be deplored. And while we do not say that the complaint which is made of such a tendency is wholly sustained, yet it is well that the complaint should be heard, since a tendency may be expected to increase, and the evils of it will be greater in proportion as the work of the Association accumulates. We are to inquire carefully into the direction the management is taking, and if it be toward too great an assumption of power, it is well to be warned that the churches will not be satisfied. Let it be said plainly then that some complaints of this sort have been found to be just; while some perhaps have come from those who have had a personal grievance that led to a prejudiced view and others from laborers in the field whose zeal may have outrun their discretion. But zeal and discretion are rarely mixed in due proportions. It would be a pity if all the zeal were in the missionaries and all the discretion in the management. The danger is that the discretion of the officers will sometimes be exaggerated by the zeal of those at the front, and hence may arise a want of sympathy between two, which may be very injurious to the common cause. But there is need of caution on both sides. A subtle feeling of estrangement is worse than open hostility, and may grow up before either party is aware of it unless the danger is fairly seen.

The truth is there is a great difference between the work of the secretaries and that of preachers and teachers at the front. To each one his own task seems hardest, or as the old proverb says: "Everybody knows where the shoe pinches." There is no faithful worker who does not sometimes, like Elijah, become discouraged, and if he does not wish that he might die, at least he wishes that he could change work with somebody else.

Nothing can absolutely prevent some difference of opinion between those who have the ultimate decision of expenditures and those who are in the field. Your committee would recommend on the whole a more comprehensive treatment of the institutions under their care. It would be well if the trustees were made more independent. At the same time those in the field must remember that the management cannot run the Association in debt and that appeals equally urgent are made from many different quarters.

The difficulties are great and must require patience and forbearance on both sides, but we believe on the whole that there should be a stronger encouragement toward self-government as well as toward self-support.

The great cost of the administration, rendered necessary in part by the complicated nature of the work and the great variety of details brought to their notice, is another reason calling for a new method as soon as it may be introduced. If these institutions, colleges and schools could be set upon their own feet, and become like Hampton, an inspiration and a joy—or since that is too much to be expected at once, if they could be advanced gradually towards independence, and a spirit of emulation awakened in them to learn the art of self-government, the work of the central office might be greatly relieved. We know that the attainment is a difficult one and the obstacles many, but let it be seen that we are moving towards this goal. As that time approaches the labors of the administration may be lessened, or may be directed towards new fields, and the work of teaching and evangelization extended until there shall not be a county in the South, nor a cabin among the Negroes or the mountain whites, that shall not be within the reach of Christian influences. While the arduous and faithful labors of the secretaries deserve our gratitude, we are looking for a time when they may be more productive. We desire to see such improvements as may enable them to delegate a large part of their work to those who are on the field, and hold them responsible and educate them to be worthy of the trust.

We look for the time when all our institutions at the South shall reach the stature of manhood, and though the development must be slow, we long to see the evidence of growth. The Association cannot maintain its hold upon the affections of the churches, and the confidence of her patrons, unless there is a vigorous forward movement that looks not merely to enlargement, but to a completion of the work in final victory.

Your committee has been confronted with the question: Why has not the Association founded a greater number of Congregational churches at the South? This is no new question, but was ably treated in the last annual report of the executive committee, from which we quote: "We are called not only to multiply Congregational churches in the South, but also to see to it that they do more than wear our name. They should understand and honor our principles. * * * We could plant churches much more rapidly and make them receptacles for missionary funds if we would yield to the temptation to plant them for the name of it. * * * Our schools are doing much work that is usually done in churches."

Your committee acknowledge all this, and feel the force of it, nevertheless we heartily believe in the value of church work as an educating force among the freedmen. This work has not been carried on as vigorously as it might have been, and the results are discouraging. It is high time to press forward in the hope of developing self-sustaining churches. There may be risk, but there can be no gain without it.

We do not underestimate the difficulties, but on that very account the preparation should be entered upon, in such a degree and manner as may be ever looking towards an education in responsibility. While confidence is a plant of slow growth, it must be extended in some degree to men, if we ever expect them to be trustworthy.

It is true that the history of churches in other denominations is not encouraging. Their standard is very low, both in morals and in knowledge of the Bible. Congregationalism presupposes a good deal of intelligence. Even where an educated minister could be obtained, either white or colored, it would have been premature in most cases to leave the churches to the independent direction of their affairs. There are serious difficulties to overcome which require time, and a long and gradual training, before we can hope for much progress in this direction. Besides, the system of Congregationalism has been practically unknown at the South, and the effort to reform and educate the colored race cannot be made in a strictly denominational way. What is done here may not meet the desires of ardent lovers of the church of the Pilgrims. A good deal of time must elapse, and education and practical industry and thrift greatly increase, before independent churches can be numerous among the colored race.

Nevertheless, and for that very reason, efforts must be made looking in that direction. There must be a seed time before the harvest, and we cannot help thinking that too little effort has been made to plant our New England polity, with its freedom-loving and educating power, in the Southern States. It is needed for all classes. It will awaken a new self-respect and desire for improvement. Yet the number of churches founded by this Association is hardly adequate to the amount of money expended and the labor bestowed. It may be that we expect too much, but even that is always better than to expect too little.

In connection with this, your committee would call attention to the signs of improvement manifest in the colored race in recent years. An able writer in the Atlantic Monthly of June last has set the facts of the case in clear light. Were there time it would be pleasant to enumerate them. The writer entitles his article, "What the Southern Negro is doing for himself." He is building better homes. The old one-room cabin does not satisfy him. He is buying land. In Marion County, Georgia, 50 per cent. of the people own homes. He is laying up money. Fortunes of $10,000 are not very uncommon, and there are instances of $50,000 or even $100,000 owned by one man.

While the Southern States are doing vastly more than formerly for education, and in some instances are increasing the ratio of their school population more rapidly than at the North, there is also a great willingness on the part of the colored people to pay for their higher training. At Atlanta the tuition paid by colored students equals thirty-four per cent. of the expenses of the institution, a proportion which is the same as that at Harvard University. Parents are denying themselves for children's education. They are learning economy for higher objects. At Athens, Ga., a colored man testified that a man could "live mighty good on thirty-five cents a week."

Meanwhile they are aspiring to a higher condition in every way. They are developing mechanical ingenuity and inventive power beyond all expectation. Take this single fact. The Patent Office at Washington presents the record of no less than 5,000 colored patentees, of every sort of invention from a gridiron to an automatic switch for railroads.

Why do we mention these facts and linger on them? Because in the first place, they are a great credit to the American Missionary Association, which was first in the field, and whose influence, directly or indirectly, has been powerful in promoting these results. When men ask what has the Association accomplished, it is not enough to point to its schools and colleges and churches—we must look over the whole South. In every county and every hamlet its elevating power has been felt.

But, secondly, these facts convince us that the time has come to launch out upon a broader scale, to plant more churches, and give them greater independence. Both schools and churches must be entrusted, in a larger degree, to the colored people themselves. Of course there are difficulties. It is easier to see the need than to define the limits. But in our view the time has certainly come when a stronger movement should be made towards planting churches and providing them with educated ministers, and giving both pastors and people opportunity to try their own self-governing power. We will not allow that Congregationalism is wholly unsuited to the South nor that the Negroes are incapable of being trained in its privileges. We must take some risk in order to train them. We must trust something to the dark, unpromising soil before we can see a harvest to the honor of God and the benefit of the nation. We are in danger of making the same mistake at the South that was made forty years ago at the West, in letting other denominations do the work which should be done and can be better done by ourselves.

The disposition to inquire into our forms of government and worship should be encouraged, and we think the time has fully come when a larger effort should be made to plant churches and to entrust them, in some degree, with the management of their own affairs. Self-government in the church will lead to self-government in the state. Wisely or unwisely, the colored people have been entrusted with the ballot in state and national elections. They ought to be trained, therefore, to responsibility in their churches. Efforts of this kind may have at first only a partial success, but any degree of success is better than none, and there never can be a full success but by preparatory stages. When greater responsibility is put upon them, if it be only by light weights at the first, and gradually increasing, they will grow to a greater strength. By this means the work in the central office will be lightened, and power reserved for still broader plans. In short, the work of this Association looks towards an ultimate end, namely, to raise up a generation that shall do for themselves what full grown men ought to do in all departments of knowledge and Christian work. The world moves fast in these days and progress is demanded, that may at least make clear the hope of complete victory in a regenerated nation, and in lifting all the degraded races among us to a high Christian level, where they can both govern and care for themselves.

Regarding the rights of missionary workers it certainly should be agreed that all have equal rights of appeal to the executive committee, in all matters pertaining to their own interests or to the interests of the Association. We cannot emphasize too strongly the esteem in which our missionaries and teachers are to be held. Their work is one of great self-denial. Their position has, in almost all cases, been painful and humiliating, and often perilous. We cannot help regarding a teacher among any of the classes towards whom the Association directs its efforts, whether Negroes, or Indians, or Chinamen, or mountain whites, as exposed to far greater trials than missionaries to foreign lands. They must necessarily share, to a considerable extent, the life of those to whom they minister. They must not only give up social privileges, but often endure marked scorn.

Those who submit themselves to such trials are not always regarded as highly as they deserve to be. Paul speaks of himself and his fellow laborers as being made "the filth of the world and the offscouring of all things," and it is evident from such expressions that his sensitive spirit felt the scorn of men. But it is sometimes imagined that those who bear these trials without complaining are less sensitive than others, and their very hardships are regarded as lowering them somewhat in the social scale. The Christian public can never overestimate the debt owed to those who make themselves of no reputation that they may do Christ-like work. It is not strange that those who are suffering the trials to which we allude should feel peculiarly the need of sympathy from those who have given them their commission. Their letters and appeals may come to the officers of the board at a time when they are much pressed with business, and in some instances may appear unreasonable and injudicious. Nevertheless, they must be answered with great patience. If the demands cannot be met, they must at least be very gently denied.

There is a way of granting a request that is sometimes humiliating, and there is a way of denying it that may leave behind a feeling of heartfelt sympathy. It has been the gift of some eminent statesmen to be able to send away rejected applicants, with a greater sentiment of good-will than if their request had been granted. We deem this matter as worthy of special emphasis, because the officers themselves have told us that their letters were not always kindly received. Whether this indicates fault on either or both sides we cannot tell, but it certainly demands patience and an endeavor to promote good feeling.

But not only should the missionaries and teachers be permitted free access to officers of the Association, they should all be encouraged to hold full and unembarrassed correspondence with the churches and the auxiliary societies which represent them. It would be a strange thing, and would sound strangely to the public, if those who give money to support the missionaries, and spend much time in trying to awaken interest and enthusiasm in their behalf, and organizing plans for their more pressing wants—it would be strange, indeed, if these patrons of the Association should be debarred from direct correspondence with those whom they support.

Complaint has been made that the Woman's Home Missionary Association is not permitted to receive letters at first hand, but that the missionaries and teachers are instructed to write to New York, where their letters will be received, and such extracts as the New York officers select will be forwarded to the Woman's Association. We hope that the mere statement of this grievance or misunderstanding may be sufficient to obviate any such difficulty in the future. Let the channels of communication be wide open between all who love the work from one end of the land to the other.

It is not easy to say which department of the work is most pressing. The choice is about as difficult as it was for the Irishman when he could not feed his large family, to decide which one of the children his kind hearted neighbor might adopt.

The colored people were the first objects for which the Association was founded. It is impossible to do too much for them. But the Indians are not less needy in proportion to their numbers, and every motive of shame for our country's dishonor calls for their relief. We have spilt much of our best blood for the colored man, but we have fought against the Indian, and slain far more than we have converted. A fearful debt is upon us for them.

We have abused the Chinamen, and yet they remain among us, as if God were in his providence forcing it upon us to fulfil our duty by them and save China through her representatives here.

And what shall we say of the mountain whites? Until lately we have scarcely waked up to the fact that there are so many of our Saxon blood, as pure Saxon as any in America, and yet degraded to the level of our pagan ancestors. Which of all these classes shall we prefer? The call is for greater effort in all directions.

Only where special interest can be aroused by appeals for any one class, let that be done, that by awakening sympathy in different quarters all may be served. On the whole we believe that the course pursued by the Association has been fair, and in due proportion to the great wants of each department.

We believe that the Christian public appreciate a hopeful and confident spirit. In the few remaining years of the present century they hope to see this work in large part completed. The highest economy consists in doing it quickly. The rapid increase of population among the colored people calls for a tremendous effort, to raise up teachers who shall rescue them from barbarism and superstition, into which the illiterate are in danger of falling. Now is the time to press the work in every direction. New schools should be established and the outlay at the first must be generous and large hearted. A very small beginning has been made among the mountain whites. The salvation of the Indian, and our own relief from the stain of an everlasting reproach, depend upon speedy succor.

Yet this Association cannot increase its appropriatians unless authorized to do so.

The decision must be made on the ground of reasonable expectation of what the churches are likely to give. The experience of the past, together with a fair interpretation of the signs of the times, mingled with a belief that what is so greatly needed will not be wholly withheld, must form the judgment of the committee on appropriations. Good faith toward the missionaries and teachers demands that they should not contract obligations which they are not confident of being able to fulfil. We heartily commend the policy of the Association for their evident intention always to keep within their income.

We are brought, therefore, finally to the question how the enlarged needs can be met. What can be done to awaken greater interest, and bring before the churches larger information and more persuasive appeal? It may be safely said that if the vast amount of reading matter poured forth from the press could be checked for a few days, and no books or papers come before the members of our congregations excepting those pertaining to the work of the American Missionary Association, our treasury would receive an immense addition. But while reading matter is forced upon us in such overwhelming floods, while circulars and advertisements of all kinds fill our waste baskets, it is of no avail to multiply these expedients. By all means let the expense and trouble of sending out this unread literature, most of which goes to the ragman, be diminished rather than increased. We do not undervalue information, but let it be in very compact form and sparing quantity. Let it be sent also more to the newer churches, and those which do not contribute. The interest awakened there will bear fruit in time to come.

The secretaries and representatives of the Association have done excellent work in their public addresses, and have been cordially received by the churches.

We think also that there is no little value in the object lesson presented when representatives of each of the three races can look into the faces of a great audience; and together with others make the people know what God requires at our hands on behalf of the despised races.

Your committee have no wish to criticise the monthly publication of the Association. They regard it as ranking well with other magazines of its nature and feel that it deserves a place in the homes of all the members of our churches by reason both of the variety and the quality of its contents. They believe, however, that its value may be somewhat increased.

Your committee would suggest that some prominence be given to such things as the following: (a) Compact, vivid histories of each of the chartered institutions in the order of their establishment. (b) The development of the spirit of patriotism among the Freedmen. (c) The attitude of the Christian and educated colored people towards the mass of those who are still intellectually untrained and morally degraded.

Sample addresses delivered by graduates at commencement time would be of interest. And the promise of articles from able writers bearing on different phases of the work, to appear in succeeding numbers of the magazine, would serve to keep the attention of many directed to it. The committee see no danger of overestimating the importance of making the American Missionary such a publication that it will secure the interest of a largely increased number of readers.

But all these means, literary and official, will be insufficient, unless greater responsibility can be felt by the churches themselves. They must understand that the Association is doing their work, and that the officers ought to be relieved as far as possible from the burden of collecting money. The money should be raised cheerfully and in abundant measure without special solicitation. Every pastor ought to inform himself of the grand work that is going on through the Association, and see that his people are interested. Yet what is the fact? Not a third of the churches are represented in our treasury. Even deducting the weaker churches, old and new, which are still dependent upon the help of others, not much more than half of all the rest are annual contributors to this sacred cause.

Can it be that there is not a single member in these non-contributing churches who has interest enough in the great objects of the Association to ask for a collection? Can it be that their pastors imagine that the zeal, prosperity, and strength of their home work will be promoted by silence on this subject? Many a congregation would be happily relieved from the dullness of threadbare themes by the recital of scenes of national import from the work among the Negroes or the mountain whites. It is a terrible mistake for churches and people to be indifferent to this cause. There is hardly any better or more faithful service that a man can do for his parish or to strengthen his own influence than to show the Christian and patriotic motives which summon us even more loudly, if we would listen to the inner voice of the spirit, than the bugle call which awoke our soldiers to the defense of the Union.

We leave this matter in hearty confidence, that the work will be pressed on as never before; and that the churches will respond with larger gifts, every one of them, even down to the feeblest, desiring to have some share in the great enterprise. If this work be not carried on to a swift and final success, we may well tremble for the liberty and perpetuity of our nation.

The committee also recommended a series of resolutions, which after discussion were amended and adopted as follows:

Resolved. 1—That we have confidence in the officers of this Association, both as respects their ability and heartfelt desire to carry on the work entrusted to them, to the largest and best results, and especially their evident purpose and endeavor to keep the Association free from debt.

2—That we recognize the laborious and perplexing nature of the duties which they have been called to perform, and the embarrassments they have met in times past, from the extent and variety of their correspondence, at some periods too heavy for any force existing in the central office.

3—That to relieve the officers, and promote the highest efficiency of the work, there should be an advanced movement, looking toward the securing of funds and endowments for colleges and other institutions, and also toward educating them, by cautious but firm steps, to a larger sense of responsibility, which shall result at no distant day in securing funds under their own control and enabling them to assume a position of entire independence.

4—That while we are aware of the great difficulty of planting our churches at the South, we still believe in Congregationalism as an educating force; and would recommend a stronger effort to extend its influence and to awaken an enthusiasm for self-government as well as self-support.

5—That to promote the feeling of sympathy and co-operation, all missionary workers should have in the future, as in the past, the right of immediate appeal to the Executive Committee, and that to extend information and widen the interest as far as possible, the missionaries should not be abridged in their freedom of correspondence with the Woman's Association or with auxiliary societies.

6—That all correspondence should be conducted with cordiality and sympathy on both sides and that, in view of the complicated nature of the work in the field, special care should be taken in conducting the correspondence to avoid misunderstandings between the office and local laborers.

7—That the missionaries and teachers of this Association deserve constant remembrance in the affections and prayers of all lovers of Christ for the self denying work they are doing for him, and that the peculiar trials under which they suffer, unknown in any other field, call for the hearty sympathy of all true patriots and friends of humanity.

8—That since the work is pressing in every department by the rapid increase of the colored population; by the intense interest aroused by the wrongs of the Indian; by the urgent necessity of paying our debt of gratitude to the mountain whites, so loyal in the time of our nation's peril; by the opportunity of Christianizing the Chinamen; with all these doors of effort opened wider than ever, enlarged means are required, and the churches are summoned to more generous gifts, and especially to see to it, through their local conferences, that every church, according to its ability, should contribute to the support of the Association, and hasten on its work, in hope of the time when those who are now aided by us may become strong helpers themselves in the service of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. Approved by letter.

FORTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,

FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1891.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The American Missionary Association closes the forty-fifth year of its history with gratitude for its enlarged opportunities of service and the enlarged support which has enabled it to meet so many of them. Three years ago its current receipts were $376,216.88; last year they were $408,038.97; this year they have been $430,974.65. This sum does not include the income of the Daniel Hand fund. The aggregate of the means put into the charge of the Association this year is $482,419.21.

The year has been one of general religious interest and in many cases of special revival in the churches and schools, and nearly eight hundred conversions are reported as one of the results. These churches are among the poor, but they have raised $28,853.75 toward their own support, and have contributed $3,465 08 to missionary purposes. It has been a remarkable year in the thoroughness of the educational work which has been done. It has been characterized by a very general harmony among the churches and schools throughout the field. Problems have arisen from a lack of educated religious teachers, from the weakness of many churches, which are really missions, and the difficulty of bringing them rapidly to a condition of self support, and, especially, from the crowded condition of the schools. A great many difficulties would be solved if we could employ more thoroughly educated preachers. We are thus called to the development of the means of ministerial education, and are trying to put this department on a more permanent basis. In the light of the steady increase of support given us each year, we cherish a hope of being able to do this, trusting that the growth of the past is a pledge of growth in the future. The general work has gone on through the year with cheering success, both in the continuation of its regular lines of service, and in the planting of new schools and churches, and the introduction of pioneer evangelizing work in our many communities to which we hope soon to bring the advantages of better Christian education.

The extended and increasing work accomplished by the Daniel Hand Fund has benefited thousands of the needy people for whom it was given, and is opening up new channels of usefulness in the education of those who, in their turn, are thus enabled to elevate their race.

Grateful acknowledgment is renewed to the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society, for its grants of books, papers and lesson-helps to our poor mission Sunday-schools, and to the American Bible Society, for the gift of Bibles to the destitute in all departments of our work.

Professor W. E. C. Wright was appointed Field Superintendent early in the year, and has met the onerous responsibilities of his position with remarkable discretion and efficiency.

OBITUARIES.

Our obituary list is brief.

HON. EDWARD S. TOBEY, who died in Brookline, Mass., March 29th, was the President of the American Missionary Association for seven years, and of many other societies for long periods. Many departments of aggressive Christian work laid him under contribution, and with earnestness, devotion and business exactness he met these multiform responsibilities. He administered every office on thorough business principles, as his long experience well qualified him to do. In religious circles not less than in those of business, he was a man of influence and power.

REV. GEORGE W. BOTHWELL, D.D., for a time connected with the American Missionary Association, as a professor in its Straight University, and as pastor of its church in New Orleans, died in Brooklyn, N. Y. May 3d.

In the death of MR. W. D. HITCHCOCK, Treasurer of Tougaloo University, at Tougaloo, Miss., May 23d, the Association loses one who has been, for more than seven years, an efficient worker. His genial and friendly manner, and his business-like ways, won the favor of the planters around and of the business men of Jackson, and did much to popularize the school. Death came, after an illness of less than a week, from congestion of the brain. Mr. Hitchcock was born in Northern Ohio, about forty-two years ago. He leaves a wife and one daughter.

REV. HENRY WALTER CONLEY, Pastor of the church at Anniston, Ala., died March 21st. Mr. Conley was born a slave at Mobile, July 10th, 1852, and some years afterwards was taught his letters by a student at Talladega College. After his conversion, another student at Talladega now pastor at Little Rock, Ark., induced him to study for the ministry. As a student he was diligent and self-reliant. He graduated both from the normal and the theological departments, and while yet pursuing his studies was called to the church at Anniston. His ten years of service there were fruitful. The public feeling at Anniston was well expressed by a local paper: "No colored man ever lived in the city who was more esteemed. He had the confidence and friendship of all who knew him. He labored earnestly for the moral and intellectual elevation of his race, and his place will be hard to fill."

This year we change the form of report, and endeavor to give a summary of facts from many particular fields, classifying the information by States.

THE SOUTH.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA; VIRGINIA.

In Washington, D. C., the Association now supports the two professors in the theological department of Howard University. This department has been thoroughly re-organized; and the scholarship, large experience and high standing among our churches of its teachers, are guarantees of excellent service in ministerial education. In this city, both Plymouth Church and Lincoln Memorial Church are doing good work. The latter reports a cheering revival experience, with a hundred and thirty conversions, making over five hundred conversions in the ten years of its history. It has a daily kindergarten, a girls' sewing school, in which over four hundred girls have been taught, and a training class for Christian workers, under the direction of the pastor.

At Cappahosic, Virginia, a new school has been undertaken by the Association, under an energetic principal. The building has been completed, and a few weeks later the school year opened with every indication of large usefulness.

NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA.

In North Carolina the work of the Association stretches from the coast all through the state, up into its farthest western mountains, and includes seventeen churches, with nineteen schools and a great number of out-stations. In the rapid glance that can be given, much of this work cannot receive even a bare mention.

In Wilmington, both the church and the school, now grown to an enrolment of three hundred and eighty, have rejoiced in a gracious revival. Of the one hundred brought into the Christian life, more than half are pupils of the school, and large numbers in all grades are now taking part in the school prayer meetings. The principal says, "We are led more and more to believe that it is through the lines upon which the American Missionary Association is working that the greatest blessings are to come to this people."

The school in Beaufort was resumed three years ago in response to an earnest appeal from the people, after the experiment of conducting the work under local control had been tried and had resulted in failure. The change has wrought a manifest improvement. We are hoping much from the beneficial reflex influence of the school in solving difficulties in the church work there.

At Raleigh, our general missionary has continued the local church work in which fifty persons have been hopefully converted, and has also devoted much of his time to visiting and encouraging the churches all through that part of the State.

At Chapel Hill, the pastor not only superintends the school, now including a small industrial department, and preaches in the church, but also preaches in many churches of the neighboring region, and gives educational addresses, which are of great service. The year at Dudley, which records a revival, Oaks, Cedar Cliff, Melville, McLeansville, Hillsboro, Strieby, Salem, Pekin, and Troy, has witnessed steady and faithful service, with an encouraging degree of progress. While each of these stations is comparatively small, about a thousand pupils have been enlightened in their schools, and great numbers have been reached by their church and mission services.

The meritorious work in Lincoln Institute at All Healing Springs has gone on with much self denial, the teachers contributing from their slender means to the new building, now supplied for the increased needs of the school.

The Mountain work in western North Carolina is barely begun with the establishment of Skyland Institute on the cliffs at Blowing Rock, and Saluda Seminary near the southwestern border of the State. In our pioneer evangelist service careful explorations have been made among the mountain counties, and both great need of educational development and great popular interest in it have been revealed. If the means were at hand, we could establish a number of successful schools back among these mountains and furnish the local primary schools with teachers who could bring in a new era of educational progress. The work at Blowing Rock is growing, and has demanded better facilities and an increase of the teaching force. The large building at Saluda has been completed and rapidly filled with over one hundred and fifty pupils. This number could be doubled during the coming year. Prior to the erection of our seminary, the village had no school building, although there is still standing a house of logs without seats, window, door or chimney, which was formerly used for a school.

In South Carolina, Plymouth Church, of Charleston, one of the earliest churches formed by the Freedmen, is not only well forward in its efforts towards self-support, but has erected an excellent parsonage, and is reaching out in schools and missions among the colored people, with efficiency. The historic Circular Church of Charleston, the original work of which dates back to 1690, has been aided by a special grant from the Association during the year. Brewer Normal School in Greenwood, enlarged to more than twice its former capacity and refurnished throughout, was crowded last year by nearly five hundred students.

GEORGIA.

The work of the Association in Georgia comprises the instruction of nearly four thousand pupils and pastoral work in fifteen churches, the largest of which is the First Congregational Church, Atlanta. The general and industrial work of the Storrs School in Atlanta has been of a high character, comprising instruction to adults as well as children; the attendance has reached nearly five hundred. Three thousand dollars of aid has been continued by the Association to the work of the Atlanta University. The six hundred and thirty pupils of the Ballard Normal School at Macon are an advance even on the large attendance of last year; besides a fine course of industrial training, much work is also done in preparing successful teachers of public schools in different parts of the South. The Macon church is in a state of prosperity and has contributed nearly eight hundred dollars this year toward its own support and development. The church at Savannah is entirely self-supporting. A new church has been organized near Woodville, and is ministered to by a licentiate without any aid whatever from this Association. Beach Institute is doing its utmost to meet the educational needs of Savannah, where we are told that the entire school accommodations can take care of only about one thousand of the eight thousand colored children in the city.

As a result of the interesting revival work in our school at Thomasville a new church has been organized, and an edifice built for its accommodation. The church at McIntosh has 285 members, and is much aided by the work of Dorchester Academy with its 300 pupils. At Athens, the pastor has gathered an interesting congregation, and a new and beautiful church building has been erected almost wholly by the efforts of the people. There is also a new church building at Marietta, and another church has lately been organized near by with a hopeful outlook.

FLORIDA.

At Orange Park, in Florida, we are beginning a large educational institution, the influence of which we hope will reach throughout upper Florida and lower Georgia. Three extensive buildings are now completed, and the school has just been opened under one of our most successful instructors, formerly a principal in Atlanta and Claflin Universities.

ALABAMA.

In the state of Alabama, in which the last census counts 680,000 colored people, the work of our twenty-one churches and sixteen schools is closely associated with Talladega College, situated near the centre of the state. Its 500 students last year crowded all its buildings. The college course is now fully entered upon, and the theological department has been strengthened by the accession of the Rev. Carroll Cutler, D.D., formerly president of Western Reserve College and lately theological professor in Biddle University. The industrial work was increased last year, and now includes the cutting and making of garments, and the departments of nursing and cooking. The work of the school-rooms has been efficiently carried forward and a high standard of excellence maintained in all departments.

Emerson Institute, Mobile, gathers its nearly 400 pupils from a section where there is the greatest need, and has this year graduated the largest class in its history. The churches at Montgomery, Birmingham and Florence, with a group of seven other churches, are continuing their usual work with varying degrees of progress. Trinity School at Athens, still under the valued care of its first principal, celebrated its twenty-sixth anniversary last May and has won its way through evil report into a position of large influence among both the white and the colored people throughout that whole region. The Marion School has held its numbers to the close of the year better than ever before. Bible lessons have been given by the pastor twice every week in each grade of the school. Industrial work has been carried on at Selma, particularly among the girls. The Anniston church, consumed by fire, has been replaced. In northern Alabama an intelligent and progressive church has been gathered at New Decatur, and continues its work with fidelity in the face of trials. The mountain school at Nat, which was interrupted by the departure of our missionary on account of illness, has been begun again under new direction and will be steadily pushed forward.

TENNESSEE.

The work of the Association in Tennessee extends throughout the whole state, from the banks of the Mississippi to the mountains of the Cumberland Plateau and eastward, with about twenty-five hundred in the schools and nearly a thousand members in the churches.

At the extreme western side of the state, Le Moyne Institute has won its way into the highest esteem of the citizens of Memphis, and now enrolls seven hundred and twelve students, an advance during the year of nearly a hundred. Six of its teachers have been educated in our own schools. Large attention is given to industrial training, for which there is an excellent equipment. There is pressing need of a physical and chemical laboratory. The Memphis church, in aid of which we were formerly contributing largely, is entirely self-supporting. The church at Chattanooga is now nearly supporting its own work and within a year will probably do so fully.

Passing eastward to the middle of the state we come to Nashville, a great educational center. Here stands Fisk University, founded by the American Missionary Association at the close of the war, growing in power each year, and now wielding an influence felt throughout the entire South. Its last year was one of continued prosperity. The much-needed theological department is soon to be opened. Its fine building, in behalf of which the Fisk Jubilee Singers made an extensive tour last year, is nearly finished, and the thorough education of prospective ministers will soon be going on under capable and experienced instructors. A beautiful memorial building in honor of Gen. Fisk is now in course of erection.

At Knoxville this year, Miss Austin, who has been engaged in educational and missionary work for twenty years past, has transferred, with the cordial co-operation of the local board of trustees, the Slater Industrial School to the American Missionary Association, and we are now planning to develop and carry forward this school to the utmost extent of the means we can command for the purpose.

The rapid growth and large development of our mountain work in some directions, without a general proportionate increase of means for its support, has necessitated its contraction in other directions. We have aimed to continue and enlarge it where there was the best promise of its usefulness and the most cordial local co-operation. We have also endeavored to incite towards local support, by lessening or withdrawing aid wherever we have received information, that this ought to be done.

The Normal School at Grand View has been larger and better organized and better equipped this year than ever before, and the excellence of its work manifests itself in the teachers sent out this year to the surrounding public schools.

Twenty-seven of the pupils of Pleasant Hill Academy are now teaching in twenty-seven schools in the mountains, with over two thousand scholars. The secondary and indirect influence of our former schools, is not less beneficent than their primary work. In both places the rapid development has called for enlarged accommodations which have been supplied.

We have had to close some of the smaller and less promising schools, while the forces of others have been increased. The churches at Glen Mary, Deer Lodge, Harriman, Crossville and Pomona, have been faithfully ministered to, and a great deal of service has been done in preaching at out-stations. We have been forced out of Briceville and Pioneer by the introduction of convict labor in the mines, and the dispersion of the free miners. But our missionary at Bon Air mine has vigorously carried on the work so heroically begun a year ago by a theological student, organized a church and erected a building, almost entirely from local subscriptions. On the whole, the mountain work of the Cumberland Plateau is in a most prosperous condition, and reaches a largely increased number of the people. Passing eastward, the development in Big Creek Gap and Pine Mountain is promising. We have withdrawn from Athens with its churches and university, but we enlarge our aid at Mt. Verd which depends entirely on our teachers for school and religious service. The school at Jellico has been relegated to local support, which we are informed is amply able to carry it on.

KENTUCKY.

In the mountain work of Kentucky, the enlarged academy and earnest church at Williamsburg still maintain their leading position, and form the influential center of the region. The condition of some of the neighboring hamlets does not justify our maintaining a separate minister at each place, and they have been combined in preaching circuits. We have dispensed, in the interests of economy, with the two general missionaries, have regretfully declined to take up work of rich promise at Harlan Court House, and have discontinued the evangelistic work in Middlesborough. The church at Louisville has increased over $150 towards self-support; and the Chandler Normal School at Lexington is in a high state of efficiency and prosperity.

KANSAS; ARKANSAS.

In Kansas, the Association has discontinued its aid to the colored churches of Lawrence and Topeka, from the conviction that they should be left to their own resources and local assistance.

In Arkansas, we continue the church work at Little Rock, which is mainly supported by the people there, but decline to renew either school or church work at Fayetteville, because there is little prospect of usefulness to the church, and the educational work can be carried on by the city in our building, granted for that purpose. At Helena, the centre of a large colored population, a new normal school has been begun by the erection of a good building, and the appointment of capable teachers.

MISSISSIPPI.

Tougaloo University is located near the center of the state of Mississippi, in the midst of the "Black Belt," a region where there are only ten thousand white children to fifty thousand black, and in large portions of this region, the only influence among thousands of colored people, is that of teachers educated at Tougaloo. The year has been one of great profit in this institution, religiously, industrially, and in regular school work. Each year the scope and power of the school's influence broaden and deepen. Students have come from all parts of the state, and from four other states. The industrial work of the year has been specially valuable. The crowning feature of the girls' industries is the "Industrial Cottage" work. Under oversight of a teacher, four girls at a time keep house for a month, buying provisions, keeping accounts, going through the details of housekeeping, learning to take care of homes of their own. Special features of work have been the new training course for nurses, which has been most successfully inaugurated and in operation during the year; the completion of the Daniel Hand Building and repairs on Strieby Hall; the preachers' training class, conducted by the president for the benefit of the plantation preachers round about, which has effected great good; the development of a thorough, systematic, graded, daily study of the Bible, and a wider Sunday-school missionary work for the surrounding region, which has been heartily engaged in by the teachers and students.

At Meridian the school has been enlarged to accommodate a hundred more scholars, and a new church has been built.

LOUISIANA.

In Louisiana our churches are comparatively small and weak, but number in the aggregate eight hundred and sixty members. Through the summer, theological students have been preaching at several points under the direction of our general missionary.

Straight University has been under the charge of President Oscar Atwood, an experienced educator, during the past year and is now in the process of being elevated in its scholarship and standards, so that it can easily lead any institution for the colored people in the state. The aggregate of admissions at Straight University has been nearly six hundred. Between one hundred and two hundred have been turned away on account of lack of room. President Atwood reports a remarkable degree of self-denial on the part of students. The preparatory school, with two hundred and eighty scholars, founded by the Daniel Hand Fund, will compare favorably with any school of its grade in New England.

TEXAS.

In the great state of Texas we have made only a beginning of service. This empire state alone would furnish field for a large share of the entire means of the Association. The church work has gone on at Dallas, Paris, Dodd, Bois d'Arc, Helena, Goliad, Austin and Corpus Christi, with varying results. A general missionary has begun service, and we hope to secure means for the more energetic prosecution of work in this vast state.

At Austin, Tillotson Institute enrolled two hundred students, with a much larger average attendance than the previous year. The accommodations in the building are inadequate. The pressure upon the school-rooms has been very trying. The industrial work is receiving more development. It is intended to add a printing and a sewing department during the coming year.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

The opening of our work in Alaska is an interesting story of missionary self-denial, courage, constancy and success. Our missionaries there are now in charge of a school of three hundred pupils, and are bringing Christian light and education into the depths of barbarism and paganism, and have carried forward their work in a spirit of consecration, singular good judgment and tact in dealing with savages who more than once were at the point of destroying them.

We have received urgent appeals to extend our work to the powerful tribe of the Navajoes. There are also calls for work in behalf of the Apaches. If our means should warrant it and the way should be opened, we may be able during the coming year to do some service among these wilder tribes of the far West.

The S'kokomish Mission in Washington has gone quietly on under the efficient conduct of Rev. Myron Eells.

The Fort Berthold Mission reports that seventeen Indians were on confession of faith added to church membership last year. There are now five preaching places, where about two hundred attend service each week. The three Sunday-schools have nearly two hundred pupils. The hostile spirit has grown much less among the people, children are especially receptive, and a wide field is open among the Dakotas, Mandans, Rees and Crows. Our missionary urges strongly that we improve our present opportunity to establish a mission among the three thousand Crows.

Of the nearly five thousand Indians on the Standing Rock Reservation, it is fair to presume that we are reaching, more or less directly, six hundred people. The Indian is continually on the move. For eight months of the year he spends most of his time on the road between his village and the agency, where he gets rations every two weeks. During the larger part of the year we must catch him in transitu. A chapel at the agency must open its doors to him when he is at the agency for rations. During the four winter months most of the work must be done in the camps or villages, though the disturbance last winter gave opportunity at the central station for largely attended daily services. Many of the people are now ready to hear the gospel as never before. When Rev. T. L. Riggs led a party at the risk of their lives to Sitting Bull's village sixteen days after the fight and buried the bodies of the slain Indians, a profound impression was made on the hearts of their surviving friends and relatives. Their grateful feeling remains, and has opened many a home to our missionary work through all that region.

Sometimes as many as four hundred have been present at the Sunday morning service at the central station. The Sunday services at the out-stations have been well attended. The hospital is no small part of our mission equipment. A record of five hundred dispensing patients in three months incites us to push this part of our work. The outlook is not dark. The establishing of a sub-agency on Grand River and one at the mouth of the Cannon Ball will keep the people at home and increase the usefulness of our out-stations. There has been inspiration in our large congregations, but hand-to-hand work in the villages is the more effective. The Government has now made ample provision in the number of school-houses for the teaching of the children, but the teaching of the older people is still a part of our mission work.

The confusing and disorganizing influence of "the war" of last winter has seriously broken into our mission work and accentuates its present needs. No lesson of respect and obedience for law was learned by these Indians. Even the survivors of Wounded Knee now talk and act as if they were the victors. To the savage mind, they seem to have gained pretty much all they asked. This state of things must be encountered with increased missionary effort. Never was the demand more imperative upon us for this. Inasmuch as the abodes of so many are broken up and they are wandering restlessly about, we must follow them and get hold of them with the only power which can bring permanent concord and well-being.

On the Cheyenne River reservation, the out-station work, although carried on with constant zeal and efficiency, has not been satisfactory. The past year has accomplished but little, and much of that which had been gathered together has been scattered. Possibly this is the way the Master chooses to work. On Bad River, the church organized last year has grown in numbers and spirit, and there are encouraging indications along the Moreau River. The Cherry Creek station is full of hope and promise, but the other six Cheyenne River stations have gone to pieces. At Oahe, nine were received on confession into the church at the last communion. The Oahe school reports a smaller number of pupils at its opening this fall.

The Indian troubles of last year had a very bad effect on Rosebud Indians. Two thousand left their houses and spent the winter in seditions and revellings. About half of these have returned. But their houses were plundered and destroyed. Families were broken up, deeds of violence and robbery were committed, with an occasional murder. No dained ministers and pastors of their own. Therefore for the sake of protection, and liberty to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, they formed the African Congregational church. They were assisted by Mr. Granger, formerly of Wisconsin, and by Mr. Smith, a Northern man, then of Jefferson, Texas, who was afterward killed because of his political opinions."

The New Church at Goliad.

Rev. B. C. Church, of Illinois, became so impressed with the belief that he had a work to do for the Freedmen that he would hardly take no for an answer to his application. He finally set out for Texas in March under our commission, but paying his own expenses. Brother Peebles assisted him in securing a school at Goliad, and afterward coöperated with him, as did Brother Rowe also, in conducting a series of religious meetings. At the close of his school in June, the Association was able to offer him a small support, that his missionary labors, already affording great promise of the Divine blessing, might be continued. July 30th, he writes:

"We organized a Congregational church in Goliad, Texas, July 21st, of sixteen members, all heads of families—eight by letter and eight by profession. The next Sabbath, six others joined, five by profession and one by letter. Others are expected to join soon. We have had one of the most precious meetings I ever attended, characterized by deep conviction of sin, a clear and joyful conversion and consecration of every power and faculty to the good cause, and we think the work is still going on in many hearts. The house was still and great solemnity rested upon the people.

"The Goliad field is sufficient for the whole time of one man. There are two outstations about ten miles off that should have preaching and a Sabbath-school. I baptized five from one of these, and two from the other, and if I could be with them, I believe others would come soon."

Louisiana Conference.

Rev. S. S. Ashley, Acting President of Straight University, formerly of Massachusetts, and lately State Superintendent of Schools, North-Carolina, has acted as the successor of Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D., in superintending our church work in Louisiana.

I attended the meeting of the Louisiana State Congregational Conference while in Louisiana last March. While greatly interested in the evident piety and earnestness of most of the ministers and delegates, still I could but contrast their illiteracy and ignorance of the forms, and even of the creeds, of evangelical churches, as far as related to any intelligent enunciation of them, with what appears in the Northern Conferences. And yet this very assembling with the professors of Straight University, and other educated men, and particularly the part each had to perform as a representative, was a source of great benefit to them, and doubtless to the churches with which they are connected.

There are fourteen churches under our care in Louisiana. Six of them are in the country west from New-Orleans. Four of these are nearly two hundred miles distant in the interior of the State; these latter were gathered under the missionary efforts of Rev. S. W. Rogers, an educated colored man, partly of Indian descent, who was for some three years under commission of this Association as a school-teacher and preacher. The population in that section is largely colored, and is comparatively well-to-do. Many of the Freedmen own farms. Rev. S. W. Rogers was suddenly removed by death, July 8th, from the post where he has so diligently labored. It will be hard to repair the loss sustained by that community. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send qualified laborers to this fruitful field. None of those now acting as pastors are educationally fit for the places.

There are four churches in places suburban to New-Orleans, namely, at Greenville, Jefferson City, Algiers, and Gretna. These were formerly Free-Will Baptist churches, but connected themselves with our Conference under the advice of Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D. Most of the members are Baptists still. The churches mentioned have houses of worship, though of the plainest description, and some of them hardly comfortable.

In New-Orleans are four churches. That on Spain street was originally Baptist, and has made little progress under the pastoral charge of Rev. Isaac Williams, who is old and illiterate, and has crude notions of what a Christian church should be. During the past year, his church consented, at our suggestion, to have associated with him Rev. P. P. Procter, who is studying in the Theological Department of Straight University, and under his ministrations the church and Sabbath-school have improved.

The church on Johnson street has also been unfortunate in having an incompetent pastor, though of better education than most of the older colored preachers. The church has had few additions. Its title to the church property is disputed, and will involve a law-suit if retained. By the advice of Rev. Mr. Ashley the members of that church will probably unite with the new Central church, which is not too remote to accommodate them.

The University church was voluntarily merged in the Central church. The Saint James church divided, and with their pastor, Rev. Mr. Norager, a part united also with the Central. The remainder, after establishing their title to their church property by refunding to this Association what it had paid in aid of the enterprise, held to its old connection with the African Methodist church.

The Morris Brown church is still largely Baptist in its membership, though they adhere with their pastor to the Conference, where they found fellowship under the superintendency of Dr. Healy. Their punishment has been inflicted on any one. The result can easily be seen. It has produced a class of people who are acquainted with war and bloodshed. A year ago our young men had never known of these things, except from tales of their parents. Even those who were at home and were peaceful and loyal, are in a disturbed and restless condition. They feel that they have received no reward for their loyalty. The old villages and houses are broken up and the Indians are just floating around. In the work of the Rosebud Mission, only one of our stations has been in operation during the year. The year has been one of clinging to a sinking ship, holding on, hoping that help will come.

Our Normal Training School at Santee has reached the age of twenty-one years. These twenty-one years are years of growth and experience, and the results are full of significance. Instruction and training have been given to nearly a thousand pupils. These are scattered from the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains, and from Kansas to the Queen's Dominions. Their influence is already felt among all of these interior northern tribes, as pastors of the native churches, as missionary teachers and as leaders of their people. But the call for them is greater than the supply, and the new opportunities for missionary work painfully increase the demands upon the school. It emphasizes manual training not chiefly for economic reasons, but for intellectual and moral discipline, and its pupils are made self-reliant and ready. It is a great thing that these pupils go out among their yet heathen countrymen, telling the "good news" in the language in which they were born. The pre-eminence of this school is as a Bible school. The English and the Dakota Bibles lie side by side on its desks. This year a small text-book in the Dakota language, entitled "The Days of Jesus,"—Jesus Taanpeter, has been issued by the school press. From small beginnings this school has increased in buildings and teachers, until it has now a valuable plant, and a corps of teachers (including both industrial and academic) of twenty-three, with a yearly roll of one hundred and seventy five pupils. We are just establishing a department for teaching cooking and nursing, the first hundred dollars for which was given by a surgeon in the army; and we hope soon to have a hospital all complete. Other wants are pressing that will soon become absolute necessities. For however much the government may do in general Indian education, it will not educate our native preachers and missionaries. This the churches must do. This the missionary field demands.

THE CHINESE.

Seventeen missions have been sustained through the year, reaching a smaller number of Chinese, simply because fewer are coming to this country, and, therefore, the number that care to learn the English language is greatly diminished. But the teachers have been able to give more effective attention to leading souls to Christ, and there is almost a new epoch in the development of Christian zeal and character in our converts. Their missionary work in China implies a courage and a spirit of self-sacrifice which most American Christians might do well to emulate.

WOMAN'S BUREAU.

This department has developed steadily as the medium of communication with the thirty-six State Organizations now in co-operation with the National Societies.

Through it, attention is directed to special lines of work in which women are interested, supplies of literature and missionary letters are furnished and contributions solicited. The result is a marked advance in intelligence upon missions represented and corresponding interest in and aid to the work. The value of this department is emphasized by the fact that nearly two-thirds of our missionaries in the field are women.

OUTLOOK.

In view of what God has inspired his people to attempt through the American Missionary Association the past year, and in view of his large blessing upon this labor of love, we thank God and take courage. There is still much land to be possessed. We believe it is the day of God's power for America, and that he will make his people willing with large gifts and with consecrated labors to meet the need and opportunity of the hour.

BUREAU OF WOMAN'S WORK.

MISS D. E. EMERSON, SECRETARY.

REPORT OF SECRETARY.

Doubtless one of the mercies of a closing year to a missionary society is the obligation to review its record, since thereby blessings are disclosed, which in the press of daily care have been but dimly realized or entirely overlooked. Thus it is that we come out of the perplexity and anxiety of our year's experience with the buoyancy of undismayed hope and confidence as we count the encouragements for the help of those who would scan the record with us. We return heartfelt gratitude to God for the year of opportunity vouchsafed, and the continued manifestation of his power to work through so varied and limited instrumentalities in the accomplishment of so great results.

There is a special fitness in our bringing to you a testimony upon Woman's Work, in that nearly two-thirds of the six hundred missionaries employed by the American Missionary Association are women. This indicates that a large part of the work to be done in the field of the American Missionary Association is of a kind to which woman's qualities are best adapted.

The movement, therefore, that has led the women of the country to organize in State bands for better co-operation with the National Societies in the promotion of each cause, is warmly welcomed by the American Missionary Association, whose field offers this unlimited scope for woman's sympathy and efficiency; for its important work is to lift woman into true, intelligent womanhood, that shall purify and protect the family and home.

What have we together been doing to this end?

The Woman's Aid to the American Missionary Association in Maine has supported four missionaries, two among the colored people, one to the mountain whites and one to the Indians. The word returned to them from one teacher is, "Your timely aid has enabled me to help worthy boys and girls who could not have been in our school had it not been for our Maine friends. My girls have made advance in missionary spirit and intelligence as well as womanly character. Your letters have given me much encouragement and renewed zeal."

Another writes—"I have gathered the children into a Junior Christian Endeavor Society, where they are taking hold of Christian work with enthusiasm. Quite a number of the children will unite with our church. It is a joy to see them in their earnestness now, and promise for the future. It is the daily instruction, the mental discipline and moral influence of the Christian school that is needed to counteract the evil influences of the home and street. You can never know the good accomplished by the A. M. A. schools until you have an opportunity to compare two communities, one with, and the other without, that power for good."

The Female Cent Institution and Home Missionary Union of New Hampshire contributed the full support of one teacher, and something over, an encouraging record for this new Union in its co-operation with the Association and a pleasant surprise to us near the close of our year.

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of Vermont supported two teachers for the colored people, and contributed toward the support of a teacher to the mountain whites. One school is in a country region in the center of a large black population, and except as the teachers go to town, thirty miles distant, they scarcely see a white person for the year; yet we never hear a word of complaint. The work has been much enlarged, and now affords, besides the day school, home training to about sixty boys and girls. Three hundred have been in attendance the past year. To Vermont ladies the teachers write: "In this section the people were in inconceivable darkness at the time the Lord moved the hearts of a few of his faithful ones to plant this school, and even now, after nearly twenty years of light, they are still groping. But the work that has been done has transformed the wilderness into a place of home-like habitation. The old log cabins are being abandoned, and small, but cozy houses may be seen everywhere. During the present year many houses have been built within the range of a few miles." "We do thank you very much for the generous way in which you help us. Every day I sigh for the power to do more, but I can only give my time and myself, and so only by your help are we able to do our part well."

The Woman's Home Missionary Association, which represents Massachusetts and Rhode Island, co-operated in the support of eleven teachers; one to the Indians, three to the mountain whites, and seven to the colored people. They also provided necessary apparatus for the school at Cotton Valley, Alabama. The simple statement of eleven teachers in the three departments of this field, bears its own testimony.

The Woman's Congregational Home Missionary Union of Connecticut sustained one teacher in the school at Thomasville, Ga., and contributed toward the support of a teacher to the mountain whites. Connecticut ladies not associated with the State Union, yet united in this object, also supported one teacher in the Thomasville school. A Congregational church established here during the past year witnesses to the faithful Christian work of the teachers. A little company of women alone, they conducted even the Sabbath service until the steady religious interest culminated in the church organization. They write, "We look to the Connecticut ladies with much expectation for the present and the future. We need their support and prayers more than ever, now that our responsibilities are so increased."

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of New York supported three missionaries, one to the colored people, one to the mountain whites, and one to the Indians. The word from the South is, "Slowly and sometimes hardly perceptibly this work is doing that whereunto it is established. Hearts are being reached and souls are being aroused, and by-and-by life will come to those who now seem dead in trespasses and sins. This little cottage put here by the A. M. A. is an inspiration and a model; just now one is building like it. It is hardly large enough for three, and the man has seven children besides himself and wife, but four rooms are an improvement on one, over and over again. These are seemingly small things, but they mean much to our country because these women are mothers, these girls are the future mothers, and the home-life must decide the national life. I cannot change these homes any more than I can change yours, for womanly pride is not all lost here. Only by gently leading that pride to higher channels, and in my own home-life as a woman condemning what is amiss in theirs, can I help them. When womanhood seeks better things, then manhood must. I know you pray for me. Why? Because I could never do the work I'm doing if you did not." From the Indian field comes this word, "I am very happy here. I have a double joy—the pleasure of seeing for myself evidence of good accomplished, and the honor of representing so many other interested ones and receiving their sympathy and prayers. I mean to pray oftener than I have done, that God will make this work of yours a joy to you through what you have done."

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of Ohio supported two missionaries, one to the Indians and one to the colored people. The latter writes, "In one wing of the Home are two rooms full of girls busy sewing, from the patchwork to the fine button-holes, cutting garments, etc., while at other times delicious fragrance in the air tempts one to walk in and see if the steak and coffee are really as good as they smell. But these classes are not all. Prayer meetings, temperance meetings, White Shield and White Cross meetings, King's Daughters' meetings, Bible Bands and Literary societies almost bewilder one, yet there is a place for each one, and all seem to move harmoniously together. All these are doing good. 'God is faithful who promised,' and in his good time we confidently look for conversions. Pray for us that our faith and works may not fail."

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of Illinois supported three teachers, two to the colored people and one to the Indians. The latter writes: "When I came here it was with a firm determination not to become attached to these Indian children as I had to the colored children, but I find that every week I am becoming more and more interested in them. It gives one the heartache to think of the homes to which they must shortly return. One has such a feeling of helplessness before this great mass of ignorance and sin. I wish it were possible for me to give a description of these children in such words as would place them in a true light before you. I know as Christian women you regard them as God's children, and as such you desire to help them to live a higher and better life than their parents, but if you could be with them a short time you would learn to love them for their own sakes."

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of Minnesota sent us full support of two teachers and partial support of a third, all in a school for the colored people. These ladies say: "Nothing encourages us more than to believe that so many warm hearts are interested in us and our work. Is it not akin to the sympathy which is felt for all by our Elder Brother? Our thanks to all. I only wish you good people could know how helpful has been all the aid you have afforded us. One bright-eyed boy, as black as night, present at our Christmas tree, said, 'Pears like them Minnesota folks are bricks.' I love my work. The fascination grows upon me. I willingly give to it my time, strength, and life, if need be. I attribute the lack of workers in part, at least, to the fact that not all people have learned the satisfaction to be found in laboring for these down-trodden ones. The hard work, the isolation, the many vexations are not a feather in the balance, compared to the pleasure to be found when once we espouse the cause of the sinful and needy."

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of Wisconsin sustained a missionary to the colored people, and contributed half the support of another. The word to them is: "Two Christian young men called one day to ask if I would aid in organizing a Christian Endeavor Society among the teachers in the city schools. It was a refined, educated company of young people that met in a pretty parlor, and I helped them to form a society that now seems full of promise. Recently our two societies at Tillotson invited the Christian Endeavor Society in the city, to join us in the observance of Christian Endeavor Day, so they came over here Sabbath night. We followed the entire programme issued for the day by the United Society, and had a delightful meeting. For our missionary talk, an account was given of Miss Nancy Jones, a former student in the A. M. A. schools at Memphis and Fisk. She is now bravely working for her people in Central Africa, and sustained by the W. B. M. I. A generous collection was taken to aid in her work, and we hope that interest and prayers were enlisted. How all work for the Master is intertwined, and all are one in Christ Jesus."

The Woman's Home Missionary Union of Iowa sustained three teachers in one school. The Principal writes of the eight graduates from the Normal grade: "I know your hearts will rejoice when I tell you that all of the class are professing Christians and desire to go forth and help others of their race to higher, better lives. You have helped on the work by your generous gifts more than is possible for me to tell you. The influence of our united work for our Master will broaden and widen during the coming years, and the full results we can never know."

We have mentioned in this list only those State organizations which have contributed the full support of one or more teachers, but interest has awakened all along the line of both far Western and Southern Unions, and we have received money contributions, ranging from a beginning up to three fourths the cost of a teacher from the Unions of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, California, Louisiana, Alabama, Florida, and North Carolina.

We have furnished large supplies of literature to the officers of the Unions and to auxiliaries, and, whatever portion may have lain unread, we have received many appreciative replies, with reports of interesting meetings on A. M. A. work. We would here make mention of the thoughtful kindness of ladies in their correspondence—the carefulness to avoid making extra burdens—the pains taken to write of the use made of literature and field letters, and the expected results.

While women at home have been thus interested, all our teachers have been busy with the diverse plans that fill a missionary's mind and time. The principles of work are the same wherever the particular field; from the school to the class, from the class to the individual pupil, and the home which he represents. Whatever Christian sympathy and wisdom can devise to win and train the young for Christ and humanity, is undertaken by these enthusiastic workers. Whatever is found helpful in connection with the home church, is put in operation with the school if there is no church, and often additional if there is a church. This seems the only way to hold the young people against the attractions to them of street life, the saloon and low amusements. But remember that these missionaries have in the field no sympathizers or counselors as have you at home. The little band at each station, sometimes only two women alone, plan and carry on the whole system of work.

We have shown you by their own words that they need your sympathy, and the inspiring help of your prayers, as the American Missionary Association needs your help in the raising of funds to sustain them and to send out more laborers into this field. Our special work is to lift up to noble manhood and womanhood, those who from no fault of their own are helpless. It is a great undertaking—a broad field. Where is there another so accessible, so vital to the prosperity of our own country—so pregnant with power for the bringing of all nations to Him whose name shall be honored above every name? Do you wonder that we appeal to you?

pastor is not wanting in ability, but has been accused of gross immorality. He never has been under commission of this Association. If he can satisfactorily reëstablish his character, he might be useful elsewhere, but his influence for good in that church can probably never be regained.

The Central Church, made up in large part from the Saint James, with a few from the Morris Brown, and a few from the University, with some additional from other churches, was organized in July last, under the pastoral care of Rev. C. H. Thompson, D.D., a professor of the Theological Department of Straight University, and a well-educated and competent colored minister.

The church edifice of the Fourth Presbyterian Society (white) was purchased, with some aid from this Association, at a cost of about twenty thousand dollars, and the first services were held therein on the twelfth day of June. This house is commodious and centrally situated. The people are well united in their pastor. A fine Sabbath-school was formed under the management of Mr. Ashley. There have been, from the start, good congregations upon the Sabbath, and a good attendance on all the meetings of the church. It is hoped this will be a model church of the Pilgrim polity for Louisiana and the South-west.

MISSISSIPPI CHURCHES.

The Tougaloo Church, in connection with the University there, might be said to be the ripe fruit of that missionary enterprise.

Happily there has been a unity of purpose and an earnestness of endeavor among the missionaries rarely found so perfectly combined. Rev. E. Tucker has been a faithful preacher and a beloved pastor. Mr. H. S. Beals and family, for ten years among the Freedmen, lose none of their original fervor, and the rest are hardly less devoted in their respective spheres. The result is, that a holy influence seems continually to pervade the institution, and the church is, as it ought to be, an instrument of God for the healing of souls, and the building up of the divine kingdom. One of the teachers, Miss E. J. Etheridge, has died at her post during the year. She had been under commission some five years, and had consecrated herself to the work for life. Her daily life afforded an example of the noblest devotion to humanity, for the love of Christ and human souls.

There is only space for the following extract from a letter of Mr. Beals, out of many that might be given:

"We are enjoying another precious revival. For several weeks a visible change has been going on in our school and family. Some faces have been gathering light and cheerfulness, while others have been gathering gloom and sorrow. At last the crisis came. Sinners came voluntarily to ask for counsel and prayers. One lady, a late scholar from Vicksburg, came with tears to beg us to lead her to the Saviour. Young S., whom you may remember, came out boldly and nailed his colors to the cross.

"On last Sabbath Brother Tucker came to officiate at our communion service. Seventeen more came forward to unite with our church. Among them were three members of the Granberry family—the third son with the daughter and the mother—a whole family now gathered into the church, and I verily believe into the kingdom of Christ! a mother and four children, the latter just come to maturity, all nearly six fe in height, able and intelligent in the first degree, late from slavery, all enlisting in t army of Immanuel, girding on the armor and entering the conflict. This aged mot pours out her daily thanksgiving to God for this institution, that gathered her chil here to lift them up from ignorance and death; that brought her here to introd e her to the gateway of Paradise. Others are alike joyful. A marked feature of this work of grace is its quietness. Last evening the solemn stillness was almost oppressive, and yet I have never seen such intense feeling. Nearly forty arose to offer prayer, or tell their joyous hopes of heaven, and invite others to journey with them. A lately bereaved mother cried for mercy. A young man arose voluntarily, and declared his intention to seek the Saviour's love and forgiveness. Little children were melted to tears, and here and there suppressed sobs were heard from older and sterner hearts. Young Iverson, walking from his home four miles distant, came to tell how full his heart was of gratitude for such a day of visitation for his people. Had you walked about the buildings late at night, you would have heard the voice of gentle, earnest prayer from lips lately unsealed by the power of Christ.

"Little Alice, scarcely ten years old, with the calmest, sweetest smile, declared she loved the Saviour. She is just up from a sick-bed, where her life was in imminent peril, but her patient heart endured it all with wonderful resignation.

"O dear brother! this is glorious. God is giving the people a freedom of which they little dreamed at first."

New Ruhamah Church

is situated in Monroe County, in the extreme eastern part of Mississippi. There is a white Independent church in the neighboring county, (Lowndes,) remarkable for its anti-slavery principles, held during many years in the wilderness of slavery. The sympathy and moral support of this church, of which he was a member, doubtless encouraged our missionary, Joseph F. Galloway, to preach to the Freedmen, start a Sunday-school for them, and finally, after the conversion of some nineteen persons, decide to organize a church. He has, on the other hand, had discouragements innumerable—in the opposition of the hostile whites, the violence of the Ku-Klux, the ignorance and fears and superstitions of the blacks, their poverty, and his own; in the small appropriations from this Association, in the want of a suitable house, (though he and his people put up a log structure with their own hands,) in the distance he had to go on horseback from his home, and the crossing of a river not fordable, when often he had not money enough of his own to pay his ferriage; in all these and many more ways has the devotion of this self-constituted missionary and the quality of his works been tried. I trust he has not built of hay or stubble.

NOTES.

1. Seventeen missions have been sustained, and all but three of them during the full twelve months. Two have had one month's vacation and one—that at Vernondale, a suburb of Los Angeles—was commenced on March 1st. Thirty-seven workers have been employed, fourteen of whom have been Chinese. The total number of months of labor is 390.

2. The expenses have been as follows: For salaries, $7,972.25; rents of mission houses, $2,820.70; incidental expenses, including fuel and lights, water, furniture, books, traveling, printing, etc., $1,103.80. Total, $11,896.75.

The resources have been: The appropriations of the A. M. A., $7,291.65; receipts at auxiliary's treasury as follows: From local missions, $3,194.10; individuals, $784.50; Eastern friends, $427.50; rents—permanent property account, $183.60; other items, $15.40. Total, $11,896.75.

3. Comparing this year's work with that of preceding years, our first impression is depressing. For though we report one more mission than last year, the aggregates which represent the number of Chinese reached by us are smaller than ever before. This is not because there has been less diligence or aggressive enterprise, but because fewer Chinese are coming to California, and therefore the number that care to learn the English language is greatly diminished.

Further scrutiny yields a much more cheerful view. This diminution in the number has enabled the teachers to give closer and more effective attention to the main thing—the results which alone we can count as success—the leading of souls to Christ. And in this respect the statistics show no diminution, while, in fact, we are conscious of increasing power and increasing fruitfulness.

And when it comes to the tokens of growth on the part of our Chinese brethren,—growth in largeness of outlook, Christian enterprise, practical consecration, unity of counsel and brotherly love, this year is almost a new epoch. The new departure in their missionary work in China, involving as it does an extra expenditure of about $5,000, a large portion of which is already subscribed, implies a courage and a spirit of self-sacrifice on their part which most American Christians might emulate.

The following from a recent letter will illustrate something of what remains to be done there. How much more in the sixty-one counties of the State of Mississippi, where no such efforts as his have been put forth, or even attempted!

"I have lately heard several freed people tell their experience previous to joining the church. They all seem to think they must go to hell before they can be saved. One said she passed over the grates of hell on her knees; another said she passed through, but got her foot hung in the other side, and had hard work to get out, but at last she succeeded and went on a little way, and met a little man, whom she took to be Jesus, and he spoke such sweet words to her, that she thought he had forgiven her sins. Another passed through hell and saw her mother there, and on the other side in a white house saw her child, and that was her 'experience;' another passed through and went on and met Jesus, and he told her to follow big Mary; and yet another went to hell and saw a barrel of blood there, and thought it was the blood of Jesus, shed for the remission of sins, so he concluded his sins were forgiven. They all say they really did see these things, but when pushed will say that they dreamed them.

"It is sad indeed to be in most of their meetings, and witness the confusion and disorder that prevail. They seem to have mistaken utterly the spirit of religion. They have so much singing, and shouting, and praying, all going on at once, that scarcely any thing can be heard distinctly. In jumping over the floor, they keep time with their feet like taps on a drum. They have a great deal of foolish talk about seeing sights, and hearing voices, and depend on these things for salvation. They have an idea that Jesus saves them, but think he saves them because they see and experience these things. They seem to be going back to heathenism. They need earnest faithful Christian men who are not afraid to stand up boldly and speak the truth, and those men ought to be provided, to devote their whole time to these people. Then there would be some hope of leading them in the right way."

MISSOURI CHURCHES.

Lebanon and Westport.

We have only two small churches in Missouri. That at Lebanon reports no increase. Rev. Hardy Mobley left in February, to take charge of our church at Topeka, Kansas. He had a good Sunday-school. This Association assisted to build the school-house where the church has held its Sabbath services. If a vigorous young man, who could also take the day-school, should offer, the Lebanon church might be resuscitated; otherwise it will probably become extinct.

At Westport there is an increase of interest; the meeting-house has been enlarged, and sixteen have been added to the membership under the pastoral care of Rev. Moses Dickson, and the generous coöperation of Rev. J. C. Beekman, of Kansas City.

KANSAS CHURCHES.

Leavenworth.

There have been eight additions to this church. The people raise one half the support of Rev. J. E. Weir. He was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian order, but became a Congregationalist in 1869. He has not had the educational advantages of white ministers, or even of some of the Freedmen who have gone to our schools and seminaries, instead of trying to labor directly and constantly in the ministry.

Lawrence.

Rev. M. T. Weir, a brother of J. E. Weir, took charge of this church a year ago last July. He has been successful in winning the confidence of the church. Some twenty-two have been added to its numbers, and new vigor has been developed in raising funds for the repair of the church and support, in part, of the pastor. He has left them temporarily to attend a term or more at the Chicago Theological Seminary.

Topeka.

Rev. W. W. Weir, after continued opposition on the part of some of the members, finally resigned the charge of the Second Congregational church of Topeka. It was some time before any suitable colored minister could be found. In February last, Rev. Hardy Mobley began his labors there. For a time he had good success, and the church was better united than it had been for several years. Five members were added. A council having been called to investigate some personal charges against him, he was cleared of all guilt, and little blame was attached to his course; but it was thought better for all to have a change. He therefore resigned his charge in September, 1872, and that church is now seeking a pastor.

In conclusion, our difficulties in the church-work are twofold. The first is, to find well-qualified colored pastors for our churches. There could be no better beneficence than to provide a fund for educating colored young men for the ministry. There are men ready to enter our theological seminaries if the means were at hand.

The second difficulty is to sustain, temporarily, white ministers who volunteer to go into this work. Churches could be started in this way, as they have been in some instances, in unoccupied fields where the spiritual destitution and darkness are appalling. But in such communities the Freedmen can do little more than help in the erection of a house. Believing it to be the true economy to maintain our high-schools for training colored teachers and preachers, we have found it impossible to subtract any more funds from these institutions. The only way to meet the providential call for more direct church-work is for the Christian people of the North to contribute specially for this object. It will be observed that there have been additions to nearly every church. The sanction of the Holy Spirit has thus been given to such church enterprises as have been undertaken.

BRIEF HISTORY.

The American Missionary Association was formed in 1846, its distinctive characteristic being freedom from all complicity with slavery and caste.

The object as stated in its constitution is, "To conduct Christian missionary and educational operations, and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort."

It began its work in Foreign Missions in Africa, Siam, Sandwich Islands, West Indies; and its work in our own country, in the Western States and among the Indians.

In 1848, it began work in the South among whites and blacks, although attended with great opposition and danger.

In 1852, it undertook to reach the Chinese in California, the plans ripening in 1870 to successful work.

In 1861, during the civil war, it began the enlargement of work in the South, which has been marked by steady progress and success.

In 1882, it transferred its Foreign Missions and enlarged its Indian work by receiving the Indian Missions of the American Board.

The work of the American Missionary Association is, therefore, at present among the Chinese in California, the North American Indians and the needy classes of our Southern States.

SERMON.

By Rev. A. J. Lyman, D.D.,
Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation? That the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it," or, "the afflicted of his people take refuge," as the Revised Version puts it. Isaiah xiv: 32.

It is perhaps the part of courtesy to disclaim at the outset any wish to find a literal parallel between the present occasion and the text, or its context. Modern anniversaries are so modern, in scenery and in theme, and so remote from the times of the Bible writers, that the attempt, however ingenious, to fit a text to an anniversary is usually a failure; resulting possibly in strained and far-fetched exegesis, or still worse, in some fantastic play upon Bible words, which last does not belong to preaching at all, but is the mere trick of pulpit performers. For instance, there might be opportunity for some such pulpit legerdemain in handling the context of this passage from Isaiah, so as to apply it to our public history since the war, and so adapt it to the anniversary of this society, whose work the war has so profoundly modified. The paragraph begins, "Rejoice not thou whole Palestina (or Philistia) because the rod of him that smote thee is broken, for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent." "Howl, oh gate; cry, oh city, thou, whole Palestina, art dissolved, for there shall come from the north a smoke and none shall be alone in his appointed times." Or, "There is no straggler in his ranks." All this might, with a certain dexterous turning and straining and piecing, be forced into literal use, as if describing the outburst of our civil war, and the subsequent difficulties of reconstruction. But so to conjure with Isaiah's eloquent lament, would be childish trifling. What we may fairly affirm in the way of textual analysis, is simply this: that the prophet is, in vision, facing a situation of grave public need and peril, in which the peril is immediate and evident, springing out of conditions of ancient oppression and recent change, and involving especially the welfare of certain poorer classes in the State. Some old rod of wrath has been broken. Apparent deliverance has followed; but a new swarm of evils are springing from the roots of the old, menacing the peace of cities, and the integrity of civil life, and cutting sharpest upon the poor. There is, therefore, confusion and alarm. Men are looking different ways. Rival expedients are anxiously and even violently discussed. The messengers of the nation are assembled to take counsel. What then shall the spokesman of the Lord say to this perturbed and perhaps divided assembly?

Shall he announce a still newer scheme—a still fresher expedient, and so perhaps still further divide the people? No, he unites them and reassures them by calling them all back to their foundations of faith, to the vital principles incorporated in the nation, which constitute within it the Zion of God. He reminds them that God built this Zion, and built it to remain. It then—such is the latent logic—is the true recourse in fresh crises. It is the refuge for the poor, even for those classes of the poor in connection with whom the peril has arisen.

This, or something like this, seems to be the large implication of the inspired writer, and so interpreted, the text, like other of the great Biblical norms, fits itself grandly in its main lesson to a thousand particular occasions of public emergency.

But is the situation before us one of such emergency? Brethren, judge ye! To the assembled messengers of the nation, gathered by hundreds here to-night, in this beautiful metropolis, at the summons of a cause vast and imperative, and in some of its conditions certainly, difficult and disquieting, one who shall endeavor to strike the initial note as the Lord's servant, must then offer not novelties, ambitious words announcing attractive experiments and debatable plans, but he must rather echo the sublime prophetic assurance that the Lord hath founded our American Zion, and the poor, even the freed slave and his child, may trust in it.

But what, then, is our American Zion, and what is the situation that confronts us?

In answering these questions we must bear in mind one further fact, essential in the prophetic conception and essential in all valid Christian discussion of public questions to-day, and that is that the Zion which the Lord had founded comprised both church and state. I will not traverse the old debate upon this point, but surely every Bible student knows (and thank God, every sensible Christian is a Bible student to-day) that "Zion," originally the old Jebusite fortress, occupying the highest southwest hill within the area of Jerusalem, and afterward the site of King David's palace, came to be used in the later Hebrew writing as a splendid symbolic and theocratic word. Employed only six times in the historical books and one hundred and forty-eight times in the poetic and prophetic books of the Old Testament, it had come to denote the majesty of a complex idea; partly civil and national, partly religious and divine. Zion describes both the citadel of the state and the shrine of the temple. It was stronghold and Shekinah in one. There is no need to remind you of the intense and holy splendor of this blended conception in the Hebrew mind, and in the prophetic literature, in which the martial and patriotic passion of the Jew flung itself along the same channel with his religious zeal and faith. This union of what we might call secular and sacred ideas is one of the keynotes of the Old Testament. And it is one of the keynotes of any great patriotism. We must not lose it, or if we do, let us no longer have a chaplain in Congress, or place a copy of the Scriptures in the corner stone of public edifices. Our fathers held to the logic which brought Bible and bayonet into the same patriotic hands. The organizing spirit of this republic possessed that ancient blended Hebrew strain, and we must retain it. Not of course that we retain the outward theoracy. In this country we have what Burke called the very "dissidence of dissent." Modern civilization dissociates more and more the outward technique of church and state; but the Old Testament prophecies warrant and command the eternal inner fusion of piety and patriotism. Not with this for our Bible can we, as patriots, neglect the church. Not with this for our Bible can we, as Christians, ignore the state. Let us beware both of the rationalism and of the socialism that would untwist these strands.

This sense of God's modeling hand in our civil history is not the relic of a crude belief in tribal divinities, but is entirely consistent with the highest philosophic theism. We believe in our country's God. Christianity is not cosmopolitan in the sense that it is non-patriotic. Cross and flag go together. Our Mount Zion is a fabric which embodies both the citizen's axioms and the Christian's enthusiasms. In our history, as in the Hebrew history, the flight, the fight, the rise of a national spirit, unique and masterful, the laws, the institutions, the dignity and glory of noble deeds and heroic leaders, preserved in tradition, echoed in household maxims, crystalized in public custom, celebrated in national festival, all these radical factors of national life are the Lord's work, the Lord's building, as truly as the stone tables of the commandments or the mystic ark in the Holy of Holies. This is our common faith.

What the poor of the people were to trust to, then, in Isaiah's inspired vision, and what they are to trust to now, was and is this entire and blended whole, which the Lord had built, as it were, with his two hands. They were not to trust to part of it, but to the whole of it. Not to the temple without the fortress, not to the fortress without the temple; not to the religious sentiment without the civil; not to the civil without the religious; but to both in one, because both were included in the Zion which the Lord had founded. This idea, surely, is within the further reach of the lesson taught in the text and is illustrated at every epoch of the Hebrew history.

With this brief exposition of the inspired and prophetic words, let us fearlessly lift them up like a great, familiar torch interpreting and illuminating our own Mount Zion and the situation which now confronts us. What, then, is the Zion which the Lord hath founded in this land? What are the principles, civil and religious, in which the poor of this nation are to trust, and which must still be our main recourse in dealing with fresh and threatening public problems? These foundation principles are very familiar, and they are very few. Perhaps no two of us would state them quite alike, and generalizations are so tedious to listen to, and so easily misleading, that they remind one a little of what Disraeli, you remember, said about anecdotes, that "when a man fell into his anecdotage it was time for him to retire." But I shall trust to make no mistake in reciting this alphabet of American patriotism. Let us insist, at least, on the utmost brevity of statement and say that our Zion consists on the civil side in liberty under the forms of law; and on the religious side in faith under the forms of love. Personal liberty with law! Biblical faith with love! For if first on the civil side, we look at the four institutions, for example, which all observers, from de Tocqueville to Mr. Bryce, have acknowledged fundamental to our commonwealth, the school, the suffrage, the court and the town meeting, we discover that the touchstone in every instance is the principle of individual liberty, restrained, indeed, by the sentiment of justice to others, but liberty still, just as powder is powder, though its expansive flash is crammed into the one straight push behind the bullet. The school must be the common school, free to all. The suffrage must be manhood suffrage, free to all. The court must offer habeas corpus and free trial by jury. The town meeting must be open to free discussion. Everywhere freedom! The same thing may be said of the great derivative institutions, like the press, for example. Liberty, equal rights within limits of justice, is the nerve of them all. Now, what we hold is, that this liberty is a part of our Zion, the seed of the Lord's planting, or, to use Jefferson's brilliant figure, these free institutions are the "bright constellation which has gone before us." We believe they find their Christian warrant in the dignity and worth of the personal soul as made in the divine image, and saved through Christ's redemption.

And on the other side, the religious side of our Mount Zion; if we in the same way select the four organic principles of American Christianity, we shall perhaps say that they are these:—A paternal theism; a redemptive christology; a philanthropic morality; a church which is at its heart a fraternity of men in Christ. But here the touch-stone in every instance is the principle of Biblical faith working out through love. It is Biblical faith; or, to speak historically, the old faith, the faith of historic Christendom. You say, that faith is changing; the old theology is crumbling away. Yes, so the avalanches slide off the Alpine summits, but the summits themselves remain. By faith we mean the ecumenical and evangelical faith, but with a touch of something conciliatory in expression, flexible in organization, as the olive tree of the Orient, when transplanted westward, gains a certain grace of outline and broader spread of bough. Athanasius and Anselm are with us still, but perhaps with gentler step after so long travel down the centuries. It is the old faith still, but we put this faith under forms of love. We hold to the doctrine of Divine sovereignty, but in the form in which God is a loving Father. We hold to the doctrine of a vicarious atonement, but Christ is a loving Saviour. The ethical ideal is loving self-sacrifice. The spirit of the church, under whatever polity, is brotherly fellowship. Everywhere the sentiment of love is insisted on, moulding and modulating the expressions of faith. Bear with me, brethren, for the moment thus spent in front of the ancient bulwarks of our Zion, in recalling the three or four ideas in which resides the divine life of the republic. Personal liberty under forms of law; Biblical faith under forms of love. Both are necessary and both in combination. Either alone is imcomplete. In fact, neither alone constitutes our Zion. Abolish religion, and the theory of equal rights alone may degenerate into the reckless riot of the commune. Abolish liberty, intellectual and civil, and the religious sentiment alone may be transformed so as to support the imperial autocracy of the Vatican. The true divine flame in this nation kindles and glows at the point where personal right and religious faith are conjoined without detriment to either, for this involves that union of apparent opposites which only the spirit of God can accomplish. At the secular terminal, individual freedom; at the religious terminal, Christ-like charity; and between the two, justice, overlapping both and banding all together, one divine and indivisible trinity. This is our Zion.

Now the truth which to-night I would be glad to enforce is simply this: that to these principles and none other, but to these, old as they are, elementary, axiomatic as they are, the Lord commands us still chiefly to look in meeting the fresh problems with which this Association has to deal.

What then are these problems? What is the situation?

This is the forty-fifth anniversary of the American Missionary Association, a title possibly too little descriptive of our special fields of work, but still better than any sectional or sectarian title could be. None of our great benevolent societies is nearer the heart of the churches. None brings to a sharper edge the combined insistence of patriotic and Christian motive. I have asked you whether the situation represents an emergency; I do not mean a temporary emergency, financial or economic, but I mean whether the cause itself does not present its claim with an immensely critical accent and pressure. I cannot now speak of the mountain whites, or of the Indian and Chinese portions of our work, important as they all are. The argument which I wish to point applies to them equally, but for the moment let us restrict our survey to our main field, that of the colored race at the South. Will any man care to deny that this is a question of supreme imminence in this republic? Will any man deny that it presents features of perplexity and alarm? Let me for a moment venture to remind you of some of these features, and in doing this we will be fair enough to recognize views different, perhaps, from our own.

In the midst of the industrial stir and splendor of the last two decades—nowhere more conspicuous or more admirable than in the South—thoughtful men, South and North, have discerned the continued unfolding of one portentous and colossal problem, rising in the midpath of the march of the republic, the relation of the colored race to the national life and to the civil life of the several commonwealths. The war solved only half of this problem. There are other great questions in this land, relating to special departments, commercial or political. There are questions covering several departments, and opposing their menacing and inevitable interrogative to every patriotic forecast. Such is the question of immigration, or that of uniform State laws for the punishment of crime, like the uniform code adopted by Italy last year; such is the temperance question. Still transcending all these in peremptory pressure is what we call the labor question, with its lurid flash here and there of socialistic frenzy, and its whirlwinds of even legitimate discussion. But not one of these questions, not even the temperance or the labor question, towers before the eye of the serious lover of his country with a vaster volume, a more baffling perspective I will add, a graver omen, a more startling note of immediate need than this question, what to do with and for the colored race.

You will caution me at this point not to give this sermon a political turn. I will not. I know what is due to this hour and function. I will preserve the courtesy and catholicity of a great benevolent organization, but there is no need to blink the fact that this is a political question, for noble politics is the sister of philanthropy. Away with the cheap talk about politics, as forbidding the noblest considerations. All the more is this question philanthropic and Christian, because it has its political embarrassments. We will have nothing of the provincial and partisan note; this is not the time for platform discussion, but it is not platform discussion, and it is not a partisan note to remind Christian citizens that the motives whose incalculable urgency crowd and thunder behind this Association are both patriotic and Christian. We would serve the country as well as save the Negro. Because the old heat of war was once upon this cause, and perhaps lingers here and there upon it still, all the more do we hasten with our cups of cold water and our white flags of peace.

But what are the facts?

That accomplished expert in statistics, General Francis A. Walker, now President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in the last July number of the Forum, discusses the question of the African race in this country in the new light of the last census. He argues that, contrary to popular impression, the colored people on the whole are not increasing at so high a ratio as the population of the country at large, the former ratio being for the last ten years only thirteen per cent. as against twenty-four per cent. for the entire population. He also finds a plain and constant drift towards the massing together of the colored people, under the force of hereditary association and climatic aptitude, in certain definite localities. According to General Walker, the "black belt" is narrower, but of sharper edge and darker hue. Whither does this drift tend? At this vital point General Walker's article somewhat abruptly closes. Now, whatever we may say as to this argument, we must admit that the actual volume of increase among the blacks is enormous. Four millions at the close of the war, seven and one half millions to-day, showing a probable tendency to revert to the older and perhaps better physical type, this nation of slaves, now numbering nearly twice the population of Holland, and more than three times that of Greece, descended from remote tropic tribes, crushed into a sad and sordid homogeneity by two centuries of bondage, roused and dazed, first by the blinding shock of war, and then by the equally bewildering sense of freedom, finds itself launched, absolutely without preparation, into as novel and difficult an arena as has ever tested the manhood of any people. Was ever a race so shot into responsibility? What wonder there was at first confusion, bewilderment, a kind of riot, if you will, of illusions and ambitions. The wonder is that there was not more. For this we have, perhaps, to thank some old, strange, mellowing touch of affluent and peaceful suns long ago. The fidelity of the slaves to the families and the property of their masters absent in battle is a trite subject of eulogy, and none have been quicker to accord it than the gentlemen of the South; but I am not sure but that in the terrible light of history, upon similar situations, and in view of the fatal ease with which the novel exhilaration of freedom passes into the craze of the revolutionist, I am not sure but that the general peace and good order of the colored people, since emancipation, are as remarkable as their fidelity while in slavery. But that does not bridge the ancestral chasm between the races, nor does it mean a trained citizenship under constitutional law.

Let us cut a little nearer to the nerve. Am I mistaken in supposing that in the minds of many here present is flowing an under-current, I do not say of alarm, for you are not the men to be afraid, but I will say of anxiety, almost of misgiving, with regard to this whole question? I do not need to refer to its sad details of illiteracy and immorality. You have marked the tentative and uncertain tone of public discussion in regard to it, "something between a hindrance and a help," as Wordsworth says. You have read able articles by prominent leaders, North and South, announcing this or that scheme of adjustment, but after reading them, you have been left more dubious than before. You have come up to this meeting with alacrity, with ardor even, and yet, with a muffled disquietude. You cannot help wondering what is ahead of us. "This," to change one word in Homer's famous line, "is what every man is thinking (not 'saying') as he looks at his neighbor." It is not so much a question of color. That is incidental. But it is a race question—that is, a question of lifting a race, technically free, into real freedom, intellectual, moral, civil, in the midst of an environment of different temperament and heredity. No harder and no grander task was ever committed to a nation. It is not fully accomplished. The war has devolved it, not discharged it. Can any man say it is yet accomplished? The Aryan white man does not yet quite see eye to eye with his African brother. The status of the Negro before the law is perhaps yet equivocal. Every school-house is a torch of light, but the wonderful glory of the idea of civil manhood has not yet thoroughly thrilled the brain of the black race. Individuals are freed, but the mass are still in bonds of ignorance, of apathy, of superstition, of vague distrust, of hereditary sense of injustice and injury. I would not make the case out darker than it is, but on the other hand, I have no respect for whitewashing as a stimulus to benevolence. Think of a half tropical race mass like this lodged tight in the vitals of the nation. Can it be assimilated? Shall it be deported? Is it essentially foreign? Must it be segregated in definite localities, and, as it were, encysted? Can it not be nobly developed and nobly incorporated? These are the questions men are asking. Brethren of the North, do we not fail to realize the grave imminence with which these questions, to us at a distance, rise at the doors and within the doors of the Southern States?

Let us not be afraid to touch even right upon the nerve, but, as Christian brethren, with a resolute, kind purpose to listen to other voices beside our own. What do they say? We say: This is a national problem. Our friends at the South say it is also a separate State problem. We say the ballot-box is the ballot-box and will settle it. They say, Yes, but it may settle it wrong. Apply, they say, your franchise in your own crowded Northern cities with only such inspection and restriction as is sufficient in rural communities, and the result is, perhaps, the monarchy of the saloon. Shall we construe the ballot, they say, so that muscle shall control brain or brain muscle? Shall numbers out-vote character or character numbers? We say, the law settles it; they perhaps reply, the statute law was born of fear, of war, of passing necessities; the principle of the law is inconsistent with literal obedience to its provisions; the real intent of the law is good order and civil prosperity, and this real intent of the law must be sought, perhaps, by technically evading the law, as even Milton admits and apparently justifies in a famous sentence, which I do not need to quote here at length. Brethren, I do not invent these questions and rejoinders. I do not justify them. Some of them seem to me sophistical and untenable. But in them I am echoing the interrogatories of living, and even patriotic men to-day. I am gaining a purchase for the point upon which I wish to apply our text. I am simply sketching in the outlines of the facts, which show how heavily charged is the situation with which this Association has to deal in Christ's and the country's name. And there are other matters, relating to wayside rights, to social customs, to religious worship, to moral order, which courtesy to all concerned would forbid me even to echo at the present time. But they are in the problem, as fire-damp is in the mine, not insurmountable, but most formidable. And thus the problem itself rises, wide, dim, vital, overtopping every other in the nation, in difficulty, in obscurity, in gigantic mass, in imminent and inescapable pressure.

Now, then, under such circumstances, what shall one answer the messengers of the nation?—messengers such as you, dear and honored brethren, pastors and members of churches, professors and students in our colleges, journalists and men of affairs, Christian men and patriots, one and all, come together not to denounce, not to judge, but seriously and lovingly to counsel together, in the interest of white as well as black, of South as well as North. What shall one say on this subject, which shall set all men's hearts beating as one? Shall he recite theories, schemes of experiment, plausible and brilliant devices of manipulation? Let me rather reaffirm that ancient and tremendous prophetic truth, as sound in political philosophy as it is clear in revelation, that the old principles of national life, if they are indeed founded of God, are to solve the fresh problems of that national life; that this ancient Zion of civil freedom and Biblical faith is God's eternal guarantee against contingencies; that these divine inaugurals of the nation furnish both the effective instruments and the wise methods, in dealing with fresh emergencies; that a broad and fearless return to primary truths is the real wisdom in new complications; that the lesser adjustment is to be sought through the larger fidelity; that God's bugle call in this land at the opening of the century, still must direct the march in this dazzling, but dangerous closing decade.

This is not at all to say that current discussions as to special methods are not timely and valuable. On the contrary, they are most valuable. We want all the light we can get, from political genius, as well as from Christian philanthropy; from journalists as well as from ministers; and journalists have an amazing way of setting the clergy right in these days! Especially we want to hear what the men of the new South have to say, that wonderful new realm of resource and purpose and hope which now is opening to the best Southern brain. We believe these men of the new South are ready to help us. We know we are anxious to help them and we are helping them, in the effort, for instance, to terminate the monstrous tyranny of the lottery ring in the fair state of Louisiana. The era of misunderstanding is passing away. Conference is taking the place of controversy. Experienced statesmanship may suggest a more skillful handling of many details. But all this is surely subordinate. The greater the crisis the more commanding the obligation to recur to our foundation principles, and fearlessly apply them, if indeed they are founded of God. We must invoke the older angels of the Republic. These primal principles possess an immeasurable adequacy and adaptability to new conditions. It is in this midstream of the nation's life that the boat of the colored race is to be carried safely down, not bumping along the edges. Liberty under forms of law! Faith under forms of love! In them may the poor of the people trust. They are our Zion. And if they are, we must dare to trust them. They are old, but they are tried. You drive your young colt in good weather, but in a thunder storm you take the old horse. Great problems must be settled on great principles if they are settled at all. And is it not, after all, the higher political wisdom to employ tried principles in fresh crises rather than to emasculate the principles in order to dodge the crisis. We want more of the ancient Hebraic heroism that trusts God's old compass, even in the rock of unfamiliar seas.

But it may be asked—admitting all this—what has it to do with the work of this Association? Everything. In the work of this Association we practically touch this matter at two points, and both are right on the nerve. These two points are the school and the church. The school is the correlative of liberty, the church is the correlative of faith. If then liberty and faith are our Zion, school and church are our Zion. And let it be always remembered that in the philosophy of our work, or rather the work of American Congregationalism through us, the union of these two, the school and the church, is not an incident, but is essential. We must have both churches and schools. There is a civil reason for supporting the church and a religious reason for supporting the school. Sever them? You might as well separate the lever from its fulcrum or Euclid Avenue from Cleveland! School and church are the two-leaved gates through which we would lead our freed and colored countrymen into their and our Mount Zion. Now, as to the school, we shall probably agree that the free school is the practical source of the true civil liberty, just as the free ballot is its blossom. Lawless liberty is not taught in the school. That is taught in the mob on the street corner, or in the snarl and growl of the communistic club, but liberty with law is taught in the school. So the church is the embodiment and guardian of faith and of a faith that works by love. I repeat then, if freedom and faith are our Zion, free school and pure church are our Zion. These are the "hills whence cometh our help." The argument of the evening is then a direct one as to our duty. Every school we open, every church we sustain is a straight stroke at the very heart of this greatest national problem. Where in this country is a million of money placed so as to do more good than the million given by Mr. Daniel Hand?

But some one says, after all, this is theorizing; this is sentiment. We must trust the Southern question to something more practical. No, brethren, there is nothing more practical. Perhaps you mean political when you say practical. Perhaps by practical you mean a lot of old moss-back partisan ideas, fossil maxims, caucus catchwords, so old and tough and ossified that, to use De Quincy's expression, they would "splinter the teeth of a crocodile." This is what some people suppose "practical" to mean. On the contrary we hold that the Ten Commandments are as much a part of practical politics as the Constitution is. The argument is that school and church are the very pin and pivot of the divine economy in the practical development of this land, and must be our main trust in this Southern problem also.

But again, on the civil side, it is urged that it will not do to trust the principle of equal rights, even if it is divine, in its application to the colored race. Why not, if it is really a part of the original divine thought in this nation? Is a principle divine for a white man, but dangerous for a black? Shall God found a Zion with free suffrage at its heart, and that principle break down in front of some unlooked-for contingency? Shall "three degrees of different latitude," to use Pascal's famous sarcasm, "overturn all our jurisprudence?" Perhaps this principle of equal rights is safer than you think. It is full of the subtlest power of self-correction, self-protection. You are afraid of political solidarity. No, education differentiates, culture individualizes. The colored race can be no exception to the law, that under such influences of school and church it would lose political solidarity and divide naturally into parties and healthful political competition, as the variety in general sentiments or local interests might dictate. Let every black man in Louisiana vote next April against the lottery extension, no matter by what party that proposed extension is supported. Legitimate and beneficent home rule, both State and municipal, will find an ally, not an enemy, in the educated and enfranchised Negro. More than this, I believe that God in founding our Mount Zion lodged a subtle, an almost supernal, efficacy in this old, full-toned, democratic idea of freely conceded, fully trusted manhood rights. It will untie the knottiest civil problems. I am democrat enough to believe this, but all men, even of those who call themselves democrats, do not seem quite to believe it. Men are afraid. Let us remember that the ratchet work of Almighty God's conserving providence works within this principle, hidden and unseen. Why not trust it, as a ship trusts the wind on the sea? Will it not countercheck its own exposures, strike aslant on well-held sails, pull forward even when it seems to push backward, and even in the midst of stormy possibilities carry keel and flag of nation and State safely and swiftly on its course? Why, men say, would you trust a tornado, because God is in the wind? Well, I confess that it is easier to trust the wind in calm weather than under the ragged out-thrust lip of the advancing tempest, but your genuine sailor will tell you that if you stop sailing because you are afraid of tornadoes you'll never "get there;" that you must trust the wind "not at all or all in all." The wildest whirl has its laws, and if we mean to make large headway in developing men in this republic we must trust God's full, free principle of equal civil liberty and the schools that teach it, even in spite of a possible squall here and there.

And how as to the other half of our Zion—the religious half—the principle of Biblical faith in forms of love, or practically—love in the church? This touches us closely. We can and we must inculcate and incarnate this sentiment, the reach and power of which are beyond all eloqueuce to describe as relating to this great Southern problem. I emphasize the love. Dr. Holland of St. Paul's says, in that opening and best chapter of "Lux Mundi," "Faith cannot transfer its business into other hands." Yes, but the hands of love are requisite to distribute what Faith discovers. From the debates of great church conventions over the questions of the higher criticism down to the handling of one little colored church in a Southern village, we must do everything in love. We do not dissociate civil liberty from Christian charity. For this spirit of love in churches goes a long way. It implies a great deal. I am sure that it means something more than the assertion of rights. In fact, its accent is precisely in the opposite direction. In one sense it is the corollary, in another sense it is the corrective of the civil principle of equal rights. "Love suffereth long and yet is kind," "seeketh not her own," "is not easily provoked," "thinketh no evil." The spirit of love in the church which is at the very heart of our Mount Zion does not precipitate antagonism by a parade of its prerogative. It does not, indeed, surrender its right, but it is wise enough, and gentle enough, to waive technical rights sometimes in the interests of peace. For this love is partly an intellectual attitude and perception. It possesses—let me employ the too hackneyed phrase of Arnold because it is so fine—the "sweet reasonableness" of Christ. Let friction then be avoided. In little things give way. Conduct all in gentleness. Let us not fear to "become as weak in order" (and how the tense Pauline muscle stiffens at that point) "to gain the weak." Let the assertion of civil rights be accompanied by the concessions that the higher wisdom and the holier love can make even to what we call prejudice and unreason, for the sake of ultimately winning prejudice and unreason to a better mind.

We unite the two—school and church. Our Zion consists in the blended and balanced power of both these principles, civil rights and Christian love. As flame springs from the union of hydro-carbon and oxygen, so the divine magic and mastery of our Mount Zion is not discovered in the school alone, nor in the church alone, but in both together; not in the assertion of civil right alone, nor in the concession of Christian sacrifice alone, but in both together. So the swing of the planets in heaven is accomplished, not by one force but by two, each planet pulling out for freedom with all the tug of its terrific momentum, and yet all held in their appointed paths as securely as if they rolled against rims of immovable crystal.

This is no theorizing. It is definitely practical. The spiritual complement of equality before the law is fraternity at the sacrament. In the school we plant the germ of the former. In the church we celebrate the power of the latter, and we teach law in both. In both we "make a man more precious than fine gold." The great ends of the state are thus in harmony with the great ends of the church. The nearer the heart of each we get, the nearer they are together. The path of Christian duty is the path of national destiny. A free democracy with law in it; a Christian church with love in it—in these, and in these together are the agencies of ancient renown and inexhaustible application. In them may the poor of this people trust. Between the two, and bounded by them, runs the straight, divine path to the solution of the problem of the colored race. Make one colored man a Christian freeman, really free, free in soul as well as body, intelligent, patriotic, moral and humane, and the forces by which you have accomplished this for one freed slave are the precise forces which alone can meet the situation presented by the seven millions of his race to-day.

But, brethren, I must not submit your kind patience to any longer burden. What we as an Association practically need, I believe more than anything else just now, is an ampler endowment, a larger equipment for our university schools, and especially for the normal and theological departments in those schools. For this helps in both directions—toward the schools and toward the churches.

I have adopted this old-fashioned and unambitious line of remark to-night because the note of public opinion and even Christian current discussion on this whole subject has seemed to me often timorous and querulous, exhibiting neither faith in God nor faith in the country; or, on the other hand, it has been partisan, sensational, experimental, looking for relief to some new scheme or political compromise. No, brethren, God built this nation on a plan and for a purpose. And to stick to the plan is the way to realize the purpose. "Every man's task" says Emerson, "is his life preserver." Every nation's task is its life preserver. In wrestling with such tasks, the true greatness of a great nation is both exhibited and developed. So of the church. I thank God that every noblest Christian communion of the nation is at work among the colored people of the South to-day. Representatives of some of these communions other than our own I see here to night. God speed you, brethren. God will speed you and us, for we look not to devices however dexterous, not to windfalls, chances, bursts of fortune, but to the spirit and power of the living God, at the heart of the nation. But we must do more than look. These principles of our Zion will not work of themselves. "Predestination" alone will not solve the Southern problem. The "perseverance of the saints," together with predestination, will.

And our chief helpers in this work must be the colored people themselves. Every colored student who is trying to be a scholar—every colored man who is trying to live nobly, is pre-eminently helping us and his race. "Nothing can work me damage except myself," said St. Bernard. Never did individual excellence so tell on a people as the worthy life of one colored man is telling on the welfare of the race to-day. As Robert Browning puts it:

> "Each of the many helps to recruit
> The life of the race by a general plan,
> Each living his own to boot."

Five hundred thousand dollars for next year! Not a penny less! That is our cry. I would that every pastor in this constituency might go home from Cleveland, under the hot beat of an inner pledge to see that his church shall double its gift this year to this work. Let us echo the great note struck last week at Pittsfield by the American Board. The church responds to the magnetic hand of an aroused ministry. A half million next year will show what kind of patriots go to make Congregationalists. The cause is national. It is peremptory. It is divine. You say seven millions of people and increasing 300—500 a day! The thing is hopeless. "Is there any peace in ever climbing up the climbing wave?" Yes, for the wind on the wave is changing and then, too, better stand with Christ beneath the darkest billow, than stand anywhere else without him.

And let us stand together. In face of this instant national challenge, let us match the moment by the tone of this meeting, considerate, courageous. Our task is too grave for any trifling. In these swift and critical months needless faultfinding or contention is both an impertinence and a sin. We are "debtors," to use St. Paul's tremendous word, to the colored race—doubly debtors, national debtors on account of what they have done for us, Christian debtors on account of what we may do for them. They look to us. They believe in us. Let us justify their faith. A man said to me once: "Do you know the greatest motive that has helped to keep me a gentleman? The belief of my wife that I was one." So our motive to be true is the faith of our colored brethren that we will be true. Many have wrought in this cause who are now no more. No cause ever arrayed behind its annual appeal a more eloquent host, of those whose voices are like what Dr. Chapin used to call the "roll of drums from the Valley of the Shadow of Death." But they are more than that. "One family we dwell in him." It is in the name of the living, and of the living, as they live who rest in God, that this great cause speaks to-day.

And the last crown and burst of splendor at the summit of our argument is given when we remember that God lives also. Not only does he live immanent in the principles, laws and forces of our Mount Zion. That is true, but more than that is true. He lives in person behind t[illegible]m. As American Christians we are theists. God is the uncalculated [illegible]ive men of Living Will. He is with us who "turneth the shadow of deat[illegible] for two y[illegible]he morning." These Titans that science tells us of, and tells us [illegible]embers shall are hammering at the chains of dark sequences, are comr[illegible]e required to at their fatal forge and go on other errands. Once steamin[illegible]llecting and disbursing I saw a wonderful sight. There was no wind on the wa[illegible]g of missionaries and and wide without a ripple. We were under good hea[illegible]ve authority to fill all up to the top of the tall smokestack, I expected of cour[illegible]pply to any Legislature volume of smoke drifting far astern through the movele[illegible] make provision when lutely shivered when I saw that great black coil of smok[illegible]ldren of deceased mis- top of the smokestack, evidently by a powerful wind, es. and said: "No, you are not dreaming: Perhaps half a dozen times in my thirty years on these lakes I have seen that occurrence. Fifty feet above our heads, half a gale of wind is blowing, and blowing in the same direction we are going and twice as fast, though to look at the water you would say there wasn't a breath. It means a change of temperature and of weather. That wind is from the upper currents of the atmosphere. It will get down to the water in another half hour. Yes sir," he concluded, "we are going twelve knots, and that wind is going thirty." So God, never lawlessly, but by laws beyond our knowledge, and by the glorious and awful mystery of a will beyond all we shall ever know of law, may outrun precedent, may reverse tradition, and by swift and inconceivable changes, astonish even our faith. Now is the time for a man who believes anything to stand for what he believes. Political science rests itself on deck and exclaims: No wind! No hope! But go aloft! That is equally scientific and more Christian, and what do we discover? Wind blowing with us! Fair weather coming on! This is why actual history is, on the whole, more assuring than political forecasts are. The student of affairs leaves out of view one fact too subtle and spiritual for his scientific recognition, the personal presence and power of the living God. I must not linger at the close. In this spirit we leave our theme. "Underneath are the everlasting arms!" Underneath our very doubt that there are such arms. In facing this question of the colored race at the South to-day—in answering this supreme appeal of national loyalty, as well as of Christian honor and love, rejoice, rejoice, O messengers of the nation, in this inspired assurance of your faith—"that the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it."

THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. I. This Society shall be called the American Missionary Association.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to conduct Christian missionary and educational operations and diffuse a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures in our own country and other countries which are destitute of them, or which present open and urgent fields of effort.

ART. III. Members of evangelical churches may be constituted members of this Association for life by the payment of thirty dollars into its treasury, with the written declaration at the time or times of payment that the sum is to be applied to constitute a designated person a life member; and such membership shall begin sixty days after the payment shall have been completed. Other persons, by the payment of the same sum, may be made life members, without the privilege of voting.

Every evangelical church which has within a year contributed to the funds of the Association, and every State Conference or Association of such churches, may appoint two delegates to the Annual Meeting of the Association; such delegates, duly attested by credentials, shall be members of the Association for the year for which they were thus appointed.

ART. IV. The Annual Meeting of the Association shall be held in the month of October or November, at such time and place as may be designated by the Association, or, in case of its failure to act, by the Executive Committee, by notice printed in the official publication of the Association for the preceding month.

ART. V. The officers of the Association shall be a President, five Vice-Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary or Secretaries, a Recording Secretary, a Treasurer, Auditors, and an Executive Committee of fifteen members, all of whom shall be elected by ballot.

At the first Annual Meeting after the adoption of this Constitution, five members of the Executive Committee shall be elected for the term of one year, five for two years and five for three years, and at each subsequent Annual Meeting five members shall be elected for the full term of three years, and such others as shall be required to fill vacancies.

ART. VI. To the Executive Committee shall belong the collecting and disbursing of funds, the appointing, counseling, sustaining and dismissing of missionaries and agents, and the selection of missionary fields. They shall have authority to fill all vacancies in office occurring between the Annual Meetings; to apply to any Legislature for acts of incorporation, or conferring corporate powers; to make provision when necessary for disabled missionaries and for the widows and children of deceased missionaries, and in general to transact all such business as usually appertains to the Executive Committees of missionary and other benevolent Societies. The acts of the Committee shall be subject to the revision of the Annual Meeting.

Five members of the Committee constitute a quorum for transacting business.

ART. VII. No person shall be made an officer of this Association who is not a member of some evangelical church.

But we have no church in the great State of Arkansas, where the colored population is comparatively large, only two in Mississippi, and three in Texas.

Facts are abundant to show that the spiritual want is not met by other missionary or ecclesiastical bodies. The kind of religious teaching derived from the old slave-preachers is sadly illustrated in other parts of this report.

We can not do less than declare the need; that this field is white unto the harvest, and that laborers are offering to enter it. We await the means to send them.

CHARTERED INSTITUTIONS.

Straight University, New-Orleans, Louisiana.

Instructors—Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D., President; Rev. S. S. Ashley, Acting President; Rev. C. H. Thompson, D.D., Theological Department; Professors J. F. Fuller, R. M. Williams, Louis A. Bell; Mrs. S. A. Fuller; Miss Mary A. Ashley; Miss M. A. Burrows; Miss Mary J. Thompson; Miss Nellie A. Ramsay; Mrs. Selina Gray; Mrs. L. E. Piper; Mr. C. G. Austin; Mr. Thomas Brown.

Rev. J. W. Healy, D.D., the president, has been absent during most of the year in Great Britain, soliciting funds for the institution, and for the general work of the Association.

The institution has never been more prosperous during the three years of its existence. An effort has been made to raise the standard of scholarship, made practicable by the increased facilities for common-school education offered in New-Orleans. The elementary department has, in consequence, been reduced to one room, and a corresponding diminution has occurred in the number of scholars enrolled. There is now a total of four hundred and thirteen. These are well classified in preparatory and normal departments, with the beginning of a regular college class, and twelve in a theological class, under Rev. C. H. Thompson, D.D. Dr. Thompson writes, October 21st, instant:

"I am in want of funds to-day for purposes of the theological department. I received last week two very promising young men, and I think I shall get another this week; but whether I shall be able to keep them or not will depend very much upon whether I can help them. They must be furnished with books, and aided in their efforts to sustain themselves."

If provision could be made to meet the expenses for board, the numerous applications indicate there would be many more students from the country. And as there is no similar institution in Texas, where, as well as in Louisiana, the colored population is proportionately large, the district tributary to it is very great. The fact that the majority of the pupils have hitherto belonged to Roman Catholic families gives it peculiar importance in a missionary view. In connection with the Central church, the basement of which may be used, when necessary, for the theological department, the institution offers to the colored youth of the south-west the advantages of a liberal education, under right moral and religious influences.

The following résumé of its present facilities has just been published:

"There are large, clear, well-ventilated rooms for study and recitation, furnished with every appliance for comfort and intellectual culture; a well-selected library of nearly one thousand volumes; a reading-room supplied with three local dailies, and a good variety of papers from abroad; a good debating society, sustained by the students, in successful operation, having a nucleus of a library for the use of its members.

"A weekly exercise in the chapel, held Wednesday afternoon, is divided between instruction in the elements of vocal music, rhetorical exercise, and a general lecture; one lecture a week also given to the young ladies in attendance, by a lady eminently fitted by her large experience and culture for this important trust, forms in itself a special and valuable attraction. Instruction on the piano, with use of the instrument, and in drawing, is given at a moderate charge. The University has just received the donation of a beautiful square grand piano, of the Hallet, Davis & Co. manufacture."

An experienced corps of instructors is provided. Rev. S. S. Ashley, who was State Superintendent of Schools in North-Carolina, has shown a practical ability for organization and the general management of the affairs of the University, and brings to the work of teaching a ripe scholarship and rare facilities in conveying instruction.

Tougaloo University, Tougaloo, Mississippi.

Board of Trustees.—Hon. R. C. Powers, Governor; Hon. H. R. Pease; Hon. A. Warner; Hon. T. W. Stringer; Hon. John R. Lynch; Hon. M. T. Newsome; H. S. Beals; Rev. E. M. Cravath; Hon. H. W. Warren; Rev. E. Tucker; Rev. M. E. Strieby; Gen. C. H. Howard; Ralph Emerson, Esq.

Instructors.—Rev. E. Tucker, Principal Academic Department; Prof. A. J. Steele, Principal Normal Department.

Assistants.—Miss H. S. Beals; Miss H. S. Lane; Mrs. A. J. Steele; Miss E. J. Etheridge; Miss H. C. Bullard; Miss M. J. Thompson; Mr. H. S. Beals; Mrs. H. C. Beals.

Number of pupils, 247.

Great prosperity has attended this growing institution. The normal department has attained high excellence under the care of Professor Steele. Its scholars have in large numbers gone forth to teach in the common-schools of Mississippi. And it is a source of joy to the officers of this Association that there are afforded here for colored youth not merely the benefits of a thorough education, but also those of right moral and religious influences.

A rare opportunity has been given for young men and women to work for their board while engaged in their studies; the former upon the farm, which is cultivated under the superintendence of Mr. H. S. Beals, a practical farmer; the young women, at the boarding-hall and in the kitchen.

ART. VIII. Missionary bodies and churches or individuals may appoint and sustain missionaries of their own, through the agency of the Executive Committee, on terms mutually agreed upon.

ART. IX. No amendment shall be made to this Constitution except by the vote of two-thirds of the members present at an Annual Meeting and voting, the amendment having been approved by the vote of a majority at the previous Annual Meeting.

BY-LAWS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

ART. I.—MEETINGS.

The Committee shall hold its regular meetings on the second Monday of each month, at four o'clock, P. M. Special meetings may be called at the written request of any two members of the Committee; the call for any such special meeting and the notices sent out shall state the business to be considered.

Only members of the Executive Committee shall attend its meetings, but the Committee may by vote invite the presence of any other person on special occasions.

Notices of the regular and special meetings of the Committee shall be sent by mail to its members, or otherwise communicated in writing, at least one day previous to the time of meeting.

ART. II.—OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES.

At the first regular meeting of the Committee after the Annual Meeting of the American Missionary Association, a Chairman, a Vice-Chairman and a Recording Secretary shall be chosen by ballot, who shall hold office for one year, or until their successors are elected. At the same meeting, the following Standing Committees for the year shall be appointed, to consist of seven members each, three to constitute a quorum:

1. A Committee on Finance, one of whom shall be the Chairman of the Executive Committee.
2. A Committee on Southern Work.
3. A Committee on Indian and Chinese Work.

A Committee on Appropriations, of four members, shall also be formed each year in the manner hereafter designated.

ART. III.—DUTIES OF OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES.

CHAIRMAN.—It shall be the duty of the Chairman to preside at all meetings of the Committee, to facilitate the transaction of its business, to sign, when necessary, checks upon the bank accounts of the Association, and to appoint all standing and special committees not otherwise provided for, subject to the approval of the Executive Committee.

VICE-CHAIRMAN.—In the absence of the Chairman, or in his inability to act, the Vice-Chairman shall perform his duties.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN.—In the absence or inability of both, a temporary Chairman may be appointed by the Executive Committee.

RECORDING SECRETARY.—The Recording Secretary shall keep the minutes of the Committee, and read them at its regular meetings. He shall cause all Committees to be notified, in writing, of their appointment within twenty-four hours thereafter, and shall inform them of the business referred to them. In his absence or inability to act the Chairman shall appoint a substitute.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Finance to examine the accounts of the Treasurer for the month preceding each regular meeting of the Executive Committee, before such meeting, taking the books of account kept by him, and comparing them with his statement of the month's receipts and disbursements and with the vouchers, and to certify to the correctness of such statement when approved by them. They shall also cause to be kept a book, wherein shall be set forth in detail (1) all stocks and bonds owned by the Association, at par, with a note of the original cost of the same to the Association; (2) all real estate (both land and buildings) and other property of the Association, with the full cost of the same; and (3) all property held on special deposit or in trust. This book shall be at all times open to the inspection of the members of the Executive Committee, and the record shall be so added to and amended, from time to time, under the direction of the Finance Committee, as to show at all times a correct statement of the property of the Association, and of any special trusts in its hands. All title deeds to real estate and certificates of stocks and bonds owned by the Association shall be in the charge of this Committee, who shall provide a proper place for their safe keeping. This Committee shall, when occasion requires, direct the sale and transfer of stocks, invest any funds of the Association not required or designed for current expenses, and in general shall have the oversight of the financial concerns of the Association, under the direction of the Executive Committee.

COMMITTEES ON SOUTHERN AND INDIAN AND CHINESE WORK.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Southern Work and of that on Indian and Chinese Work to report to the Executive Committee, at its regular meeting every month, such suggestions or proposed action as shall seem to them desirable for furthering the efficiency and economy of the Missionary and Educational Work of the Association in their respective departments. They shall also have power to manage the current work of the Association assigned to them, subject to the general supervision and direction of the Executive Committee. Each of these Committees shall appoint its own meetings, keep books of record of its proceedings (the minutes of each Committee being read at the regular meetings of the Executive Committee), and may consult and advise with the Corresponding Secretaries, with the Treasurer of the Association, and with the District Secretaries and Agents in regard to its work.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.—It shall be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the work of the Association carefully, and to present to the Executive Committee, at its meeting in May or June, a detailed statement of the amounts required in each department of the Association for the proper conduct of its work, and an estimate of the probable receipts of the Association, together with its recommendations as to the amounts which should be appropriated for the next fiscal year. This Committee shall consist of the Chairman of the Executive Committee, and the Chairmen of the first three Standing Committees.

Each of these Standing Committees shall elect a Chairman and a Secretary from their own number, and shall hold a monthly meeting to consider matters pertaining to their departments.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES may be appointed from time to time, as required. Standing and Special Committees can be formed only of members of the Executive Committee. All Special Committees shall examine and report upon every matter referred to them, with the facts in substance, and their opinions and recommendations, so that the Executive Committee may be fully enabled to act thereon.

APPEALS.—Every appointee of the Association has the fullest liberty of appeal to the Executive Committee. Such communications shall be referred to the Committee on Southern Work, or to the Committee on Indian and Chinese Work, according to the part of the field from which they come, for examination and a report on the matter involved, at the next meeting of the Executive Committee, when they shall receive careful attention in executive session.

ART. IV.—DUTIES OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

The Corresponding Secretaries shall conduct the correspondence of the Association and of the Executive Committee, except that which relates immediately to the Treasurer's department, and shall have the charge and direction of the work of the Association under the Executive Committee, and shall present to the various Standing Committees such suggestions and plans as shall seem to them desirable for the efficient working of the Association. They shall also prepare each month, and put into the hands of the Chairman of the Executive Committee, before its regular monthly meeting, a schedule of the business which the Standing and any Special Committees may report to the Executive Committee for its action, and any other business they may desire to bring before the Executive Committee. It shall also be their duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee all matters relating to their several departments, and to sign checks upon the bank accounts of the Association.

All appointments of missionaries, whether they are to act as pastors or general missionaries, presidents and professors of chartered institutions, principals of high and normal schools, district secretaries, field superintendents and other agents, and all matters involving questions of property or affecting the policy of the Association, shall be referred to the Executive Committee for final action.

ART. V.—DUTIES OF THE TREASURER.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all money contributed or intrusted to the Association, and to give receipts therefor; to deposit it to the credit of the Association in such bank or institution as may be designated by the Finance Committee; to keep clear and accurate accounts of all sums received and expended by the Association; to make payments and remittances in accordance with, and never in excess of, the appropriations made by the Executive Committee; to endorse checks and drafts for deposit, and sign checks for the purposes of the Association; to report to the Finance and Executive Committees each month the receipts and disbursements for the previous month, and at the end of the fiscal year, for the year, and to keep all books of account required by them; to conduct the correspondence relating immediately to his department and to perform such other acts as are necessary to the faithful execution of the duties of his office.

His books of account and vouchers for payments shall at all times be open to the inspection of any member of the Executive Committee, and shall be submitted by him each month to the Finance Committee for their examination.

It shall be his duty to present to the Standing and Special Committees and to the Executive Committee such financial business as needs their action.

ART. VI.—DISTRICT SECRETARIES.

The Executive Committee shall appoint such District Secretaries as they may deem expedient, who shall visit churches and in other ways disseminate information concerning the condition and needs of the Association throughout the districts assigned to them. They shall also collect funds, and perform other duties that may be required. They shall keep in constant conference with the New York office, and every month shall send to it, for the Executive Committee, a report of their work the previous month and of the condition of the interests of the Association in their several districts.

ART. VII.—CHECKS AND PAYMENTS.

All checks upon the bank accounts of the Association shall have space provided for three signatures—viz.; those (1) of the Chairman (or Vice-Chairman) of the Executive Committee, (2) of a Corresponding Secretary, and (3) of the Treasurer. Any two of these signatures shall render a check valid, but no check shall be valid with one signa-

All transfers of stock, conveyances of real estate and other instruments requiring the seal of the Association shall be signed in the same manner.

The crops of cotton and corn this year are good. By means of what is raised on the farm the board of students is reduced to about ten dollars a month.

Three thousand dollars were received from the State in aid of the normal department. By means of this, some fine apparatus, furniture, and books have been purchased. A part of it was allowed toward the salaries of that department. An appropriation of one thousand dollars to help pay the board of two students from each county, who should be sent there by the State, was provided for by the Legislature. That has not yet become available, for lack of attention of the county superintendents in properly selecting and sending these students. Should they come now, it would necessitate the dismissal of some of the others, for want of room.

In last year's report the need of another dormitory was mentioned. It has become a more pressing necessity. Must we deny admission to these ex-slaves and their children, who hunger and thirst for instruction, just such as is here offered?

One generous friend from Illinois, who never fails to do his full part, gave one thousand dollars for the erection of a temporary building to shelter a part of those who would otherwise be turned away. That building is already crowded.

Who will devise liberal things to lay the foundations of a brick hall to accommodate two hundred students? It might also contain a chapel for general exercises, and for the church to worship in until a separate edifice can be erected for that.

This is the only chartered institution we have for the populous States of Mississippi and Arkansas. It is centrally located, (near Jackson,) and has great natural advantages of situation. When it is added that the Divine blessing has most conspicuously rested upon our efforts there, what more need be said to induce those whom the Lord has prospered in worldly goods to respond to the call of Providence, and make an investment where the interest will be an annual yield of educated minds and sanctified hearts?

GRADED SCHOOLS WITH NORMAL DEPARTMENTS.

Columbus Union Academy, Columbus, Mississippi.

Principal.—J. N. Bishop.

The principal, Mr. J. N. Bishop, has also served as County Superintendent of Public Schools. He has made "the Academy" a model for the colored schools of the eastern part of Mississippi. The school has been full and the progress of the pupils good. The corps of instructors carried to their work skill and experience as teachers, and zeal for the elevation of the colored race. They take no respite on Sunday, and find their pupils no less eager to meet them in Sunday-school than upon week-days.

The building and site are owned by this Association. The house is of wood, and was reconstructed from an Army Hospital. It is not inconvenient, but is hardly warm enough to be comfortable the coldest days of winter.

We rent a dwelling for a teachers' home. This is located near the Academy, and should be purchased if a permanent institution is to be maintained there. It would cost about three thousand dollars.

Yielding to the friendly suggestions of Mr. Bishop, the County school authorities have, the past year, made a liberal appropriation in aid of the school.

Barnes Institute, Galveston, Texas.

Principal.—Mr. J. O. Stevenson.
Assistants.—Miss A. N. Keen, Miss H. S. Lane, Miss M. A. E. Nichols.

Number of pupils, 183.

This is our only attempt at a school of the higher grade in Texas. It has been in successful operation some three years. The building is commodious and centrally located in the city of Galveston, but the grounds belonging to it are insufficient. An efficient board of trustees, principally of colored residents, have rendered valuable aid in the enterprise.

The State School Superintendent of Texas proposed last fall to rent the building and pay the salaries of our teachers. The details of the business were conducted with a local Board of School Directors. A written contract was entered into for the building, but our missionary teachers were rejected. Before information of this fact could reach us, certain unsatisfactory colored teachers were put in charge of the school. The result was that the pupils withdrew and but a remnant of the school remained. The building was not properly cared for, and the whole situation was most disastrous to the interests of the Association and the trustees.

The house was finally recovered, and our efficient Principal with experienced missionary assistants again assumed charge of the school. It immediately filled up again, and a profitable school and Sunday-school was continued till June, at the expense of the Association. This instance shows the importance of still retaining our hold of school property in the South wherever we propose to maintain our missionary work.

Rio Grande Seminary, Brownsville, Texas.

Missionaries.—Rev. Jeremiah Porter, Mrs. E. C. Porter, Miss Nellie A. Waterman.

This institution is still in charge of Rev. Jeremiah Porter and his estimable wife. Its principal object is to afford a Christian education to Mexican youth. Our missionaries there have also sustained a Sunday-school for the Freedmen. Mr. Porter has preached for them.

Now that the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has undertaken the evangelization of Mexico, this school and the entire enterprise at Brownsville might properly pass under their care.

Pine Bluff Normal.

Our indefatigable missionary workers, Mr. M. W. Martin and his daughter Mrs. L. E. Allason, have remained at their posts at Pine Bluff throughout the year.

The property there was sold to the School Board with a view to establish the Normal School at Little Rock. The payments have not been made when due; but at this date only a small amount remains behind.

The school, partly under the city auspices, has been successful in the excellent discipline maintained, the progress of the pupils in their studies, and in the exemplary moral and religious influence of the teachers. There has been considerable religious interest. Mr. Martin has conducted an efficient temperance organization as well as the Sunday-school and a prayer-meeting. He has asked for a minister to be sent who should assist in organizing a church and should maintain regular church services upon the Sabbath. If Providence does not open the way for us to build upon our land at Little Rock which was conditionally donated by the city, we shall favor undertaking to do more at Pine Bluff the coming year.

It is noticeable that a few Chinese were brought under the influence of our missionaries at Pine Bluff. The following from Mrs. Allason will illustrate both the sad need of intelligent religious teaching and its beneficent effect when rightly received, with the Divine blessing:

A BAPTIZING.

"I witnessed a 'baptizing' here not long since. To me the jumping, shouting, dancing, and screaming seemed perfectly horrible in connection with such ceremonies. It seemed sacrilegious. One of our young men stood at my side quietly during the baptizing, and as I looked up at him, I noticed the tears silently rolling down his cheeks. Noticing my look he said, 'O Mrs. Allason, I do so long to be admitted into one of Christ's churches, but it seems to me I can not join in with this noisy crowd. It seems to me I want to be alone with my Saviour, and I feel very still away down in my heart, and yet so happy. But although I know these people do not mean it for that—still this noise and fuss seems to me like a mockery of the gentle Jesus.'

"My own heart reëchoed his words, and I long for the time to come when we can organize a little church here, where these more intelligent and enlightened young Christians can worship God in a better way than their ignorant parents who have been brought up in the darkness of slavery. Must we wait very long?"

Lincoln Institute, Jefferson City Mission.

Principal.—Rev. M. H. Smith.
Assistants.—Mrs. Sophia L. Smith, Miss Matilda A. Blackman.

This institution was started by the contributions of colored troops soon after the war, under the management of Captain R. B. Foster. It has an efficient board of trustees and has received considerable aid from the State. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have long been connected with our Freedmen's work, but do not at present receive any salary from the Association. The school requiring one more teacher for which the funds were wanting, we sent Miss Blackman, of the Union Park Congregational church, Chicago.

This is an important institution, being the only one of the kind in Missouri open to the colored people, having a good foundation in the way of a building, and at this time being wholly under active Christian influences.

We can not do better for the Freedmen of Missouri than to encourage the faithful workers at that school by such coöperation as may be required.

COMMON-SCHOOLS WITH SUNDAY-SCHOOLS CONNECTED.

Below we give the names of our missionary teachers in common-schools. They are generally not less experienced and competent as teachers than those in the higher grades; they are no less zealous and faithful as Christians, and are certainly subject to more hardships and self-denial.

The above list should stand for a roll of honor, though space forbids our entering into the interesting details of labor in each place. We endeavor as far as possible to secure the support of those teachers from the public-school authorities now having charge in most of the States. In some cases we have paid the traveling expenses, and in some have supplemented the salaries when insufficient. In still other instances where the State funds have failed or have not been promptly paid, as in Texas, we have been compelled to advance money for immediate wants; and to bring home such teachers as were ill, or for any reason could not remain and wait for their pay.

By this coöperation, as far as practicable, with State and county school officers, we have been able to put into those parts of the South which have been longest neglected many excellent Christian workers who could not otherwise have gone.

CHINESE IN AMERICA.

CALIFORNIA.

Advisory Board.

Rev. George Mooar, D.D.; Rev. I. E. Dwinell, D.D.; Rev. A. L. Stone, D.D.; Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D.D.; Rev. Joseph Rowell, and Samuel Pillsbury, Esq.

Superintendent.

REV. JOHN KIMBALL.

Missionary Teachers.

Miss J. A. McCormick, Los Angeles; Mr. W. K. Rowell, and Mr. G. Gam, Oakland; Miss M. J. Sherman, and Miss M. A. Burrows, Sacramento; Mr. J. F. Bowers, Miss Jennie Hopkins, Miss L. E. Sawyer, and Miss —— Clark, San Francisco; Miss M. K. Colburn, and Miss M. A. Burnett, Stockton.

The Lord has set his approving seal upon the efforts to open the minds of the Chinese in California to the Gospel. Five converts united with the Third Congregational church, San Francisco, October 6th, instant. Rev. Dr. Mooar, of our Advisory Board, is temporarily preaching to that church. Four had united with the First Congregational church at Oakland while he was pastor. One has joined the First Congregational church at Sacramento, during the year. Eight originally applied to join the Third church, San Francisco, while the Rev. Wm. C. Pond was its pastor. They had been specially instructed by him, and after a careful examination by a committee were pronounced qualified for membership. A portion of the church opposed their admission, and they were put upon a probation, at first, of two months. At the end of that period the opposition in the church still existing, their uniting with the church was postponed six months. Mr. Pond says:

"This second postponement was of course a severe disappointment to these brethren. The reality of their conversion was attested by the spirit in which they received it. Even in the first shock of it, it did not shake their purpose to be Christ's. 'I shall follow Jesus though I join no church,' was the reply."

Two of the number returned to China before the expiration of the six months. One has died. Mr. Pond gives the following interesting facts concerning him:

"His name was Lee Kim. He had been in the country but a few months, and could not use our language at all. My knowledge of him had to be gained through an interpreter wholly. He came from China on the same steamer on which one of the Chinese members of the First Congregational church in Oakland, Ah Hong, was returning to this country. Their bunks were side by side. Hong's kindness won his heart, and when, in response to his inquiries about California, Hong told him not only of the country but of Christ, he listened, and was brought to believe. Thus before touching our shore he had abandoned the worship of the gods of his fathers and chosen Jesus as his God. Thrown among our brethren, he learned from them more and more of Christ, and, since I have known him, he has evinced a gentleness and modesty and sincerity as a follower of Jesus, the impression of which, it seems to me that I can not lose till I meet him above."

The difficulties and feeling growing out of the question of admitting these Chinese finally resulted in the resignation of Mr. Pond; but still God has overruled the matter, and the five patient waiters have joined the church of their own choice.

At its October meeting, the State Congregational Association passed the following resolution bearing on the subject:

"Resolved, unanimously, That the doors of our places of worship are freely open for the admission of all persons of this or any other class, and that we will welcome all who give evidence of conversion to Christ, to complete fellowship with us in the Gospel."

Three additional ladies have gone over to California during the year, to engage in our missionary work for the Chinese.

Miss L. E. Thayer, from New-York, went to San Francisco, where she has taught a night and Sabbath-school in the old First Congregational edifice. She writes, October 11th, instant:

"I devote one evening each week to prayer-meeting and Bible exercises. G. Gam comes in then and assists me in explaining portions of Scripture. They commit verses to memory quite readily, and seem to comprehend them."

Miss J. A. McCormick, of Minnesota, volunteered to go to Los Angeles, where we had long desired to locate a missionary, but were discouraged by the cruel massacre of fifteen Chinese there last fall, including one woman and one boy. Miss McCormick, on October 1st, instant, gives these interesting facts:

"The month of September I enrolled twenty-six pupils, with an average attendance of six. You will perceive that they are very hard to get in and very irregular.

"I go to their shops and beg them to go with me; sometimes meet them on the street and insist upon their coming in to see the school, if they can not stay. They promise to come when they have time. They are very industrious, and their ruling motive is love of money. I have found it utterly impossible to establish a day-school. I can not get one to come. I find but one child in the town, a bright boy of nine. I bring him to my room sometimes, and teach him, then they take him home. He dares not go on the street alone. There is strong prejudice against them here, and but few, even of those who are without prejudice, have the moral courage to avow themselves favorable to their education."

Miss M. A. Burrows, who had been under commission from the American Missionary Association to the Freedmen in New-Orleans, has just gone to assist Miss Sherman at Sacramento. Rev. Dr. Dwinell thus writes of the success of the mission there:

"This school from the start has made its Christian aim prominent. It did not approach the Chinese with a light in a dark lantern to raise the slide a little as they became unsuspecting and would bear it. The slides were all raised from the beginning, and what light from it could penetrate their understandings, shone in. It began with the proclamation, "There is no other god but the one living and true God; and Jesus Christ, his Son, is the Saviour of men; and the Bible his word." It taught Christianity, it did not assail paganism. It let out the light; the pupils made the applications, and quicker than you would think, they see where they hit. The school, therefore, has never lost any thing in influence or moral power by shifting its ground or being misunderstood. It came up in front of the Chinamen offering to teach them English, and asking to introduce them to Jesus.

"In this way it has been a moral magnet, attracting some, having no hold on others. Some are drawn to it, others keep aloof. Christ in the presence of Chinamen, as among the Jews of old, and everywhere else, is a divider.

"Enough pupils, however, have been drawn into the school on this high moral plane to occupy the teacher and enable her to go forward with her work without subtraction of moral earnestness or power. And the influence that has gone out has very likely reached a thousand Chinamen, put them to thinking, and compelled them to come into some personal relation or feeling toward the new moral power that sues for their allegiance."

The Chinese convert, G. Gam, is still in our employ, and has labored in Sacramento, Oakland, and San Francisco.

At Stockton, Misses Burnett and Colburn do not flag in their zeal. They have, perhaps, reached more women and children than have the other missionaries, though Miss Sherman, also, is daily instructing some four or five women, and often visits the families at their homes.

Superintendent Kimball urges the occupying of new stations and opposes the increase of our commissioned laborers at any one place, both because of the need elsewhere and because he believes the missionary spirit of the churches should be developed so that they may reinforce our teachers from their own numbers. Dr. Dwinell says on this subject: "Many more may find an open door into paganism at hand, if they are disposed, without longer folding their hands and sighing for heroic opportunities at a distance."

On this phase of our Chinese work, Rev. E. P. Smith, our Secretary of Indian Missions, who visited California in March last, writes:

"I believe the method you have adopted is wise, and the best one—not attempting to organize separate churches and independent schools, but attaching the work at every point to the church and making it as far as possible the mission of the church. In other words, you help and invite the church at a given place to undertake a missionary work for the Chinese. At first, when I saw the fine appointments of the Methodists and Presbyterians in San Francisco, I was sorry that we were so far behind them, but if owning a separate building would involve the attempt to sustain a distinctively Chinese church, as it likely would, then we are better without the building, being obliged to throw ourselves into the Congregational church edifices, where we can call for help from the church members."

Secretary Smith's closing appeal should reach every Christian in the land, namely:

"Oh! that Christians who have prayed so long, with eyes shut, for the conversion of the world, would only come and see, or would believe those who have seen and who tell them that here is a wonderful opening for good. The heathen have come over and are sitting at our feet to be taught! Why not pray now with our eyes open, and our hearts and purses too?"

One more station has just been opened near Twenty-fourth street, in San Francisco, under care of Miss Clark, of that city, and with the coöperation of that city, and with the coöperation of Rev. Wm. C. Pond and certain members of the Third Congregational church.

The only limit to our Chinese work seems to be in the amount of funds appropriated. There are several applicants upon our list ready to go to the Pacific coast whenever we can send them. We have not yet broken ground in Oregon, though there is a promise of cooperation there from Rev. Dr. Atkinson and others. There are now a large number of Chinese at work on the Western portion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. The demands of this enterprise are increasing the Chinese population in Oregon, and in Washington Territory, both by transfer from California and by direct importation. They are also increasing in Southern California. In the large cities of California their numbers remain about the same from year to year.

It is clear that we can not reasonably expect to find excuse for doing less for these heathen because of any diminution in their numbers or because of having reached all who are accessible. We invite contributions specially designating this branch of our work from those who are peculiarly interested in it. We beg, also, that our Christian brethren and sisters will not fail to remember in their prayers these heathen who are in their blindness still and bow down to wood and stone in our own land of Bibles and churches.

Since writing the above, a paper read by Rev. Dr. Mooar before the California Association has reached us, from which we can not help making an extract:

"The general hopefulness of the labor in behalf of this people is becoming greater every year.

"It is a matter for regret that smaller instead of larger donations have been received from Californian churches this year than before. It is certainly strange that as the work and the expense of it increase, collections and contributions should diminish. We must believe this arises from temporary inattention. Especially appropriate is it that in the location where the devoted teachers are laboring, the people should encourage the Association by large benefactions.

"As one of the leading organizations for benevolence in our Congregational host, having a noble history, and eminently appealing work, and having also the often and fully expressed confidence of our best men East and West, the American Missionary Association should command a peculiarly generous response among all our churches."

CONCLUSION.

In closing this extended review of our work in America, we are renewedly impressed with a sense of gratitude to God for the large means bestowed, and for the tokens of his spiritual favor, especially in the numerous revivals in our churches in the South. But yet we are weighed down with a sense of the need of greater material and spiritual help.

MORE MEANS NEEDED.

When we consider the vast mass of people in the South—greater in numbers than in the great West—when we think of the alarming proportion of them who can neither read nor write, of the hostility of races, of the great responsibility resting upon these antagonistic masses, and especially when we see the wide and effectual door opened there for Christian culture; and yet how few schools, educated ministers, and pure churches they have—so vastly disproportioned to what is enjoyed at the West—we can understand that, without great increase of expenditure, we shall not, as patriots and Christians, do our duty to the South.

The same is true, though in a less degree, among the CHINESE in our land; while among the INDIANS, the philanthropic policy of the government will be of little comparative value, unless Christian teachers and churches shall be multiplied. Greatly increased contributions alone can meet the responsibilities of the church, and enable it to reap the golden harvests for Christ that are waving around us, calling for the sickle and the "harvest home."

The hopeful sign under God for such increased contributions is the awakening of the churches to the efficiency and feasibility of systematic benevolence. This plan, so blessed to the giver, is the guarantee that the liberality of the church may in some good measure be developed. It is like the voice of spring, reaching not the few stately trees or favored spots of land, but starting into activity every rootlet and bud in the whole spiritual world.

Realizing, with other benevolent societies, the value of this plan, we commend it to the distinct consideration of this meeting, and to the prayerful and practical action of every friend of Christ.

SPIRITUAL REFRESHINGS.

We but reëcho the voice of all missionary societies when we utter our prayer for a season of spiritual refreshing from on high. The whole church needs it, that its benefactions may be systematically and copiously poured forth, and that they may be given in a spirit that will carry with them the divine blessing.

All our missionary work, as well as the churches, need this effusion:

1. The anti-slavery discussions of the last forty years were a John-the-Baptist call to repentance, which was followed by the war laying the axe at the root of the tree. Then came the Christ-like mission of teachers and ministers, instructing the emancipated slaves; but the full gospel blessing will not be reached till the Pentecostal baptism shall fall upon teachers, missionaries, and people, quickening all activities, and giving them a power that shall bring forth new-born souls, not by scores and hundreds, but by thousands upon thousands; that shall break down all walls of caste-prejudice, so that there shall be no blacks and no whites, no North and no South, but when all shall be one in Christ Jesus; and when Africa's redeemed sons shall return to spread spiritual life and light over her long-darkened and desolated lands.

2. In like manner, the incoming peoples—infidel, semi-infidel, and papal—from Europe, and the heathen from Asia, headed by the Chinese, should not only be welcomed by our rich soil, equal laws, and free schools, but their coming should be to a Pentecostal Jerusalem, that they, out of every nation under heaven, might hear the Gospel, sent home to their hearts by the power of the Holy Ghost, so that they may dwell among us, eating their meat in gladness and singleness of heart, or, like the eunuch, returning baptized and instructed in the divine word, may bear the precious gift to the lands whence they came.

3. Especially is this needed for the red-man of our forests. A new world is rising around him, coming out of the chaos of crime and cruelty, and it needs not only the power of the Government to fix the firmament of law, order, and justice, but also, and above all, the divine voice to call the man into existence, and the divine spirit to breathe into him the breath of spiritual life.

We ask that special prayer be made for this object in all the devotional exercises of this anniversary, and that supplication be offered throughout the churches until the Spirit come in power.

INDIANS.

THE past year has shown with increasing clearness the importance and necessity of the present policy of our government toward the Indians. It is a policy of peace and justice, and should have the hearty Christian coöperation of all the friends of the Redeemer.

The progress of civilization, and the development of the spirit of individual and national enterprise, are fast destroying the value of the hunting-grounds of the Indians, as a means for securing their subsistence. If, in this vital crisis, they are not met in the spirit of simple human justice, on the part of the government, with subsistence during the transition from a nomadic to an agricultural life; and in the higher spirit of Christianity, on the part of the friends of humanity and religion, with a supply for their intellectual, moral, and spiritual necessities, it will be strange if God's judgments do not through them fall upon the nation.

The following facts are derived mainly from the report of Secretary Smith:

The Association has had assigned to its care by the government, four Indian agencies: the Skokomish Agency, Washington Territory; Chippewa Agency, Minnesota; Lake Superior Agency, in Wisconsin; and the Menomonees, Oneida, and Stockbridge Munsees, at Green-Bay, Wisconsin. In all these agencies there has been an earnest attempt for the amelioration of the condition of the Indians. In none of them has it been fruitless, and at several points the results have been very gratifying.

The Skokomish Agency in Washington Territory, Edwin Eells, agent, had under its care at the last census 960 Indians, mainly composed of two tribes, the Clallams—about 650, and the Twanas—about 300. Only the latter live on the reservation, and but about half of these are found there regularly.

The government appropriations, in addition to the agent's salary, are as follows:

For support of boarding-school and pay of teachers	$2500
For carpenter, farmer, and blacksmith, each	900
For physician and medicines	1200
For interpreter	500

Of the appropriations for school, $1200 is for teacher and assistant, and $1300 for subsistence. The boarding-school, at the last report, numbered fifteen, and applications were received for a greater number than the appropriation can support. The small number on the reservation leads the agent to doubt the expediency of sustaining a missionary there who has not a government position.

Regular Sabbath services have been kept up during the year, and the small audience-room, holding about fifty persons, is generally full.

Mr. Eells says that during the last year the confidence of the Indians has been gained, and labors for their christianization can be put forth with much greater prospect of success than could have been a year ago. The Indians who live on the reservation are half-civilized, work well, wear good clothes, and some have comfortable houses. But they have imbibed some of the vices as well as the virtues of the whites. There is, however, more improvement than he had expected—slow, indeed, but steady and marked.

Among the Oneidas in Wisconsin there has been no marked change. The tribe has been agitated over the question of the allotment in severalty of their lands, as yet without satisfactory result.

The educational and religious work seems to move slowly, as it has for the last ten or fifteen years.

Among the Menomonees of this agency, numbering 1370, there has been a marked advance. Through the effort of their agent, Rev. William T. Richardson, their pine was saved from grasping speculators, and the Indians themselves had been persuaded to undertake the work of bringing their logs to market. The plan succeeded admirably, and 2,000,000 feet were ready for sale in the spring. It is hoped that some of the funds from this pine may be made available for additional school privileges among this tribe. The aggregate products of their little farms were, of corn, 2100 bushels; oats, 565; rye, 419; wheat, 300; potatoes, 4000; turnips, 900; beans, 450. They have cut 510 tons of hay. They own, of cattle, 120 head; horses, 115; swine, 275. They have made forty tons of maple-sugar, worth ten cents per lb., and have gathered of wild rice 10,000 lbs., worth ten cents per lb.; have gathered 300 bushels of cranberries, worth $2 per bushel; caught and sold furs worth $6000. They have received for work done at the government farm, saw and grist mill on the reservation, $3500; for labor at lumbering for agent, $3100; for labor performed in grading railroad, and for outside lumbermen, in cutting and driving logs, about $12,000; making an aggregate of $18,600 of cash labor performed, besides their building, clearing land, raising crops, making sugar, gathering rice and cranberries, and hunting for furs.

Of the Stockbridge Munsees, more than half have declared their intention to become citizens.

At the Lake Superior Chippewa Agency in Wisconsin, (Major Clark's,) an effort has been made to concentrate the different bands of Chippewas in that State on one reservation, near the old mission ground at Odanah. By an act of Congress, several bands were authorized to sell their lands, the proceeds to be used for civilizing purposes at Odanah. But the love of old hunting-grounds has proved stronger than any inducement for a removal, and the Indians have declined to sell these reservations. Valuable pine-timber standing on them, however, can now be sold, and the proceeds used for civilizing purposes.

As yet, the great mass of these Indians are unreached by any civilizing influence. They are so scattered that three of their reservations the agent has not been able even to visit. Among these there is no farmer, nor school, nor religious work of any kind. At the St. Louis Reservation, at Lac Cour Oreille, and on the north shore of Superior, there are 1500 Indians. A mission-school ought to be established at each of these points.

The account of the progress among the Indians that have been within his reach in Major Clark's agency is very gratifying. The Indians are steadily coming to undertake manual labor, and engage in the same pursuits of life as the white people around. The question of the civilization of these Indians may be considered settled. Not that the work is done, but that it is so well begun, that nothing short of criminal neglect on the part of the government and friends of the Indians will allow of a failure.

Among the Chippewas of Minnesota, numbering 6000, the year has been eventful. The murder of eight persons in the vicinity of White Earth Reservation, by some straggling Pillagers, caused great excitement among the citizens on the border, and aroused a feeling of hostility to the Indians quite generally throughout the State. Two of the murderers are under arrest, awaiting trial.

We quote directly from Mr. Smith:

There is another side to the picture. The Indians have cheerfully allowed the arrest of those charged with murder, even when the suspicion was very slight. In July, the sheriff of Crow Wing County came to White Earth, and arrested two Indians charged with murder. I gave permission for their arrest, on the promise of a fair trial, and the Indians went off readily in the sheriff's wagon, on my promise to them of protection and justice. They were taken 150 miles away to a jail in Brainerd, and in a few days the jail was broken open by a mob at midnight, with, as I believe, the guilty consent of the sheriff, and the Indians were taken out and hung. For this lawlessness there has been no redress, and probably there can be none.

One year ago, two Indians were shot dead for no other offense than that of camping on a white man's ground. I have tried to secure the arrest of the murderers; but with a white man's jury, and the white sentiment of Minnesota, there is no redress for this outrage. It is a painful confession to make to these Chippewas, that I was utterly powerless to secure them justice in this matter.

It is difficult to make a general statement respecting the condition of the Chippewas in Minnesota. At only three points has any thing been attempted by way of education or civilization, namely: White Earth, Red Lake, and Leech Lake. There are some 800 Indians at White Earth, 1000 at Red Lake, and 1500 at Leech Lake. The remainder of the Minnesota Chippewas are scattered through the northern portion of the State, mainly at White Oak Point and Sandy Lake, on the Mississippi River, and at Mille Lac and Pembina.

The work at Leech Lake is mainly limited to a school of twenty-five or thirty pupils. The success of this school among the Pillagers has been sufficient to warrant a large increase of educational outlay, and to show plainly enough that Pillagers can be reached through the school, if in no other way; and, if nothing can be done with this generation, the next can be saved, if the proper appliances are used. The condition of the Pillagers, as a whole, is deplorable enough. They have a small reservation, with here and there small patches of hard-wood timber, entirely inaccessible, except by a boat on the lake, and made ready for the plow with great expense and labor. They have but a small fund for farming purposes, and have made almost no beginning to live from the soil. By the proclamation of the Governor of the State, they are forbidden to leave the reservation, while the game on their own lands would not subsist them one week. They can not begin to farm without help. Thus they have the alternative of starving, or running the risk of violating the governor's proclamation. An appropriation for civilizing purposes for these Indians seems imperative.

At Red Lake, the school opened by Miss C. E. Sibley has been attended by about thirty pupils. Want of conveniences and the difficulties of a strange language being considered, the progress of the pupils has been satisfactory. The Indians are interested in the school, and want very much to have it enlarged to a boarding-school, and have pledged $1000 for this purpose, if their pine can be sold.

When Mr. Wright first came here, the old chief said there were but four men who worked the ground like squaws; now there are hundreds. Indeed, there are few of these Indians who are not glad to work upon land, or in any way, for wages. Years of toil and faith on the part of these missionaries in former times have results, at least, in civilization, though apparently little in the spiritual advancement of the people.

These Indians are very enthusiastic for house-building, and are making good progress in farming. They have raised this year 6000 bushels of corn and 3000 bushels of potatoes. They ask that they may have religious education and training, the same as at White Earth. Rev. H. A. Stimson, of Plymouth church, Minneapolis, who was present at their council in September, pledged $150 toward a chapel for them. The Association hopes to secure an additional $300, sufficient to complete it. With this chapel, a boarding-school, and such assistance as government can furnish them, there is no reason to doubt the results of five years' labor at Red Lake. It will not civilize and christianize the tribe, but, with God's help, it will fairly start them on the way. I am satisfied that the question respecting these Indians is simply one of continuance and patience in well-doing, both by the government and Christian friends.

The Pembina band has made no improvement during the year, and there is very little prospect for them as long as they live off of a reservation. A single incident shot a ray of light into the surrounding darkness of this tribe. During the payment, we were spending the Sabbath at Pembina. Early in the morning, an Indian, half-clad in civilized garments, came to ask baptism for two of his children. We were inclined to put him off, not supposing that he had any conception of the meaning of the rite; and proposed, instead, to have services in the camp with such of the Indians as wished to attend. Getting the best interpreter to be found, who proved to be a French Catholic half-breed, we went to his wigwam, and found a small company of men, women, and children, gathered for Sabbath worship. When the Catholic interpreter found we proposed to make him a medium of Christian teaching, he deserted us; so we were left alone in the congregation, without any power of communicating with the worshipers. The Indians, seeing our dilemma, brought out their prayer-books, and began the Episcopal service themselves. They could not read a word; but the book seemed to help them, and, as near as I could judge, they went through with the ordinary service which is read in White Earth chapel, in Chippewa. Some three years ago, two of these Indian families spent a winter in White Earth. They sang, repeated the Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Creed, and responded in the worship most appropriately. We found there were about thirty who had joined themselves together, and were known as the Christian Band. We had no longer any hesitation as to the baptizing of the children, and Rev. Mr. Fay, of Minneapolis, on the Board of Visitors, took the children from their mother's arms, and gave them in baptism to her Saviour.

This company live in the northern part of Dakota, on Turtle Mountain, 100 miles west of Pembina. I recognized the leader in the worship as the man who came to me the day before, and asked the price of a mowing-machine. I told him probably a machine would cost at Pembina from $100 to $150, and he immediately took out $100, which he had saved from the annuity payment of himself and family, and commissioned me to buy him a machine. I tried to persuade him not to invest so much—his little all—in a machine which would be so liable to break and become useless; but he said he could work a mower, was going to raise stock, and would rather have a machine than any thing else in the world. In reply to my further pressure, he added that the $100 was his own money, and he wanted a mowing-machine. Three years ago, he took with him two calves from White Earth. They are his oxen now, with which he expects to do his mowing. Is it not a great pity that that band of thirty enlightened ones should be left alone, surrounded by the heathenism of Turtle Mountain?

Of the Indians at Mille Lac and White Oak Point, some 1600, nothing can be said, except that they are without instruction, and in their present surroundings seem to be without hope.

WHITE EARTH.—The report of this Reservation is even more gratifying than that of last year. The movement, so well begun, has gone forward with scarcely a check.

Seventy-five houses will be completed during the season. About one half of these are for Indians who are removed from other places in the State, and the remainder are for families who have hitherto lived in wigwams on the Reservation.

The school buildings have been enlarged by the addition of a boys' dormitory, and the erection of a chapel. Seventy-five boarding pupils can now be accommodated in this school. Two of the teachers are supported by the Association.

The Episcopal church on the Reservation has nearly doubled its membership during the year, and now numbers one hundred communicants.

The physician, the blacksmith, the farmer, and miller, with their wives, are all true missionaries. An industrial school and sewing society have been started among the women.

A new steam saw-mill has been erected, and 2,000,000 feet of lumber will be sawed during the season. The work of this mill is mainly done by Indians. The destruction of the crop by grasshoppers has been a serious blow to the civilizing effort. Last fall, the Indians prepared their ground for the spring crop. Their seed was sown in good time with every prospect of a fine harvest, when the army of grasshoppers swept the fields bare. This leaves them at the beginning of a cold winter with very little in store; and instead of the argument which we hoped to draw, from fifty to two hundred bushels of wheat to a family, for another year's increased tillage, we are obliged to meet this disappointment, and endeavor to inspire them with sufficient hope to try again.

Happily the large amount of labor required for preparation for receiving Indians, removed from other points of the State, has called for an unusual amount of labor, and has given them opportunity to earn wages during the summer.

The ambition of the Reservation now is to have frame houses and raise stock. Between twenty-five and thirty Indian families have oxen and wagons, and others have different kinds of stock, making a total of not less than five hundred head of cattle on the Reservation.

There have been many visitors at White Earth during the year, and no one has gone away without a new impression as to the possibility of civilizing Indians; and indeed it would be difficult to understand how a person could visit their farms, mill, school, and church, without being convinced that the problem of civilizing Indians, is the proper appliance of means to an end. Believe that the Indian is capable of improvement of heart and mind, and act accordingly, and the work is done. The labor may be severe and the time long; but whether the Indian can be civilized is no longer a question. The only question is, will the government make the reasonable appropriation, and the church exercise reasonable faith and Christian love. Minnesota herself could better afford to pay the total expense of the Chippewa Agency annually, than to allow this barbarism in her borders to continue. It is no time now for the churches to fall back. President Grant has put them to the front, and the year's work has demonstrated the feasibility of the campaign. It must be pushed now all along the line. For the six thousand Chippewas in Minnesota there are school privileges for only about a hundred children. Of the eight district Reservations of the State, only three have any attempt of any kind for civilization or Christianity among them. Practically, four thousand of these Indians are untouched by any influence of the whites, except those in whiskey-shops and lumbermen's camps.

BRAINERD.

Rev. Mr. Thompson reports the death of four members of this church during the year, and the addition of eight on profession of faith, and one restored. He says:

"I am glad to say that our congregations here are good; both Sabbath and day-schools are well sustained; the word of God is listened to with good attention, and several persons have applied for fellowship with us, some of whom we hope to receive at our next church meeting."

The trials the church has sustained, he thinks, have been blessed to them, and are leading the people to more entire reliance on Divine aid.

MANNING'S HILL.

Mr. Thompson says:

"I am glad to be able to speak with much comfort and hope of the church at Manning's Hill."

He reports that four members have been received on profession of faith, and one restored. Others had applied for admission, two of whom would be received at the next communion.

The day-school is well established, and is now receiving government aid.

ELIOT.

The necessity of rebuilding the church at Eliot has embarrassed the missionaries' labors. After alluding to this, the pastor says:

"Yet I am hopeful of the little church. Now that the chapel has been rebuilt, and is in a fair way to completion, the congregation thickens up, and the Sabbath-school is well attended, both by children and adults. This gives me much comfort, and I hope that God in his mercy may call many souls to himself through Sabbath-school instruction. Most of the teachers are young persons, who grew up under the care of missionaries early in the field. We now reap the fruit of their labors, thank God, and take courage."

CHESTERFIELD.

Mr. Venning, the pastor of this church, has been an invalid during much of the year. He forwards the statistics of the church, showing a generally prosperous condition. The church and congregation have contributed toward the support of the ministry, £11 6s. 6d.; for station purposes, £10 15s. 3½d.; for the Freedmen in the United States, £2 2s. 0d.; and for other benevolent objects, an aggregate of £30 3s. 9½d.

Mr. Wilson, forwarding the report of Mr. Venning, says:

"The church at Chesterfield is prospering in almost every thing. It is gratifying to see, notwithstanding their minister is an invalid, and can merely guide, how well every thing moves. It shows that his labors in the past have not been in vain, and must be very cheering to him, now that his work on earth is almost done."

BRANDON HILL AND PROVIDENCE.

These two churches and stations are under the care of Rev. S. B. Wilson. The church at Brandon Hill, like that at Eliot, have been compelled to renew their church building. Their Sabbath services have, therefore, been for the most part at Providence station. Mr. Wilson, in his August report, says:

"I am happy to report that our neat chapel is so well under way that we soon shall be able to use it; and that the people are very earnest and active in helping it on. They have contributed about $150 in money, which, considering their circumstances, is doing very well. They have also had a great deal of heavy work to do in bringing the material for the chapel to the ground. They say they are striving to have the building completed, that they may be able to attend service in it again."

The promise of spiritual growth, Mr. Wilson thinks, is very encouraging. He says:

"We have seen things in the past to make us rejoice, and feel that the blessing of God was upon us; and we hope he will bless us more abundantly, and that we shall see even better things."

Of Providence, Mr. Wilson says:

"I have enjoyed my labors this year very much, and have felt that God has blessed his truth to the little church there. Only two members have been added to the church, and one member restored; but an inquiring class has been formed, from which some will soon be gathered. The congregation has been unusually good. The Sunday-school was closed for six months, in consequence of the absence of the teacher, and the Sunday-school suffered because of it, but the teacher has returned, and the school recommences with this year."

RICHMOND.

The school at Richmond, under the care of Miss Woodcock has numbered fifty pupils, and they have made very satisfactory progress, giving the teacher great encouragement for the future.

In review of the general work, the Secretary of the Mission writes:

"Judging from the reports given the last meeting of the (Mission) Association, I should say that things were looking bright at nearly all the stations. It is true, our laborers are few; but we feel that God is with us, and we expect to see good accomplished in his name."

MENDI MISSION, WEST-AFRICA.

Missionaries.—Rev. George P. Claflin, Mr. D. W. Burton, Mrs. Claflin, Mrs. Burton, Mrs. M. M. Mair, Miss Emily Beeken, Miss Emma S. Porter.

Under Appointment.—Rev. J. K. Billheimer, Mrs. H. L. Billheimer.

Native Assistants.—Rev. George N. Jewett and wife, Samuel Goodman and four others.

Stations.—Good Hope, on Sherbro Island; Avery, on the Bargroo River; Läwänä, on the Boom River.

Rev. G. P. Claflin, Miss Emily Beeken, and Miss Porter have returned to this country during the year, on account of impaired health. The two latter will not probably return to Africa; Mr. Claflin expects to rejoin the mission in January, accompanied by his wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Billheimer have had some experience in missionary labors in Africa. They will sail at the earliest opportunity. Mrs. Billheimer has been pursuing a course of medical studies, with special reference to Africa as a field of labor.

The reports concerning the spiritual condition of the mission throughout the year have been in general favorable. At the Avery Station, notwithstanding the absence of ministerial help, some of the prayer-meetings have been of surpassing interest, people speaking in them in the Mendi, the Sherbro, and the English language, and the power of the Lord evidently present to convince of sin. Some of the native Christians are reported as doing their best to carry on the work of the mission in towns around Avery, and the truth is thus carried into places that would not be otherwise reached.

At Good Hope, five persons were admitted to membership in the church on profession of faith, at the communion season in April. The mission has much confidence in regard to them. The joy expressed by the missionary on hearing one and another say, with evident sincerity, they had found Jesus, can be likened only to the joy in heaven, of which our Saviour speaks, over "one sinner that repenteth." It is a joy, however, accompanied with anxious watchings, labors, and prayers that the new-born souls may walk in the truth, adorning the doctrine of God their Saviour, and recommending the love of Christ to their heathen neighbors. Only those who comprehend the nature of heathenism can appreciate an anxiety that would be overwhelming, but for trust in God.

SENEHU.

Last December, the country about Läwänä, being somewhat disturbed by war, Mr. Claflin visited a portion of country, some fifty miles from Avery, never before trodden by a white man. He visited nine barricaded towns, and several villages, in all of which, except the three villages nearest Avery, the Mendi language was spoken; and when the people heard him speak to them in their own tongue, their surprise and joy were very great. At nearly every town and village he was urged to tarry and teach the people, "for," said they, "you can speak our language." We will allow Mr. Claflin to tell the story, slightly abridging it. He says:

"The fame of the white teachers had preceded me, and everywhere I met with a pleasant reception, and was treated with honor. The extension of mission-work among them met with very general favor. The chiefs of several large towns assembled at Senehu, and nearly every one seemed to hail with gladness the prospective coming of teachers. The king, who has reputation as a man of progress and righteous judgment, is specially solicitous. He said, 'It is my heart's desire that teachers come and instruct us;' and again, when I spoke to him of the requirements of God's word, he said, 'I have need of instruction;' and again, 'I desire that they instruct us, and we change our way to that which is acceptable to God.' Senehu is a large barricaded town. Another town is to be built at its side this dry season. People from towns two days distant will come in numbers to dwell there. It is comparatively healthy, and is the centre of influence over a large section of country. The chief will be favorable to the teachers, and build a house for school and worship. I deem Senehu an important place to occupy. Many entreated me not to tarry long away, but to return and dwell there.

"Here, then, I submit the case. As a central position, it seems important, perhaps more so than any occupied by our mission. The people speak good Mendi. Could you have seen the interest they manifested, I think you would have been drawn toward them as I was. Making due allowance for their desire to 'hear and tell some new thing,' enough still remains for encouragement. But where are the teachers? Shall echo only answer 'where,' while countries are open, and people with one voice bid them welcome? Who comes in the name of God?"

On Mr. Claflin's return, if the condition of the country remains unchanged, he will commence missionary labors at this place. Before leaving this country, Mr. Claflin will visit some of our institutions in the South, to awaken an interest in behalf of Africa as a field of missionary labor, and to give such information to those already looking in that direction as will facilitate their preparation for it.

The importance of a close connection between our Southern work and Africa can hardly be over-estimated. In our Southern institutions there are probably not far from fourteen thousand young men and women, under Christian training. Probably no equal number of institutions can be found that have more clearly before them, as a direct object, the training of their pupils for humanity and the service of Christ.

Numbers of these pupils, with hearts touched by the love of Christ, are brought under Christian instruction, to learn how best to minister to others the blessings of which they are first partakers. To prepare for this work at home, is, with slight change, to prepare for the same work in Africa; but they need to learn the great demand for missionary work there. The wants of the home field are daily before them; the wants of the foreign field, like the objects of faith, need to be made known in order to develop in them that rounded Christianity that will everywhere strive to alleviate human suffering, and direct human guilt to the fount of cleansing.

Turning to Africa, we find that of its myriads of people only the smallest number have ever heard the story of the Cross. Yet Africa is to be given to Christ with the other nations of the earth. How, then, is it to be done? In large portions, bordering on either coast, white men can not be depended on for the work. Malaria has drawn a cordon along it that forbids. Her own children are to be made the special agents in her redemption. Upon them, trained first in the school of affliction, then made free by one of the most costly sacrifices recorded in the history of the world; borne upon the hearts of Christians, and educated for the work by their liberality, must fall the missionary mantle. They are to go forth in the spirit of Christ, with all their warm emotive nature, to spread the Gospel over their native land. Africa, despoiled of her children, must again receive them, clothed with the garments of salvation, and bearing in their hands the blessings of a Christian civilization. The white man must aid in the work of preparation, but God's temple will there be built mainly by her own children.

In the providence of God, special facilities for forwarding this work have been placed in the hands of this Association. It holds a permanent fund of $100,000 to be used only in Africa, and it has maintained there a few outposts. In God's good time the millions of slaves in our land were freed, and their education confided to us more than to any other organization. Peculiar responsibilities accompany such peculiar opportunities, and if neglected, they will be followed by peculiar condemnation.

The training in our schools, largely designed to encourage the industries of life, gives special fitness for the work in Africa. Indications are not wanting that the introduction of the Gospel into parts that for a long period subsisted by the slave-trade, must be accompanied by examples, as well as teachings, of the industries of civilized life. Other things being equal, the first Christian body that shall introduce into Africa a considerable number of missionaries of agriculture and the useful arts, who shall be, at the same time, missionaries of the Gospel of Christ, and be the former because of the latter, will be honored of God as the agency of the Gospel's earliest great triumph there.

The eyes of some of the pupils in our southern schools are being opened to this work, and seeing "men as trees walking," and seeking for clearer light, they are inquiring, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" or, responding to the voice of God, "Here am I; send me." The very best facilities must be afforded them. We confidently hope the time is near when we shall show a completed connection between our work in the South and in Africa, in the actual transfer of laborers.

A native African, a spiritual child of our mission, is now teaching Hebrew in Straight University, New-Orleans, while completing his course preparatory to the ministry in his native land; and we hope he will soon return there in the fullness of the Gospel of Christ, prepared at once to speak to his people, in their own tongue, of the wonderful work of God.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Makawao, Hamakua, and Kula.

Missionaries.—Rev. J. S. Green; Mrs. A. C. Green.

This mission, though under the care of the Association, receives very little aid from its treasury, being wholly sustained at the Island. Rev. J. P. Green, who, at the date of our last report, was an assistant of his father, has removed to Oahu, leaving his father, J. S. Green, now past his seventy-fifth year, the only ordained missionary at Makawao. He will have accomplished thirty years of missionary life at Makawao, if spared till February next, at which time he proposes to make out a fuller report of this mission than he now sends. He says:

"The year has been to me one of trial. First, because of the painful decrease of my people. Most of my staid, God-fearing, sin-hating brethren of Makawao have passed away. I can not but hope it is well with them. Others, and some intelligent members, have fallen away from the truth, and are now dishonoring God. Secondly, on account of the state of education—the schools having passed under control of government, which does not of late do any thing for the children of my district. Thirdly, from the decrease of missionary labor," (consequent on the removal of his son.)

Mr. Green reports very earnest efforts, on the part of some men in office, to repeal the law restraining the sale of intoxicating liquors to the native Hawaiians. If these should be successful, which there is reason to apprehend, the speedy depopulation of the island of the natives is imminent. On the other hand, the friends of temperance in the legislature were active, and a bill had passed one house, making the liquor-dealer pecuniarily responsible to the injured party for losses or damages that could be traced as the result of his sale.

No change is noticed in the condition, or membership, of the church, leaving the record much as last year. The English services continue, with an average attendance of thirty-five; but no church of foreigners has yet been organized, owing first, to the small number whose continuance could be counted on; secondly, because of the variety of denominational views among them; and thirdly, because of Mr. Green's anxiety to unite them in communion with the native Christians.

SIAM MISSION, BANGKOK, SIAM.

Missionaries.—Rev. D. B. Bradley, M.D.; Rev. C. B. Bradley; Mrs. Sarah B. Bradley and Mrs. Mary Bradley.

Mr. Graham resigned his connection with the mission in February. Mr. C. B. Bradley and wife, whose appointment was announced in our last report, reached the mission in January. He enjoyed the rare opportunity of commencing his labors by preaching in the Siamese language the first Sabbath after his arrival, and continued to do so for the six months reported.

The latest advices from Siam do not speak encouragingly of the reforms promised by the king. He seems, indeed, to have no heart for the superstitions of Budhism, and no liking for the support of the multitude of its priests; but he does not carry out the expected reforms in religion and government. Polygamy and slavery still remain with undiminished strength.

The Book of Daniel, translated by Mrs. Bradley from the Hebrew, is being printed on the mission-press. Translations of Jeremiah, and some other parts of the Old Testament, are now under revision, and nearly ready to print.

Of the $4946.79 expended for this mission, $2612 are paid from the earnings of the printing-press.

The committee regret not to be able to report conversions and additions to the little church at this mission. The faith of these missionaries and of God's people is still greatly tried; but the strengthening of the mission, by the addition of one who enters immediately upon the work of preaching the Gospel, without the delay of learning the language, renews our hopes.

SERMON.

THE CHURCH TAUGHT BY THE WORLD.

By REV. E. P. GOODWIN, OF CHICAGO, ILL.

"For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke 16:8.

This story does not read as if it were two thousand years old; rather like the last telegraphic paragraph from New-York, or the last city item of a Chicago morning paper.

This steward was a marvel of shrewdness. He would have made a first-class confidential clerk or cashier of our time. A large property to handle, evidently, and doubtless a fat salary with it. Then, as so often now, speculations, fast living, embezzlements; and, to hide the waste, falsifying of accounts, lying balance-sheets, and all that. And, in the end—apparently just when he fancied himself secure, his tracks all covered up—a thunderbolt of discovery and disgrace and impending ruin! But, being caught, he was not such a simpleton as to blow his brains out, or tap an artery, or take poison, after the fashion of the Orient. He was shrewder than that. His peril no sooner flashes on him than the way of escape flashes too. He is not going to be driven to work, nor to beg, after his wines and luxuries and idleness; not he. And so forthwith he summons his employer's debtors, puts their bonds into their hands, tells this one to alter his and make it half, that one to cut his down a fifth, and so on through all. And that done, he is ready to be put out of office, as well he may, with a score of houses holding their doors wide open for his welcome.

In this steward's sagacity lies the point of the parable. Our Lord does not at all commend the conduct of the man; it is his lord who does that. What Christ aims to emphasize is the text-fact, that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light; that they are more far-seeing and inventive, bolder in conception, more absorbed in devotion, more persistent in endeavor, as respects things temporal, than Christian people are, as respects things spiritual. And the pith of the application I understand to be this: that, while Christian men are to condemn the motives and spirit of men of the world, and stand aloof from all their questionable undertakings and policies, they are bound, nevertheless, to so far imitate them as to project their gospel plans with as much clear-sightedness and grasp, and bring to their prosecution as much tact and persistence and energy as mark men's worldly schemes.

I call you to note, therefore, two or three points as to which this worldly wisdom challenges our imitation; and, first, as to the breadth and largeness of the conception of what is attainable with which it inspires men. The fact is manifest to all observation. So prodigious is the self-estimate that men raise under this worldly inspiration, that on every side it breaks out in glaring conceits, egotism, presumption. And not seldom we find here the reasons for the unsuccess and wretched failures in which many men's schemes issue. They overrated their ability, grasped after things beyond their reach.

Nevertheless, it holds true that these high self-estimates, these glowing conceptions of results deemed realizable, have to do powerfully in developing men; and do, in fact, give a scope and grandeur to their enterprises they would otherwise never have. It is mainly a man's belief in the possibles that kindles his ambition, brings out the full measure of his energies, and holds him unflinchingly to the task of realizing his thought. And the noticeable thing is, that this worldly spirit rarely starts a man with a low ideal of what he can achieve. No matter what his calling, the feeling raised in him is, that with a fair chance, he can stand, in due time, abreast of the foremost. Find me the man who will confess that he never expects to be more than a second-rate farmer or carpenter or mason! Why, you can not insult one of these innumerable hosts that fill all the places of toil, even the man that carries a hod, or drives shoe-pegs, quicker than to call him a second or third-rate workman. Even a boot-black will take fire at such an imputation. And that servant-girl who should frankly admit that she could not cook and wash and iron worthy of a place at the head of the whole sisterhood of domestics, would be a curiosity, to say the least.

And so through all the vocations. Did any one ever know, on his own acknowledgment, of a second or third-rate doctor or lawyer or business man, of whatever branch? And where shall we go to find that citizen of the great republic who has not some time felt that, if the opportunity were given, he could do good service in making or mending tariffs, shaping the legislation of Congress, clearing up these muddles of finance and reconstruction; and could, on occasion, give the President wise counsel, and even take a turn to profit in holding the national helm itself? And there is no harm in men's thinking thus, provided they are doing their utmost to make good their purposes. The truth is, that there are multitudes of men scattered through all the callings and professions, who are, in all but the name, the peers of those in highest repute. And they have the best of rights to claim their place, and press their way to it; while, politically, it needs no arguing to make clear that there are thousands of citizens—and not all of one complexion either—who are just as competent to be representatives, senators, cabinet officers, presidents, as the most of those who, in our day, have filled such places, or are likely to. And they have the right to so think, and to persuade others with ballots in their hands to think likewise, if they can.

Doubtless there are mischiefs outgrowing from such a spirit, when not wisely limited and controlled. But, whatever these, it remains, that out of this spirit comes that determination, that devotion, that energy, which carry men on and up far beyond what they would else attain. It is this that makes master-workmen out of apprentices, bank presidents, railway superintendents, managers of great corporations, millionaires, out of boot-blacks, plow-boys, clerks, underlings of every grade.

But this spirit of profound conviction that grand things are within reach, universal as it is among men of the world, is one that rarely characterizes Christian people. Their prevailing witness about themselves is, with rare exceptions, one of disparagement. They have so few gifts, their early life was so unfortunate, they are so hedged about with obstacles, that there seems to be nothing attainable worth mention. They do not want the world to look at them, their growth, their consistency, their graces, their joys, for its illustrations of discipleship. They shall esteem it, in fact, a kind of marvel if they—such wretched worms of the dust, such halt and blind and fruitless believers—are at last let in at the portals of the city. Such testifyings are so common that they constitute a kind of unwritten prayer-meeting liturgy, whose wailings are in all the churches. Indeed, Christian people, when they talk of their hopes and prospects, not seldom run themselves so far down, down, down, as spiritual nobodies, that a telescope would not find them.

Hence it comes that men, who would take it as an insult to have the suspicion raised that they were any thing less than first-class mechanics or traders or bankers or business men generally, have no scruples whatever about confessing that they are disciples of a very low grade. They are always seeing visions of the grandest possibilities on the world-side, and being fired with ambition to realize them; while, on the Christ-side, the films grow thicker over their eyes, or nothing more offers than the old, narrow, scant, forbidding outlook, which it makes their hearts ache to think about. And so they continually compact growth and mightiness on this side, and dry up and wither on that. The result is—and this is the saddest thing pertaining to the matter—that their confessions of spiritual littleness and barrenness are largely true. While they stand, multitudes of them, at the head of their callings and professions, unsurpassed for the clearness of their understanding, the scope of their purposes, the foresight, tact, sagacity, energy with which they project and consummate their schemes; they are, nevertheless, little more than spiritual dwarfs. And this not at all, observe, in the sense of being untruthful, dishonest, or in any wise unprincipled; but simply as being undeveloped. They have never made enough of their spiritual calling to get out of the swaddling-bands and cradles; and, of necessity, they are puny in thought, experience, activity, every thing.

Of course, every true disciple is to measure his possibilities by the gospel standard, and not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. But that does not hold him back to an inferior development. On the contrary, it sets before him an ideal that dwarfs into insignificance all human conceptions; for it is nothing less than the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. And in order to his realization of such an end, this gospel calling supplies to him the indwelling and tuitions and helps of the Spirit of God. Surely, with such an ideal, and such conditions, it is not too much to ask or to expect that every disciple shall achieve as much for Christ, in development and efficiency, as he would for himself without God's calling and help.

I observe, further, that the same fact, as to the superiority of worldly wisdom, obtains as respects the enterprises in which men are associated. Here, as with the individual, the world's schemes infinitely outmeasure those of the church. The world-spirit makes nothing of submarine telegraphs, tunnels through mountain ranges, transcontinental railways, ship-canals, rebuilding a burnt city in a year, and the like. The greater the obstacles, the bolder its plans, the more fruitful its ingenuity, the more lavish its expenditures, the more determined and persistent its efforts, and, I may safely add, the grander its success.

Where, now, are our great Christian enterprises with which to match these which the world shows on every side? The best we can show are our mission-boards, with incomes that, all told, would hardly build one of a dozen lines of railroad, or bore a respectable gimlet-hole into the Sierras. Hardly one of them has received so much this last year as, in the same time, well-nigh a score of men in Chicago have each put into stone and brick and mortar. And most of these church treasuries, in spite of all the singing of "Coronation," and praying for the millennium, on the part of the people—some hundreds of thousands of them—keep up a dolorous cry about bankruptcy. So we have a few colleges and theological seminaries that are supposed to represent Christian convictions as to the importance of giving men a thorough training for the Master's service. But, this side the Alleghanies, there is hardly one in a single denomination that is not to-day a sort of starveling: its professors living on salaries that a second-rate book-keeper or mechanic would scorn; its book-shelves empty, its cabinet empty, its dormitories scant and cheerless; its whole career very like a beggar's struggle for crusts enough to keep body and soul together. And this, sometimes, with Christian men under their shadow, or within sound of their chapel-bells, who measure the prairie they own by the mile, and reckon their ten per cents on bonds and mortgages by the thousand.

Facing the facts, friends, our modern Christianity may well hide its head. In all that makes up largeness in conception and plan, in devotion to the end sought, and in surrenders, costs, and struggles to secure it, the men of the world are far beyond us. While we are groaning over our dime collections, to furnish home missionaries, or churches, or Bibles for a new territory, they pour out their capital like water, build a railroad into the heart of the domain, and are scattering infidel books and tracts on the wings of the wind, stocking mining-gulch and lumber-camp with cards and dice and whisky, and have a devil's harvest of skepticism and lust and crime ready for our coming. We get the fathers and brethren together, after cautious canvassings over the expediency of the thing; get out the statistics of the givings of the churches, and debate whether it be feasible to plant the gospel banner in another heathen empire. Meantime they of the world see a line of steamships plying to its ports; and, before the first Bible starts, have whole shiploads of idols—manufactured, perhaps, under the eaves of our sanctuaries—on the ground, and have their fortunes half-made out of coolies and opium.

I tell you, brethren, we must plan and do larger things, must get more nearly abreast of the world in its march, or all our repeating of the Lord's Prayer will not signify. I know that selfishness is a mighty motive. But surely it is not for us to allow that it is a mightier force of inspiration and achievement than the love of Christ. No! Standing under the cross of Calvary, wedding to our lips the prayer taught us of Him who hangs thereon, and that takes all the world into its sweep, consecrated by the very blood that drips on us, in gifts, possessions, and possibilities to the end he sought, and with destinies of souls hanging on the measure of our plan and our devotion, it is not for us to yield to men of the world the palm of leadership. It is ours, instead, to demonstrate mastery. When the love of Christ truly inflames us, and his thought and life shape, as they ought, our thoughts and lives, we shall. And, as compared with what we plan and do, the world's projects and endeavors will be as the plans and doings of Alexander and Cæsar and Napoleon to those of Christ.

But I note, further, that the men of this world are wiser than the children of light as respects the management and use of capital. How to make little become much, and that at the fastest rate; how to stop leaks and wastes; how to invest to most advantage; how, in short, to turn and multiply capital, is the great study everywhere. And men have pretty nearly reduced the matter to an exact science. They can figure up, almost to a farthing, the probabilities of profit in any of a dozen different lines of investment. Bank stock, railway stock, insurance stock, merchandise, coal, lumber, real-estate, all have their precise market value, as openings for making money. And every capitalist, every business man of any considerable means or ambition, has his own clearly-defined policy and method of business, running through every thing, from purchases or sales down to advertisements and postage. And he works it with the utmost vigilance, with his eye upon every part and every movement, to make sure that nothing miscarries, that no opportunity is lost. And to make surer of this, prices-current lie on his table, and are renewed every day; confidential directories, interest-tables, bank-returns, real-estate plats fill his drawers; and, not unlikely, a nest of clock-work hangs against the wall, to tell off hourly or half-hourly how stocks go in New-York, or the markets rule in Liverpool. And by such exhaustively wise management, and the zeal that is yoked to it, success comes, and comes often on a grand scale.

But how little of this in things spiritual! Take the whole round of church expenditures: the building of houses of worship, and the paying for them and keeping of them in repair; the securing of ministers, and the paying of their salaries; the payment of church debts; and, over all, the development of the benevolences and activities of church members, and what is more notorious than the utter lack of any thing like the wisdom or sagacity or good sense with which men of the world manage their business? We read the parables of the pound and talents and of the sower, and have no lack of exhortations for each other to bring forth thirty, sixty, an hundred fold. But to actually grapple the problem in a business way, and bring to its solution the same intenseness of thought and clearness of penetration and force of judgment that we do to the management of a farm or an insurance company or a bank, and thus work up and compel a rich harvest, is how seldom done.

Not to speak of the so-prevalent unwisdom among Christian people, of locking up capital in wills for ten, twenty, or more years, so that the beggars pinched for all that time on crusts may have a great feast in the end—provided they do not starve to death meanwhile—not to speak of this, compare, for example, the way in which our chief enterprises are carried on with the way in which men manage theirs. They find, often, that the cost of doing business on a small scale is proportionately larger than it would be if the business were increased. A man can farm a hundred acres relatively cheaper than he can fifty. A competent superintendent can as well and as cheaply look after a hundred employees as fifty. A trifle more coal or wood under the boiler will drive double the number of looms. It is cheaper to buy in New-York or Boston $100,000 worth of goods than $20,000. Not only are the traveling expenses less in one trip than in five, but special discounts and freight-rates can be had which it is a great object to secure. And, because of such facts, men are constantly buying more land, building new factories, and advertising for partners who can put in capital enough to realize the success which is plainly within their reach. And this is often the truest economy.

But how little of such a policy on the side of those charged with urging on the kingdom! Where is the publishing society that could not issue twice or thrice its present amount of books and tracts, with a very slight comparative increase of expenses, and with a very decided reduction in the cost of the individual volumes or pages? And where is a disbursing agency of Christian givings that could not handle quadruple the moneys it now receives without enough additional cost to be worth taking into account? The truth is, as to not a few of these organizations, that the expense of their administration, compared to the amounts they receive, is so great as to raise serious doubts among their best friends whether they ought not to be either consolidated or given up. No business enterprise, certainly, would dare to make their exhibits and then go before the community soliciting investments.

But the policy seen here appears generally in the conduct of Christian schemes. There is hardly a college or a theological seminary in the land—certainly not in the West—that could not educate double or treble the number of students it now has with the equipments already possessed; and do it, too, at cheaper rates, not to say with increased efficiency. It would take no more professors, cost no more expenditure of brain-power, to graduate fifty ministers of the Gospel every year at Oberlin and Chicago than to graduate ten.

And our Home Missionary Society, with its present board of secretaries and other subordinate officers, could as well occupy every available point in all this mighty West, and stock these new States and Territories with gospel workers, as to send a missionary here, another there, a hundred miles away, and wait till it gets more means to fill up the gaps.

So the American Board would not have to add a single employee, further than a clerk or two, to its working-force, to send out ten missionaries for every one that goes, and to occupy fifty or a hundred new fields for every one now taken up. Indeed, when Bibles and missionaries go as by the cargo, and we get far enough toward the millennium to plant colleges and theological seminaries on heathen soil oftener than once in a century, we shall find the costs relatively coming down instead of going up.

To go a step further in this showing: In every business there come times and seasons when it is felt that special energy must be exercised, special efforts made. There are golden opportunities when new fields of traffic or speculation open, and new demands are hence raised, new necessities developed. And men say, "It is now or never. If I can only get the start, get my goods into the market, I can distance all competition. Or, if I can raise the money for this investment, make this purchase, my fortune is made."

Sometimes the matter shapes itself thus: "If I do not make a bold push now, increase my capital, get through this pinch, it is all up, and what I have risked is gone, to the last dollar." And, acting on such foresights, men pour out their money like water; and when they have not got it, resort to every conceivable expedient to borrow it; and pay, often, their two, three, even five per cent a month, and, not unlikely, a snug bonus besides. And, in many cases, a grand success demonstrates the wisdom of the reasoning.

But how slow we are to use such a philosophy in spiritual things! It takes five years, at least, of careful scrutiny to settle it whether a Christian college, proposed in the heart of a great State filling fast with infidels and free-thinkers and papists, is a wise undertaking. And it takes ten years more to so persuade Christian people of its usefulness that they will give it crumbs enough from their tables to insure its life. And when one of the great societies sees a new opening, and wants fifty or a hundred thousand dollars more than usual to improve it, a good many more disciples have grave doubts than rejoice, and begin to draw their purses. We have, it is true, within a few years, built a fleet of two Morning Stars to make use of our missionary opportunities among the South-Pacific islands. And, not impossibly, the child is born who will see three quarters of a million of dollars expended yearly, by the American Board, toward the conversion of nearly a thousand millions of pagans and rejecters of the true Gospel. But money poured out to make the most of gospel openings, as it is to buy shares in diamond fields, or stocks on Wall street—Christian men borrowing it, in order to let no opportunity slip—who has faith enough to look for such things?

Yet, to some such devotion in Christ's behalf does the text-thought hold us. Phrase it as we may, the prime question of our stewardship must always be, in substance, How shall we make the most of our capital? How plan and give and pray and labor as to realize the largest possible results? Any adequate answer, whatever else it may involve, must emphasize indispensable conditions: the use of the same forethought and enthusiasm, the same quickness to see opportunities, and the same energy in turning them to account, by which the wisdom of the world is stamped and its successes achieved.

If any object that this is miscalculating the forces of the kingdom, making too much of the human factors and too little of the divine in gospel work, I answer that both the Master and the Word are responsible for such a putting of the case. Men of the world, with their wisdom singly, are not to surpass us with God's added to our own. The one pound becomes ten, not by God's use of it, but by ours. He gives the increase, but Paul must plant and Apollos water, and they must do the best that lies in them. God gives no hundredfolds where the plow stops in the furrow, or is left of the husbandman to run after its own fashion. Noah's ark, though God is to sail it, must be carefully "pitched within and without." Neither Noah nor his carpenters must so magnify God as to slight their work, and leave uncaulked seams in the roof or below the water-line. And, though God fights for his people, Moses and Joshua must use their utmost skill to set the battle in array; and the warriors must bring to the conflict all their strength and courage, and keep up the struggle, sometimes, till day passes into night, before the victory comes. God neither pledges nor gives any triumphs to blunders, any successes to negligence. His children must think and love and do with all their might, in order to his largest acceptance and use of them and their service. They are to be as wise as serpents, as well as harmless as doves.

Passing now from the argument, I desire to make special application of it to the work of this Association. I wish to press this single point, that, judged by the standards of a worldly wisdom, the present is preëminently the golden hour of opportunity for the prosecution of the work; and that hence there are the most convincing reasons why this Association should be at once so endowed with resources as to be able, in the next twelve months, to double and even quadruple the agencies it employs.

There are times in Christian warfare when what is needed above all else is a battle-cry rung in our ears like that famous telegram from Grant to Sheridan—"Push things!" And we want it here and now, alike because of the victory within reach, and the defeat or loss else sure to follow.

The first reason which I give for the enlargement of the Society's work is furnished by the needs and opportunities of its Indian department. Probably others have not shared my lack of acquaintance with the facts pertaining to this field, and my consequent lack of interest in what has been attempted therein. I confess that the Indian work had, until recently, seemed to me comparatively insignificant, and had pretty nearly dropped out of thought in connection with the Association. I knew the government had signified its desire to inaugurate a new Indian policy—had nominally turned over to various religious bodies the appointment of the Indian agents and their subordinates. But I had little faith in the carrying out of the scheme. The Indian Bureau had been so long and so notoriously the worst kind of a political ring, and the amount of patronage connected with it was so vast, and the whole management, while it was so rotten, was so mixed up with party interests, that it did not seem possible that the government would dare attempt a radical reform. The new policy looked, hence, more like a sop thrown to the lovers of humanity and religion, to stop their outcries, than any thing else; a flourish of trumpets to quiet their apprehensions, while the old work of plunder went on. It would not have surprised me at any time to read that this Association and its co-working agencies had withdrawn their missionaries and abandoned the field.

But, instead of that, the government has kept full faith with its pledges. The ax has gone to the root of the tree, and the policy of reform has been begun in earnest. The denominations charged with the work have had every facility offered them, their suggestions have been promptly followed up, and now the way is clear, as it has never been before, to attempt the evangelization of the Indian. And this is why I urge the equipping of the Association to do a greatly enlarged work.

I have said that, for the first time, the Indian field is fairly open to the Gospel. I do not mean by this that the government ever opposed the sending of missionaries among the Indians; it never has. Nor that it ever put restrictions on the establishment of schools or churches, or the selling or giving away of Bibles, or the doing of any kind of religious work; not at all. But I mean this: that, while the door was open to Christian effort, the government employed such a policy, and such agents, as not only neutralized the whole missionary work, but almost everywhere brought it into positive contempt, planted the worst obstacles in the way of its success, and, in manifold instances, led to the brutal murder of the missionaries themselves.

No man who knows any thing of the constitution of the old Indian Bureau, and the history of its administration, needs to be told what a gigantic system of greed, lying, robbery, lust, crime, and every other abominable thing it became in the hands of the demagogues. It was one huge scheme of plundering the government on one hand, and the Indian on the other. What did it signify to the Indian to have a pale-face preach to him one day about honesty and truthfulness and loving his neighbors, and, on the next, to have another lie to him by the hour, and cheat him out of half or two thirds the value of his furs? What did it avail toward Christianizing this child of nature to hear the missionary urge the duty of being virtuous, and then have to do with an agent or a trader living in shameless adultery, and, not unlikely, with the Indian's own wife? to be called on, on the one hand, to put away angry passions and bury the tomahawk, and to have, on the other, a representative of the same Christianity madden him with fire-water, strip off his blankets for pay, and, when his means and his wits were alike gone, kick him out of doors like a dog, or lock him up in a guard-house, with a bayonet, backed by a bullet, to keep him quiet?

Ah! friends, little wonder that, after being deceived and cheated and wronged and infuriated, by a deliberate villany that no language can overdraw, the Indian became a convert to the gospel of the agent and the trader, rather than that of the missionary; to that which he saw practiced, rather than that he heard preached. And little wonder that, when with torch and scalping-knife he set himself about revenge, he was blinded to any difference among the pale-faces through whom the curses came. The result was that, after years of wars and patched-up treaties and fresh outbreaks and barbarities, Christianity was virtually banished from the Indian territory; and the whole Indian problem was fast coming to be a mere question of the time it would take to exterminate the tribes. But, with a spirit and a determination that did him credit, second to nothing in his administration, President Grant took the matter into his own hands, broke up the ring, and opened the door to a new and better era for the red-men on our frontiers.

The point of significance now is, that the whole Indian question is practically committed to Christian hands. For example, this Association has in charge some twelve or fifteen thousand Indians, mainly in Wisconsin and Minnesota. With respect to these, it has the selection of all the agents, the appointment of the government farmers, blacksmiths, carpenters, physicians, and teachers. All the dealings of the government with the tribes are thus carried on through the medium of the Association. And the same thing is true of the Indians on other reservations, and of the denominations having them in charge.

It is easy to see what a vast improvement this is over the old system; and it needs no prophet to read the signs of the times, and to make clear that the policy of the past four years is to be that for the four to come; that on next fourth of March there will be in the chair of the vice-president a Christian patriot and statesman, who is a vice-president of this Association, as well as of the United States; assured, I repeat, of all this, we may safely declare all these outrages and shams done away, never to return.

And, best of all, now the Gospel may do its work unhindered, and with all the helps it desires to urge on its efforts. With agents everywhere in full sympathy with its spirit, and many of them zealous Christian men; with Christian clerks, farmers, artisans, employees of every grade to make common cause of truth, honesty, benevolence with missionaries and missionary teachers, the work of evangelization can not fail of making a progress hitherto impossible.

Already the proofs are ample that the work is begun. It stands proved that the Indian will work. Not, to be sure, where a white man would starve; not among sand-hills, or swamps, or mountain-crags, or on alkali plains that would frighten the growth out of white beans. Put an Illinois or even a New-England farmer in such condition as some of the Indians have had to face on their reservations, promise him an annuity of $20 or $30 a year, and then tell him out of that and the proceeds of his farming to build his house, buy his mules or oxen, and stock his farm and educate his family, and he would strike for Mormondom, or the gold-mines, in less than twenty-four hours, out of sheer despair.

It is idle to expect progress among Indians without all possible helps. You can not work civilization or Gospel into a red-man, nor into his family, while he and they live in a bark-hut or a teepee. Such a place is a citadel of barbarism. And while the man and his family stay there, and sleep huddled together on rabbit-skins steeped in filth and alive with vermin, and eat raw fish-entrails upon occasion, as I have seen them, the barbarism will pull down harder than the Gospel will lift up. But unanchor the man, and give him a start upward; give him something worth calling a home, and a few of its appliances; give him a patch of land with the possibilities of harvest in it; give him an ax and a plow; help him to a yoke of oxen, or a pair of mules; and then let there be a government farmer and a blacksmith and other helpers to advise and cheer and superintend his work, and in and through all let the true gospel spirit show itself as the grand, inspiring, uplifting power, and there is no more question as to what can be done with an Indian, than with a Chinaman or a Sandwich Islander. Of course, the work will not be done in a day nor a year. The reaper does not follow the plow the same day the sod is ripped up and the seed put in. Even our Anglo-Saxon blood made a long, hard fight before it accepted Christianity. These tribes are savages and pagans. There will be outbreaks, troubles, great need of patience, courage, faith. But we find such foes, such needs in New-York and Chicago. The same devil and the same Christ meet the world over, through all the ages; but the Christ now and always is sure to conquer.

These people want schools, are ready now to make sacrifices to obtain them. They are ready to welcome the missionary; and now that they have found out what genuine friends of their race they are, they desire their coming more and more. No such golden hour has ever offered. The doors are all wide open, and for the next four years, at least, the Gospel can have unlimited access to all the tribes. By every consideration, therefore, of humanity and of civilization; by the interests of the borders, subject still to these fearful scourges of fire and murder; by the steady decline and sure extinction of these peoples without Christianity; over all, by the movement of that Gospel which unto the end of the earth is the wisdom and the power of God, are we called to use our opportunity, and seek the salvation of the Indian. We may not get this generation: possibly their hands are too red and their spirits too wild. But we may get the next. And thenceforth, past debate, the hunting-grounds would wave with corn and wheat; school-houses and churches dot the landscapes everywhere; Sabbath bells chime the Gospel of peace from one end of the reservations to the other, and the red-man be as intelligent and upright and thrifty and peaceful a citizen as the Celt, or the Swede, or the German. And surely, if, as Wendell Phillips affirms, it costs a million of dollars to shoot an Indian, it will be good economy to make trial for a few years of Bibles instead of bayonets to see what can be done for this civilization.

Of one thing let us be certain. If we fail to use this Association and its kindred organizations in the way now open, the Indian's fate is sealed past hope. The politicians will not leave us in the possession of this coveted prize, unless we demonstrate our right to hold it by the work we do and the results we show. They have tried hard to get the control again, and set up the old policy. And if, by any failure on our part to be equal to the emergency, they should succeed, troubles, hate, war, extinction are inevitable. And the blood of nearly half a million of red-men will be required at our hands.

The second reason which I give for urging now the work of this Association with enlarged scope and added resources, comes from the condition of things among the Freedmen. In whatever way viewed, this is an hour of the most critical importance as respects the future character and destiny of the colored people. They will not always continue to be as docile and impressible and tractable as now. They are but just out of bondage, not past the amusement and joy of finding the lash gone, the shackles struck off, and they their own masters. They are as yet overflowingly grateful, recognize us of the North as their deliverers, give us their supremest confidence, and are eager to have us become their teachers and counselors in their new estate of freedom. We can hence do almost any thing with them that we wish. They are eager, likewise, to learn; and ten thousand schools opened among them to-morrow would be thronged.

But these possibilities, if unused, will not be always within our reach. The very drift of this people's ignorance and superstition, and of the depraving influences constantly at work among them, will, if unchecked, soon carry them beyond our control. Those who know them best tell us that the perils to which they are exposed, from their low standard of morals, are fearful. And it could not well be otherwise. Living always in contact with a so-called Christianity that recognized among them no marriage bonds, no sanctity of home, no principles of truth and honor; and that paid for its Bibles and its preaching by the sweat and blood of those on whose necks it riveted the yokes which Christ came to break—what wonder that, after two hundred years of such tuition, these freedmen showed themselves no better Christians than their masters? And there is where we must take them, and bring speedy helps to bear, or they are lost.

Naturally enough, drunkenness is no vice, no disqualification for church standing: it never was with their owners. And so Professor Langston says, in his official report upon their condition, that it everywhere prevails, and is largely due to the example of the colored preachers. And he states that at one meeting he "counted no less than twelve colored ministers very drunk."

So licentiousness is common. Many of the marriage compacts are dissolved by the simple consent of the parties, and not a few of the people's houses are hardly better than brothels. And, of course, with such vices, idleness, falsehood, theft abound, and the whole category of things sensual and devilish is filled out. And one reason for this lies in the utter lack of any Scripture teaching that is worthy of the name. As has been intimated, the colored preachers are quite as ignorant and quite as depraved as the people. Nothing could hence be expected of their influence, except to make matters worse. When men exhort their fellows through texts taken from the "book of Lot," they will naturally have hearers who will pray that they may be made "like unto de roarin' lion goin' about and seekin' whom he may devour." The religion that comes of such teaching and praying will be little better than downright heathenism.

All this is, of course, helped on by the hatred of the negro still existing in the South—especially among the poor whites—and by the political demagogues who seek to control the colored vote, and scruple at nothing to secure their ends. The one class, holding still that the black man was made to be a slave, and has no business to try to be any thing else, is unwilling to see him rise, and puts all possible hinderances in his way; the other, eager only for votes, cajoles the freedmen, buys them with bribes, and panders to their passions and lusts, and, when it can not so succeed, plays upon their fears to keep them from the polls, provides free barbecues and whisky to entice them away, and, in desperate pinches, uses all knavery, and does not hesitate to call Ku-klux gangs to its aid. The great struggle in the Southern States, ever since the war, has been, over all else, a struggle to see which of the two parties should have the colored vote. And there is nothing under the sun in the shape of flattery, lying, trickery, coercion, villainy, that has not been used in the contest, neither party being guiltless.

The result is a state of demoralization fearful to contemplate, and such as, if we do not mightily push the work which this Association has in hand, will land the freed people in a state worse than that before the war. One such political canvass as this now closing puts the work back, I venture to say, fully five years.

Then, added to this is the certainty that if we do not use our opportunity, and use it with all diligence, the freed people will largely become Roman Catholics. The papacy sees a grand opportunity, whether we do or not, and is doing with its might to draw this people into its fold. As long ago as 1866, the Propaganda voted $600,000 in gold to carry the work on for that single year, and sent across the ocean sixty-six priests to inaugurate the mission. Since that time Roman Catholic emissaries and laborers, specially trained for this work, have been constantly coming into the country, and their number has been steadily renewed by missionaries raised up in the Romish Church in our own land.

The danger is a grave one, and appeals with force to every Christian. In the nature of the case, the Papal Church with its pictures and dresses and music and gaudy trappings and showy ceremonies must have peculiar attractions for a people so fond of display, so ruled through the senses, so superstitious as the colored race. And facts show that these endeavors of the Papists bear fruit. Nine tenths of the colored children in the schools of New-Orleans to-day are the children of professed Roman Catholics. Their tracts and publications are everywhere to be met with in the South, and they claim to have a hundred colored lads now in training for this Southern mission at the headquarters of the Propaganda.

Depend upon it, friends, we shall need to be in earnest if we save these people to a pure Christianity. Their sympathies are with us now, and we can mould them as we will. They have no inborn affiliations with Rome. They know—some of them, at least—that the Pope was the first foreign potentate to express sympathy with the Confederacy, and that he gave its President his apostolic benediction. They have not forgotten the bloody days of July, 1863, when, in the city of New-York, Irish papists fired the asylums of the colored people, and with a fiendish delight murdered in their tracks, or hung to the nearest lamp-post, every colored man or woman upon whom they could lay their hands.

The freedmen may be credulous, may be simple, but they know their friends, and trust them to the last. We of the Northern churches, the representatives of this Gospel of Jesus and of freedom, still hold the first place in their esteem, and still have it within our power to anchor them in the true faith. But we must do it while the hour serves; we must do it now or never.

And the relation of the freedmen to this whole problem of reconstruction, with which the government is so vexed, gives great emphasis to this plea for enlarging now the work of the Association. Say what the politicians may, it is not a question to be settled by legislation nor by arms. I do not doubt that hatred of Northern ideas and institutions, bitter animosities toward the government, rankle in many a Southern heart. Witness speeches of Jefferson Davis within the year, and witness the proposition made on the floor of Congress, by a Southern member, to dig up the bones of our heroic dead sleeping on Arlington Heights, and bury them elsewhere, that the widow of General Lee might not be offended by the sight of their graves on her return to her former home! There are live coals enough left of the old rebellion to kindle up a new war any day, if it could be shown to be of any avail in behalf of the lost cause.

So I do not doubt the utterly unprincipled character of many of the carpet-baggers. But the cure of the trouble does not lie in getting rid of Ku-klux clans and carpet-bagger renegades, nor in posting a squad of soldiers at every man's door to enfore order and protect life, nor in proclaiming general amnesty. Harmony can only come when the two races out of whose antagonism the conflict grew come to have a mutual respect for each other. The colored man must demonstrate by his intelligence, his character, his achievements, that he is competent to take care of himself, and capable of being a white man's equal. More; he must demonstrate by what he is and what he does that the interests of the two races are identical; that, as a matter of fact, as respects muscle, brain, government, religion, every thing, his old master can not spare him out of the social compact. The real Southron, of course, never believed in any such capacity, any such worth, and he does not believe it to-day, and never will till it is proved before his eyes. And hence it is that he fumes so over negro emancipation and negro suffrage. But he can be convinced. And one such demonstration as that given by the school at Atlanta to Governor Brown and his associates in June, 1871, will do more to help on the real work of reconstruction than a dozen army corps distributed through the South, or a whole winter's legislation of Congress. The report of this afternoon well said, "You can not pin hostile peoples together by bayonets." And as little can you tie them together by resolves and enactments. But give the freedmen schools and a pure gospel, educate, train, discipline them, as this Association is doing, in the qualifications and functions of citizenship, and no people will sooner recognize their real quality and their real value than their old masters. Give this Association all the means of pressing its work which it can use to advantage, and in five years such a footing of mutual respect and good-will would be established as would guarantee the complete restoration of peace and prosperity to the South, and would settle the republic on foundations that could never be moved.

The importance of pressing now this educational and Christianizing work appears still more from the possible relations of the freed people to great national questions which are yet to come up and be passed upon. I am no alarmist. I do not lie awake nights burdened with fears, conjuring up prophecies of disaster to the republic. But I confess to convictions that the day is not far off when we shall have sides to take and battles to fight on whose issues will turn the weal of the nation. These incoming millions of Irish and Germans and Swedes and French and what not else, to say nothing of the millions of pagans swarming to our western shores, have a meaning. They bring ideas, preferences, culture, habits, religions, which, consciously or unconsciously on their part, must necessitate great discussions, must issue in great conclusions. Knowing, many of them, no Sabbath, or one every way hostile to ours; knowing no Bible, no moral restraints as connected with government; red-republicans or communists not a few; infidels, pantheists, rationalists, skeptics, papists, more—the problem of their assimilation with us, and of the purity and safety of our institutions, assumes a significance which it is hard to overrate.

As I have said, the battle-cry has already begun to sound; and when the conflict comes, if I do not greatly mistake, the voice of these freed people will bear a significant part. If they should join the papists or communists or infidels, farewell to the republic. The day that witnessed that compact would see the Mene Tekel written on its walls, and its glory forever departed.

It lies with us to determine whether they shall so decide. This Association is doing among these freed people a distinctively Christian work, and proposes to do no other. Its schools are all Christian schools. It knows absolutely nothing of education which does not magnify the Bible and keep it foremost. And this is exactly what the colored people want. So far are they from having scruples about the right of the Bible to a place in the public school, that they would hardly tolerate a school without it. Their liberty, as they view it, is Bible liberty, their hopes Bible hopes. They pray as they study, and they study as they pray; and from child to grandsire they covet knowledge above all else, that they may be able to spell out for themselves the blessed tidings of salvation which this book of God was given to reveal.

If, now, we can provide Christian schools for all this people, and Gospel as well, how sure and glorious the results! Give us a decade only of such tuition and of such power, and let the battle of rationalism and infidelity and papacy come. With five or six, possibly eight, millions of such a people, loyal to freedom to the core, loyal to Christianity in every drop of blood, to stand by us, we can face all the hordes the devil can bring into the field, and be certain of victory.

The power for good as to the future of our country which we shall secure if we make the colored people our gospel allies goes further than this. Our peril lies, as has been said, in our possible unfaithfulness to the principles of a pure Christianity, and it is far from being wholly or chiefly due to the ideas which come in from abroad. For the last twenty-five years, the drift of our politicians toward demoralization, irreligion, infidelity, has been undeniable; and, as a result, there never was a time in the history of the republic when judges were so bribed and public journals so prostituted and the popular conscience so debauched as is the fact to-day. Witness this campaign—now, thank Heaven! almost at its close; a campaign so utterly disregardful of truth and decency, so malignant in its personalities, so vituperative and libelous and shameless in its assaults, that it makes one blush to own himself an American citizen. We must have a purer patriotism, a more Christian citizenship, or our experiment of self-government will shipwreck itself by its own rottenness. And, little as we think it, the freed people offer us a mighty moral reënforcement. I give you a single illustration. On the night before the municipal election in the city of Washington, in the spring of 1871, the colored voters went to their places of worship. All night long they prayed, and with the first gray glimmerings of the dawn they went to the polls, and stood for hours in the drizzling rain, waiting in long lines for the time to deposit their ballots. It is no figure of speech to say that every ballot went in with a prayer. I agree with Senator Patterson that Cromwell's Ironsides kneeling before the battle, and then rushing into the thickest of the fight, offered no sublimer spectacle than these freedmen giving the night to prayer and the first hour of the day to freedom. For these men were fighting a battle, not against a single king and a petty despotism of oppressions measured by his reign, but a battle against the wrongs and tyrannies and shames of hoary centuries—the grand battle of truth and justice and humanity, and with the destinies of their race hanging on the issue.

We have been wont to say that when bayonets think, they are irresistible. But when ballots pray, there will be no work left for bayonets. And, friends, this is what we need—a republicanism that wins its victories on its knees. When, as a people, we pray before we vote, and vote as we pray and for what we pray, our liberties will be guarded of God and will abide. And the question of the hour is, whether we will furnish the Bibles and the schools to these freed people, that they may help us make sure of such a future.

The argument has a wider scope. A vast continent lies in the gloom of an almost unbroken night and lifts its cry for help. Who shall answer it? Apparently the white race can not, in any considerable measure. English and American missionaries have sought earnestly to set up the kingdom there, but, apart from a single field in the extreme south, have done little more than strew the coast with their graves. The malaria circles the immense plateaus—swarming with millions of cannibals and heathen of every stamp—as with a wall of death. But the colored man can brave the perils and be safe. And it is a striking fact that, as the freed people come under the power of the Gospel, they seem to have an instinctive longing to carry the blessed tidings to their fatherland. It is as if God had purposely held back the work of evangelizing Africa, that her own children might be the apostles of her redemption.

And, friends, is there not a cry for restitution which we ought to heed? Having wronged the negro by two hundred years of unrequited toil and cruelty, do we owe him nothing now? Having cursed Africa by the contact of our civilization, cursed her by the robberies which the misnamed Christianity of half our land once justified and practiced, has she no just claims for recompense?

Surely, with the gyves and the whipping-post and the horrors of the middle passage fresh in our memories, and the retributions of a judgment to come clear in our faith—surely we can not do less than give the Gospel of freedom to the children of those we kidnapped, and bid them God-speed as, crossing the seas in the very tracks of the slave-ships, they bear to their countrymen the messages of peace and hope and joy.

And God's providence seems not only to make our responsibility plain, but to hold out the promise of double harvest to all our givings and our prayers. Saving the thousands here, we shall save the millions there; and thus, even in our own day, the desert may come to bud and blossom as the rose, and Ethiopia stretch out her hands unto God.

Something such, as I see it, is the opportunity of the hour. If we seize and use it, as the world would, we shall not be content with fifty or a hundred schools a year, and a half-million of dollars. No! A thousand schools and a million and a half of money are the least we ought to think of. We have been long enough put to shame by every cotton-factory and iron-mill of the land. Let us begin to plan as befits the things of the kingdom. And let us make our faith and our progress commensurate with our plans, and trust God's pledge for the issue.

As closely related to this, it seeks to benefit the caste-persecuted CHINESE in America, and to co-operate with the Government in its humane and Christian policy towards the INDIANS. It has also missions in AFRICA.

ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

THE TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING of the AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION was held at Newark, N. J., in the First Congregational Church, commencing Wednesday, November 5th, at three o'clock P.M.

The President of the Association, Rev. E. N. Kirk, D.D., of Boston, Mass., took the chair.

The Scriptures were read by Rev. Dr. Brinsmade, from the 62d chapter of Isaiah.

Prayer was offered by Rev. N. E. Smith, D.D.

An address by the President, Rev. Dr. Kirk, was read by Rev. C. L. Woodworth, District Secretary for New-England, as follows:

BELOVED BRETHREN: I congratulate you on the signs of the times. God be praised for

I. The wonderful upward tendency of the African race in our land. When the spelling-book was first put into the hands of this people, their reception of it awakened contrasted emotions in the white race. The wonderful eagerness of old and young to learn the art of reading was regarded by one class as "merely another proof of unchangeable childishness. A book was a toy they never could own before; and now they wished to grasp it, and play with it, and be like the white race. But the novelty would soon pass away, and all would perceive that the Creator had never designed the black pigment to cover a cultivated mind. They are, and ever must be, a lazy, unaspiring people. Our beneficent Creator had designed them for unrequited toil and merely physical development. Their present eagerness to read has no other origin than superficial curiosity and a desire to read for themselves the mysterious book."

Probably this might be called the conviction of half our neighbors North and South. With a cynical and skeptical eye they saw this zeal for books and papers.

But another class of us saw the whole matter in another light. We reverence the soul made in the image of our Creator. We regarded color and other physical peculiarities as in no way excluding this race from a full participation in the rights and privileges of humanity.

Some interpreted the war as merely changing the external relations of this inferior race. We saw in it the hand of God revealing to us our spiritual relations to them, our solemn responsibilities and our new privileges produced by their external change. We interpreted this love of the spelling-book as a pulsation of the human heart. We recognized in it the badge of brotherhood, for we saw in them just the feelings we should have had in their circumstances. The soul, long imprisoned in the darkness of a dungeon, was struggling upward to greet the light just glimmering into that darkness. The cold tents around the Hampton Institute, the tearful eye and downcast visage of hundreds knocking in vain at the doors of the schools in Tougaloo, Atlanta, and Selma, are perfectly natural. They do not surprise us. We behold in these scenes the hand of Africa's God and America's God pointing to us the work that we are to do. It is our fathers' God interpreting to us a part of his mysterious design in our national history.

Brethren, it is an amazing spectacle: upward of 15,000 souls enrolled on our school-lists, eagerly awaiting our guidance into the great world of literature, to make them sharers of its glorious treasures!

What an appeal they make to our noblest sympathies! What an encouragement to us who hope to see that race emancipated from ignorance, as they have been from the chattel-state! What mission-field in the world inspires such hope? Where do the heathen so rush to the missionaries, supplicating admission to their schools?

Must not the good sense, the humane feeling, of our white brethren soon perceive that the negro is a man—a man entitled to all the rights and privileges of manhood? Will they not soon share our conviction that the well-being of our common country demands the expulsion of ignorance from every class of the land?

Yes, brethren, I see

II. A change rapidly advancing in the Southern States. Men of observation and reflection are accepting as facts: that the negro can be educated; that he ought to be educated; that our motive in sending teachers and books, in planting schools and colleges in their States, is purely Christian patriotism; that their local interests and our common interests are promoted by our action.

I congratulate you, above all, on the fact that,

III. The seal of the Holy Spirit rests on our labors and our laborers.

We devoutly acknowledge his presence and power in the numerous revivals of religion in our churches and schools during the past year. And we especially thank him that these blessed manifestations have conveyed to this neglected and misguided people new ideas of the mode of conducting revivals; and, especially, that physical excitement is not the end to be sought in them; that the essential element in them is a radical change of heart, manifested in a new life of conformity to the will of God.

Rev. M. E. Strieby, Secretary, read a letter from Vice-President Hon. Henry Wilson, regretting that his physician forbade his attendance at the meeting, and expressing his deep interest in the work of the Association.

Rev. H. M. Parsons, of Boston, was appointed to assist Dr. Kirk in presiding over the meetings.

The following were appointed a Committee on Nominations, namely:

Revs. R. G. Hutchins, C. L. Woodworth, Allen McLean, Morton Eddy, Esq., and General C. H. Howard.

The Report of the Treasurer for the fiscal year was then read by Rev. George Whipple, Secretary, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Rev. G. B. Boynton was appointed Scribe, and Rev. C. A. Harvey Assistant Scribe.

The Report of the Executive Committee was read by Rev. M. E. Strieby, Corresponding Secretary, and was referred to the appropriate committees.

Rev. R. G. Hutchins, from the Committee on Nominations, reported the following:

Committee of Arrangements.—Revs. W. B. Brown, G. B. Boynton, G. B. Willcox, George Brown, A. H. Bradford.

Business Committee.—Revs. George E. Adams, D.D., Charles Scott, and J. B. Beadle, Esq.

Rev. George Whipple, Corresponding Secretary, read the Report on Foreign Missions, and on the Indians, which was referred to the appropriate committees.

Evening Session.—The Association met at half-past seven o'clock P.M. After singing by the choir, Rev. D. K. Bartlett read the Scriptures from the 10th chapter of Luke, and offered prayer. The hymn was then sung, "When shall the voice of singing flow joyfully along?"

Rev. Dr. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New-York, preached from Luke 10: 37, "Go and do thou likewise." Dr. Taylor followed his discourse by prayer. The evening service concluded by singing the hymn, "Soon may the last glad song arise."

Report of Committee on the Chinese in America was made by Rev. William Pond, of San Francisco, and, after being supported by addresses from Rev. Messrs. Pond and Kimball, of California, Major D. H. Whittle, of Chicago, and Rev. H. M. Parsons, was adopted as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CHINESE WORK.

Your Committee, to whom was referred so much of the Annual Report of the Executive Committee as relates to the Chinese in America, have not only reflected upon the brief paragraph thus submitted to them, but have examined the very interesting detailed report submitted to the Executive Committee by the District Secretary who has this portion of our work under his special charge, General C. H. Howard. They find that twelve teachers have been employed, seven of whom are still at work. The statistics of the attendance at the schools are not given, nor any full statement of results; but enough appears to make us count the language of the report too guarded, when, confessing the work to be small, it claims only that it be "kept up." We feel that it should be enlarged, should be viewed with a deeper interest, and prosecuted with increasing vigor. The souls already reached and saved are in themselves as precious as any other souls; and the number of hopeful conversions is, we suppose, as great already, in proportion to the work expended, as in any other department of our missionary work. But they must be viewed as the first fruits of harvests coming; they must be seen in the promise they give us for the future, in the possibilities which they open, in order to get at their full significance. What do they mean—what may they be made to mean—for China? What problem in the future of our own country may they also help to solve?
